Surely the Lord has given great opportunities for good to the W. C. T. U. of Asheville: Work for the imprisoned women of Asheville, the Lindley training school for fallen girls, and a large share in the W. C. T. U. Southern Assembly work. All these doors are now open, and may they have courage to press forward, relying on the precious promises of Him who hath said: "My strength is sufficient for thee."

By invitation of Rev. Thomas Lawrence, D. D., president, and Mrs. Lawrence, principal, I had the pleasure of spending a few days at the normal and collegiate institute for young women, located on a beautiful hill one mile from the center of the city. This school is under the auspices of the woman's executive committee in connection with the board of home missions of the Presbyterian church. On the same grounds is located the Home Industrial school under the masterly leadership of Miss Florence Stephenson. The value of this college to the South cannot be estimated. For one hundred dollars per year, including board and tuition, pupils can take a full collegiate course, thus bringing it within the reach of those with limited means; and scholarships have been secured through Dr. Lawrence and his most estimable wife for the daughters of some of our W. C. T. U. workers, in whom they saw promise of usefulness.

Here I found a most aggressive Y. W. C. T. U. of forty members, under the wise and efficient management of Miss Sally K. Stevens, secretary of our W. C. T. U. Southern Assembly. By invitation I had the pleasure of addressing a public meeting of the Y's on Saturday night. The chapel was filled. As I looked into these pure young faces, and thought of the influence they would wield for good all over this fair Southland, my heart went up to the Giver of all Good for a blessing on the women of the Home Mission Board, and especially for Dr. and Mrs. Lawrence, and the corps of teachers whose lives are being spent for the Master and the elevation of women.

We have decided not to hold our Assembly this summer because of the hard times, but to have a day or two session at our state convention.

We are all delighted to know that Miss Willard is so much improved, and is at home again. I trust the great love we all have for her will restrain us from making demands upon her strength until the warm weather is over.

Yours for victory,
MRS. A. A. W. CADWALLADER.

HER CORONAL.

BY DWIGHT WILLIAMS.

Ye Lords, and do ye fear love militant?
Go build for woman thronés beside your own,
In God's great plan ye twain are only one;
Will she who loves you best be arrogant,
Or crowd you in your thrones of adamant?
To win her love ye use all sweet arts known,
Why leave her feet upon the pavement stone
As if she sought your honors to supplant?
Ye dare not say that she is weak, she copes
With you in all the questions of your doubt,
With alpenstock she climbs the highest slopes,
And sounds the globe to find its secrets out;
Still patient, while the world defers her hopes;
But when she wins, ye Lords will loudest shout.

FULLNESS OF JOY.

She thought with mingled smiles and tears of her plans for this bit of earth that fate had brought under her hand; she pledged herself to every man, woman and child in it so to live her life that each of theirs should be the richer for it; she set out, so far as in her lay, to choose equality! And beyond Mellor, in the great changing world of social speculation and endeavor, she prayed always for the open mind, the listening heart.—Mrs. Ward's "Marcella."

The "open mind, the listening heart"—it is these that serve the true interests of life. It is in holding this condition alone that one is enabled to enter into the true service of humanity.

There is much said of the present "unrest" of humanity; but the continual stress and strain is not so much unrest, nor even restlessness, as it is an intenser form of activity. Unrest and restlessness are negative states and are worse than unproductive. They are deteriorating. But activity, the reaching out after new things, is positive, and leads to something. Yet a vast amount of this activity lacks what one may perhaps call the correction of culture. It lacks the adjustment of values, the poise and the judgment that comes from a larger view, a more liberal comprehension. Many of those who are engaged in the special study of spiritual laws . . . and of developing a new creative force to apply to affairs, keep themselves too much within this atmosphere.

Such a course tends to the formation of a cult that may, and no doubt does, accomplish much in special study and research, but which excludes the average public from participating in a current of very interesting and important activities. This would be all very well were the study its own end. The chemist, the electrician, the astronomer, must pursue his way, for the most part in solitude, or companioned only by those who accompany him in his pursuit. But with any line of study whose end is the development and culture of the spiritual power of man it is removed to another plane. If the clergy declared the profound study of theology to be their one work and shut themselves away from all that part of the world which is not interested in theology, it is easy to see that the value of their lives would be but a fraction of what it is now.

Perhaps one of the most helpful features of this world work is to carry the message of the joyfulness of living. There is really no trouble in the world save that we make for ourselves by our own attitude of mind, or our failures, sins, negligences. One must not mistake the little losses or accidents or incidents that befall as troubles. They are nothing of the kind. They may be inconveniences, but one learns by them. If one loses his purse by having a hole in his pocket, the next time he will have sufficient thoughtfulness to see that there is no hole. Thereby he has gained in mental quality. One is educated through his very defects.

The message of the life lived on the higher plane is peacefulness and serenity and joy. The social problem of the day is to make people happier; to enable them to see that their troubles are purely of the material life, and that rising out of that they come into this region of spiritual serenity. Many persons fret themselves greatly over—not their own shortcomings, but those of their neighbors, real or imaginary, as may be. They are annoyed because they see courses of conduct which do not commend themselves to their judgment, and they are all the while in some entanglement of fret or worry because other persons do this, or don't do that. Surely nothing could be more idle. Each must, for the most part, live his own life, and until motives are visible and can be unerringly interpreted they should not be criticised adversely. Life should be held to a finer strain than one of fret or jar. "In Thy presence is fullness of joy; at Thy right hand there are pleasures forevermore."

And we may live in His presence here and now; and in just the proportion that we do so is there joy and happiness. To pledge one's self "to every man, woman and child, so to live that each of their lives should be the better for it"; to keep always "the open mind, the listening heart," and to realize that the true results of exalted aims are peace and harmony and joy—the "fullness of joy"—this is to gain the lesson which carries the thought as a practical working force into life.—Lilian Whiting in the Budget.

"FATHER MATHEW'S MISTAKE."

BY W. P. SMITH.

Rev. J. H. Gambrell's recent reference in THE UNION SIGNAL to "Father Mathew's Mistake" is suggestive and we should profit by it. Bishop Galloway truly says: "He let the supreme moment pass unimproved and Ireland again lapsed into whisky and crime." When we think of his wonderful work, how he was persuaded by that earnest Quaker, Wm. Martin, to sign the pledge and become president of a temperance society, and how he quickly influenced hundreds of thousands to be total abstainers, administering the pledge to 150,000 persons in the city of Cork, and to 100,000 in another city in two days—and it is said in total to 3,000,000 persons—reforming thousands of drunkards, lessening the consumption of spirits in three years more than one-half, almost depopulating the jails, we wonder how the masses can be so wrought upon and public opinion be so changed in a short time. But again we are surprised when we see how quickly people lapse back into their former habits, their zeal and enthusiasm and their good resolutions gone.

What has been our experience in this country? A few years prior to Father Mathew's work in Ireland, a similar reform had been originated in the United States by Dr. Jonathan Edwards and others. It was also on the line of moral suasion. Dr. Dorchester, in his "Liquor Problem in all Ages," speaking of the results of this reform says: "In the year 1835 more than 8,000 temperance societies had been formed with more than 1,500,000 members, every state except one being organized. More than 4,000 distilleries had been stopped and 8,000 merchants had ceased to sell ardent spirits. More than 1,200 vessels, in which it is not used, sail from our ports." Dr. Edwards, at the beginning of this total abstinence reform, had said: "Our main object is not to reform inebriates, but to induce all temperance people to continue temperate by practicing total abstinence; the drunkards, if not reformed, will die and the land be free."

Great good was accomplished even by this one-sided work. In their report to the American Temperance Union, the executive committee in 1839 says: "Continual progress has been made in almost every section of the country in the work of purification. Few families of character and respectability now offer to their guests the more virulent intoxicating drinks, and to a very wide extent, the use of the milder and comparatively harmless is now, at the dinner table or in the social circle, unknown, where but a short time ago they were viewed as indispensable to health or reputable standing. But few churches of an evangelical character have, for a considerable period, admitted those to their communion who manufacture, vend or habitually use spirituous liquors. On farms, in manufactories, in work-shops, in our merchant vessels, fishing crafts, whalers, in the army and in the churches of Christ, the demon has scarce a place to nestle."

Notwithstanding much was accomplished, there were many who realized that, like former efforts along the line of temperance work, which only had for its object to do away with the abuse, and not the moderate use, of strong drink, that the total abstinence plan alone was not enough. But immediately following this was that great wave known as the Washingtonian movement. It was especially for the reformation of drunkards. It is said in Ohio alone in a few months, in 1842, sixty thousand took the pledge, many of them being hopeless drunkards. Rev. Dr. Parker, before the New York Presbytery, said: "The great change that has been produced within the last few months in the reforming of poor, lost inebriates is a wonderful phenomenon. The church had passed them by as hopeless. God raised up reformers from among themselves, and now the multiplied and moving tales of woes and sins and recoveries of poor, lost drunkards, are telling with amazing power upon hearts that were accounted to be beyond the reach of the gospel." "It has been estimated," says Dr. Dorchester, "that there were reformed by the Washingtonian movement six hundred thousand drunkards in the United States, and that four hundred and fifty thousand of them fell back into their former drinking customs. Others estimate only three per cent were permanent."

Although none could oppose the reformation of drunkards, and as a small portion of them were permanently reformed, it was an acknowledged fact that another step was to be taken. It was apparent that something must be done to preserve the results gained; and for this purpose societies were formed under fraternal bonds, where the reformed could meet and gain strength by associating with others who extended sympathy and encouragement, and thus were the "Sons of Temperance" organized in 1842, which numbered in 1850 about one quarter of a million members. Other temperance societies were formed, also, for the benefit of the reformed and for dissemination of total abstinence principles, among which was the "Order of Good Templars" in 1851.

While the necessity of all this work along the line of moral suasion was conceded, there were many who had become convinced that to permanently succeed the dramshops must be outlawed, that "the convictions and enthusiasm of a people must be crystallized into statutory and constitutional law to perpetuate them." The question had been agitated throughout the country of the suppression of the liquor traffic. A bill passed the legislature of New York in 1845, submitting the question of "license or no-license" to a vote of the people, exempting New York City. The result was that more than five-sixths of the towns and cities gave majorities against license. Maine passed its first prohibitory law in 1846, but it was almost a dead letter on account of the lack of penalties. In 1851 Neal Dow obtained what has since been known as the "Maine Law." Similar laws were passed in Minnesota, Rhode Island, Vermont, Michigan, Connecticut, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, New Hampshire and Wisconsin. Pennsylvania lost it by a majority of only three thousand votes. New York also adopted the Maine law in 1855.

Why has law not proved a success in all these states? "Oh," we are told, "you can't enforce a law unless public sentiment supports it." But here was public sentiment strongly in its favor, and yet it was not enforced to any great extent except in Maine, and soon was in disrepute, and was repealed in most of the states. The cause is plain.

Those in authority did not want to enforce it. They were unfaithful to their trust. Prohibition sentiment was strong; public opinion as expressed at the ballot box was in favor of the law, and all that was needed were officials who were firm and true to their oaths. If that is not true, then popular government is a failure and the quicker we abandon it the better.

Why are there even two states to-day that have constitutional prohibition? Because when the law was enacted there were men in authority in high places who enforced it. Rev. John Marsh says in his "Temperance Recollections": "All eyes were at once turned upon Maine to see if she would execute her law (in 1851). Will the mayor of Portland stand firm at his post and do his duty, or will he shrink in fear of mobs and riots?" Almost at once he issued his proclamation declaring that he should promptly enforce the law, giving venders sixty days to ship their liquors out of the state. Two thousand dollars' worth was seized and openly destroyed, but no resistance was made. The people stood quietly by and witnessed the whole in respectful silence. Smaller cities followed, and throughout Maine, with some exceptions, prohibition was established." What was the secret of it? Neal Dow was mayor of Portland. How was it in that other state that has prohibition in its organic law—"Bleeding Kansas"? Rev. A. H. Richardson, of Lawrence, one year after the law went into effect, says: "In two-thirds if not three-fourths of the counties, there is no open violation of the law." St. John was governor and says: "It is safe to say that in sixty-five out of eighty-one organized counties, the law, as a rule, is as honestly obeyed and enforced as any other law prohibiting crime." Now if a few large cities in Kansas had only put men in for their mayors made of the same stuff as the mayor of Portland, could the law not have been enforced as well as other criminal laws in the whole state?

What does our past experience teach us? We are now in the seventh and last period of temperance work. 1. Agitation against the abuse only of strong drink. 2. Total abstinence from distilled liquors. 3. Total abstinence from all that can intoxicate and the reformation of the drunkard. 4. Organization of societies for preserving, strengthening and educating. 5. Local option. 6. Prohibition by states and moral suasion for the saloon-keeper. 7. Prohibition by politics, including all the other steps.

Those in authority must believe in prohibition and have the moral courage to enforce the law. Prohibitory law in many states has proved almost a failure because executive officers were elected on other issues, who were hostile to enforcement. The liquor problem is of greater magnitude and more importance to the American people than any other question, and while we must circulate pledges, educate the people, reform the drunkard, and enact prohibitory laws, we must also elect only those to occupy official positions who believe in and are committed to the enforcement of the laws prohibiting the saloon.

THE GUESSES OF THE CHILDREN.

Under my window the nesting birds
Swing and sing, while the children play.
Which is sweeter this summer day—
The wordless song or the song clear words?
Hark to the question overwise,
That Milicent ponders with half-shut eyes,
On her couch of clover, with dewdrops pearled—
"I wonder how did God make the world?"

"Listen," says Edith, "I'll tell you how
As I blow this bubble here in the sun—
Glowing and growing—and, when it was done,
He breathed on it softly, as I do now,
And it floated away so far and free,
Green for the land, blue for the sea;
And the soft white clouds about it curled—
It was so, I think, that God made the world."

"No!" cries Ned. "As I roll this clay,
Soft and brown in the palm of my hand,
Shaping the mountains like kings to stand
Crowned with their snow gems, marking a way
For the streams to run through valleys deep,
To the hollow sea, over plain and steep,
Flinging the forests like flags unfurled—
Ah! that were the way to make the world!"

But Milicent smiles to herself the while,
Softly shaking her golden head.
"Last night," she whispers, "awake on my bed,
I thought of the sweet-brier down by the stile;
And what do you think I found to-day?
But the first pink rose on a bending spray;
Perhaps—in heaven—long, long ago,
God thought of the world and it blossomed so!"

THE HEROES AND THE CELESTIALS.

Perhaps some of Our Children will think that the following reads like a fairy story. It is told by The Christian, and after you have read it you will not have hard work to tell who are meant by "Heroes" and "Celestials" and be able to fill out the blank at the close.

In the waters of the Western seas, where the sun goes to bed at night after his march across the sky, there lay an island inhabited by a people called "The Heroes." Now, the Heroes were the greatest nation upon earth (at least they thought themselves so); they were very brave, as heroes should be. Since their island was too small for such a great people, they made themselves ships, and some of them sailed away to distant parts of the world and settled there, far away from the little island they called "Home."

The Heroes, besides being very brave, were very wise (at least they thought themselves so), and since by means of gold and silver men can buy many beautiful things and can enjoy many pleasures, of which poor people know nothing, they thought that if they were the richest people in the world they would certainly be the happiest. The Heroes found out that the best and quickest way of getting money was by trading. So they built ships to carry their merchandise to distant countries, and to bring back the produce of foreign lands to their island home. Many shiploads of useful things used to leave their ports every year, and the nations far away were glad to see the stately vessels sail into their harbors, for they knew what comforts they brought to them and their children.

Thus the Heroes grew richer and richer, and soon they found out a way to grow even richer still. Towards the sun-rising, far away from the land of the Heroes, lay a country in which dwelt a very wonderful and curious people called the "Celestials." They were a very ancient people, and through thousands of years had kept to their old laws and customs with scarcely any change. The "Celestials" hated foreigners, and would not let the ships of other lands come into their harbors. They wanted to keep themselves distinct from other nations. They were not like the Heroes, who used to leave their homes, and go to settle in far-distant countries, they always wished to stay in their own land without any change. The Heroes were indignant that their ships were kept out of the Celestials' ports. They could not bear to lose the wealth they might have gained by trading with them; and presently the time came when the Celestials were forced to open their harbors to the Heroes' ships. This is how it happened. In some parts of the world there grows a plant which bears a white blossom; now this flower is beautiful to look at, but the juice of the plant is poisonous. If a man were to eat a little of the dried juice, it would not kill him at once, it would make him feel very merry and strong at first, but presently he would become dull and heavy, and would fall into a deep sleep, from which he would awake feeling very sick and dull.

Now, some of the Celestials used to grow this poison-plant, and dry the juice, and then smoke little pellets of it in their pipes, and it had the same effect upon them as if they had eaten a little of it. But when the Emperor of the Celestials found out what some of the people were doing, he was very angry and said that they must do so no more. He forbade them to grow the poison-plant in any part of the country, for he knew what misery would come upon the foolish people if they went on using the poisonous juice.

When the Heroes heard what was going on in the land of the Celestials they were very glad, and thought that now, indeed, the time had come for them to grow enormously rich. Since the Emperor of the Celestials would not let his people grow and use the poison-plant, they would bring it to them in their ships, and sell it to them secretly. And so they did. They loaded some ships with great chests of the poison, and brought it to the coasts of the Celestials, who took it and smuggled it into the country, and sold it to the men and women.

But this came to the Emperor's ears, and he was very angry, and said he would not allow it. However, the Heroes did not care; they were quite determined to get rich by selling the poison-plant. And so they made war upon the Celestials, and forced them to open their ports and let their ships enter; and, as time went on, every year saw the great ships come in, bringing the poison to the poor Celestials, who, in their folly, were glad, for now they could smoke the drug at their ease, with no one to stop them.

The Heroes grew the poison-plant in great abundance in a country which they had gained for themselves, far away from their western home. For miles and miles in that land nothing was to be seen but the beautiful poison-plant, as it waved in the breeze or bent its head when the hot sun beat upon it and it almost fainted with the heat. And so the Heroes made millions of money, and were very happy, and did not care at all for the misery which they had brought on the poor Celestials. Yes, some did care.

In the Heroes' island home there were a few men and women who sorrowed greatly over the wretched Celestials. They knew what mischief the poison-plant was doing—how the rich bought it until all their money was spent, and they were reduced to beggary—how the poor sold everything they had to get it, and when nothing else was left sold even their little children. And what did the poison do to its miserable victims? It made them feel excited and happy at first, it is true, but afterwards it left them weak and ill. Their bodies wasted away until they became mere skeletons. They could not eat nor sleep with comfort. They often became mad, and then they died a miserable death. After a man had taken to use the poison-plant he no longer cared to do his daily work; he became weak and idle; and since he could not earn money by honest toil he would often become a thief. His wife and children starved. Perhaps, too, the wife would use the horrid drug, and then the children had no one to love and care for them on earth. So the great Father of all men would in pity take the poor little ones to live with Him.

But what did all this matter, so that the Heroes grew rich! The few men and women of the Heroes who thought that it did matter talked over what they should do. They said they would beg their rulers to forbid their ships to take the poison any more to the miserable Celestials. But the rulers would not listen; they said, "We cannot afford to lose the money; we must grow and sell the poison plant, for we are quite determined to be rich." And when the good men and women found that they could gain nothing from their rulers, they in secret shed many tears, and said to each other: "We must go ourselves to the poor Celestials, and beg them not to buy and use the dreadful poison." And so some of the good Heroes left their friends and pleasant homes, and sailed away to the land of the Celestials. And when they got there, they entreated them not to use the poison any more. And some of the Celestials listened to them, and left off their dreadful habit, though it was very hard to do so; but most of those that heard them scoffed at them, and said, "Why it is you Heroes who bring us the poison-plant. We don't believe you care a straw for us. You are a race of hypocrites; you only come here to do more mischief."

So they stopped their ears, and would not listen to the kind men and women who had left their homes to go and save them. And since the number of the Celestials was very great—for their country was a mighty country—and the number of the Heroes who tried to save them from the poison was very small, only a very few of the Celestials ever heard and obeyed the words of the good Heroes. Most still smoked the poisonous juice, and lived wickedly and died miserably, while the nation of the Heroes grew richer and richer year by year.

But there came a day——

The story here ends abruptly.

Dear Boys and Girls:—You will all want to read this week the account of the reception given to Miss Willard on her return from England. It is on another page of this paper.

The most interesting part of the great occasion to Cozy Cornerers, however, are the presentations to Miss Anna Gordon, who beside being the World's W. C. T. U. superintendent for the Loyal Temperance Legion is also Miss Willard's "right hand man." The writer doesn't say what was in that bouquet presented to the children's friend, but a little bird has told me that it contained a key to a pretty writing-desk which she will find in the "Eagle's Nest," in the Catskill Mountains.

That was a happy thought, too, the giving of a silver candlestick, by the True Blue cadets, of New York. We would all have liked to have heard the speeches, and will look for them in the next Young Crusader.

Now that Miss Gordon is at home, the children's fountain, the "bronze maiden," will commence its life of service in the dusty, bustling city street near the Temple. I will tell you all about the final ceremonies when they are carried out. The Chautauqua fountain in the corridor of Willard Hall will probably be dedicated at the same time.

This week we have a budget of letters from the Junior L. T. L., of Stambaugh, Mich., all of whom we welcome to our Cozy Corner circle.

Go to now, ye rich men, weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you. Your riches are corrupted, and your garments are motheaten.—James 5:1, 2.

THE POLICE DEPARTMENT OF NEW YORK.

The story of New York's municipal corruption, as brought to light through the investigations of the Lexow committee, is one of the astounding revelations of the last decade. The whole nation stands aghast before its enormity. We had dimly known that New York politics were malodorous. Previous revelations at different times and on varying matters had shown something of their true inwardness.

Logic had proved conclusively that a city for decades under the rule of Tammany Hall could not be looked upon as abounding in the fruits of the Spirit. We were prepared for something outranking all previous records of municipal corruption; but for schemes so comprehensive, so far-reaching, so unique in their ramifications we certainly were not prepared.

For more than three weeks the investigation has been going on, and each day's record seems only to intensify the horror of what has gone before. England under Jeffreys was not more oppressed by petty tyranny and cruel rapacity than is our American metropolis by its police force. The spectacle of an entire city, and that the largest on the continent, under a system of blackmail, is not an inspiring one, nor does it present a picture of American institutions that will be likely to commend itself to the "effete civilizations of the Old World." They could well respond to that favorite flower of rhetoric that to be "effete" is hardly so great a calamity as to be instinct with a life whose vigor finds its outlet in evil.

Not a branch of industry, unless it be, as one paper grimly remarks, "the church and the cemetery," seems to have escaped the clutches of these organized banditti. In the first place, a man must pay at the least three hundred dollars to the commissioner of police before he can obtain a place upon the force. That place can only be kept by repeated oblations. How is a policeman to pay these sums out of his "mere pittance," if he be not in turn allowed to levy upon all within his beat? He levies, and that with a right generous hand. Even the green grocery men, the milk-men, the venders of petty wares pay their tithes to the all-powerful guardians of the city's welfare, and may be allowed to swindle ad libitum under protection of the law—so long as the payments are made with due regularity.

The revelations concerning the tribute paid by keepers of houses of ill-fame are enough to call down fire from heaven. All Dr. Parkhurst's assertions, which were declared to be sensational and false, have been proven true by overwhelming evidence. It is established, beyond the possibility of a doubt, that not the police force only, but Tammany officials, from the mayor down, share in the vast sums of money wrested from these wretched creatures.

Nay, more, there is indisputable evidence that at least one woman who kept a reputable boarding-house was terrorized into the payment demanded by the threat that if she did not pay it she would be raided as keeping a disorderly house.

What can be said of such a system! What of the creatures it develops! To call them octopi is to insult the octopus. There is but one fitting analogy, and that in the realm of German mythology—the foul vampire.

But our chief interest centers in the question, What will New York do about it?

It is Tweed's old question, but we do not ask it from Tweed's standpoint. Is this state of affairs to be allowed to go on? Are the Christian men, the decent moral men of New York city to submit? Has the blindness which had in part happened unto Israel come in its fullness to the citizens of our American civilization? for New York is only a type of other cities. What has been going on there is going on to a greater or lesser degree elsewhere. Our municipalities are honeycombed with corruption. Our city governments are a by-word, a hissing and a reproach to the nations of the earth. What are we going to do about it?

There is a speedy and effective remedy at hand and the American nation deserves execration and extermination if that remedy be not applied. Instead of sitting calmly at home and letting Tammany bosses, "ward heelers," and all the disreputable elements of society manage the municipal campaign, let the Christian men, the moral men, the decent men call primaries, nominate candidates, enter the field to wage battle against this that is disgracing their civic life. Here is the plan for "the union of all who love in the service of all who suffer." Let the Church of God, in the broadest sense of that term, wage war against the synagogue of Satan.

THE UNION SIGNAL in a recent editorial was called to account by a zealous Prohibitionist because it urged, in municipal elections, the abolishing of party lines. Perhaps we failed to make our meaning clear, but we certainly feel most intensely that New York in its present condition serves to illustrate our meaning. Is there hope that in New York to-day a "straight Prohibition ticket" could carry the election? What is the hope, then? That good Prohibitionists, good Populists, good Democrats, and good Republicans shall come together and say, "With God's help we'll drop party differences till we clean up New York City. We'll organize a new party here, the party of God's retribution on the corruptions of Tammany. We'll stand back of that party and forget, in the work, our old party names as surely as we forget our church names. When this job is done we'll have time enough to look around for party lines,—provided we want to find them.

More firmly than we believe in anything else in political life to-day, do we believe that the party of the future is to come into being through such a fusion. We hail the Prohibition party as the nucleus of that new party which is to be grander and broader than any party lines the past has dreamed of—but we deplore partisanship where it is unnecessary. Partisanship in New York to-day can mean only disaster. Patriotism which will rise above party lines will surely mean the overthrow of Tammany Hall.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

Our Correspondence department is so crowded this week that we cheerfully give space on the editorial pages to Miss Willard's last letter from England, dictated just before sailing and forwarded later by her stenographer:

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—This is my last week before sailing for home, in good spirits and with health much improved. In the last few weeks I have addressed several great meetings, such as they get up in London, numbering from three to five thousand in the audience. Mr. H. J. Osborn is the manager of public meetings and many other important enterprises for Lady Henry and the British Women's Temperance Association. He has had long experience and is remarkably ingenious-minded, recalling by his skill the marvelous ability with which our own Rev. B. Fay Mills manipulates great public assemblies. No other woman's association has ever had such magnificent demonstrations as the British Women's Temperance Association in the last year. This is an indication not only of the constantly growing influence of the association, but of the great increase in the sentiment that calls for prohibition by law, by politics, and by the woman's ballot. It is perfectly well known in England that the Direct Veto bill is expected to cover this ground in a great proportion of the area affected thereby, and no analogy between our local option laws and this bill with woman's vote behind it can be justly drawn.

It has been a source of deep regret to me that being so near the world's center of evil and good—which London undoubtedly is—I could see so little of the great fight between the angel and the dragon. In these last days, however, I have tried to make some amends for this deprivation.

THE GREAT ARTIST, WATTS.

On June 2 I had the long-hoped-for felicity of visiting Little Holland House, the home of the great artist, G. F. Watts, in company with his life-long friend, Lady Henry Somerset, who, although not given to boasting, makes it a private boast that she was wont to put the great master's hair in curl papers when she was a mischievous maiden of five years. He was as a young man of exceedingly delicate health, and having by his genius attracted the attention of the well-known Thoby Prinsep, one of the founders of the East India Company, and uncle of Lady Henry Somerset, Mr. Watts was received into their home as if he had been one of their own kindred, and remained there during the lifetime of Mr. and Mrs. Prinsep, whose son, Val, thanks, in part, at least, to the devotion of Mr. Watts, first as teacher, and later on as benefactor, has recently become, after passing his fiftieth year, a Royal Academician. There was a strain of remarkably artistic talent in all the sisters, of whom Lady Somers was the most beautiful. One of them, Mrs. Julia Cameron, a friend and neighbor of Tennyson on the Isle of Wight, became the most distinguished artistic photographer of her time, and her pictures of the great men who were her friends, including Tennyson, Carlisle, Gladstone and Robert Browning, are the standards by which their features will be judged in future times.

It is the choice prerogative of genius to make friends everywhere, and often to become the spoilt child of those who match his gifts with their own good fortune, thus augmenting the power and pleasure of both. Possibly in his earlier years this great artist, who, living in the atmosphere of wealth and rank, might have been expected to fall out of touch with the people from whom he sprang, may have been aristocratic in his tendencies; but discipline and sorrow, with the rich culture they bring to mind and heart, led him to the profoundest sympathy with progressive movements among the toilers of the world. It has, however, been his mission to speak to all classes and all creeds with a brother's voice, calling them up the heights of peace and purity. He is an epic poet in form and color; no artist of our time compares with him in this. He has never sought popularity, nor indeed finds it, but those who have heard through our life's deep dream the waves of that great ocean we shall sail so soon; those who in the inmost of their souls believe, not as a tenet but as an intuition, in God and Immortality, Duty and Destiny, have found in G. F. Watts an interpreter of the deepest and highest thought, purpose and affection that have ever hallowed their souls.

Of all the great things accomplished by this master who has been twice offered and has twice declined a title, nothing seems to me to have been more helpful to our faith than his pictures of Death. The skeleton is kept in the closet and the great benignant figures in shining apparel, who come to bear away the weary spirit to a better home, seem like the best friends humanity has ever known. One of them I like to call "Father" and the other "Mother Death," they together represent the strong protection and the brooding sympathy with which this great artist invests the concept of "the mystery of mysteries." "I paint for no class or creed," said he, "but to bring to universal man a better sense of the love of God, the sanctities of conscience, the hope of a better life" Although now a man of seventy-five or more, he still rises as has been his wont all his life long, at three or four or five o'clock in the morning, and entering his beautiful studio imprisons the fancies that light up his thought.

A gleam of gold is the prevailing tone in these great arched-roofed rooms, one of them at Little Holland House in London, the other at his charming country seat near Guilford. He has recently presented one of his finest paintings, exhibited at the World's Fair, to the American people, and it has been placed at the White House. He is a lover of Republican institutions, and has never sought the patronage of titled names.

Mrs. Watts is the ideal companion for so great and noble a mind; she is both literary and artistic, and has made their homes as truly works of genius as her husband has made his canvasses. The alcove in which the painter takes his siesta while she sits beside him reading from some great author—perhaps the poems of their friend Tennyson, or from "The World's Parliament of Religions," a new and favorite book with them—presents to the mind a dream of victory achieved, life's long sunny afternoon and the golden haze of a great sunset. It is good for reformers who fight in the noisy, dusty plain, and sharpen their weapons while advancing on the enemy, to have a glimpse now and then of a world and life strong and helpful as their own, but led by one whose "soul is like a star and dwells apart."

SALVATION ARMY RESCUE WORK.

Another visit paid by Lady Henry and myself was to the rescue work carried on by Mrs. Bramwell Booth. There are five homes for the class of women whom some call "abandoned," and others more justly denominate "knocked down" in the fierce fight for existence that is the most heart-rending feature of the times. There is also a maternity hospital connected with the enterprise, and a knitting factory, a laundry, and various other methods by which the women become more or less self-supporting. Major Cox, one of the most capable of Mrs. Booth's assistants, has been asked to write an article for THE UNION SIGNAL, giving details of this work, than which none in London is more worthy of our study. Mrs. Bramwell Booth sends out a corps of Salvation Army officers into Piccadilly every night—the worst rendezvous for the so-called "upper classes" that London contains—and so much is being said about this plague-spot that it is likely the police may yet do something more than call out "move on" to the throng that moves toward destruction at every step in that great thoroughfare where so many pitiful young women are "houseless by night."

The slums of Somers Town present a heartrending spectacle of moral degradation, brightened by the faithful work of parish priests, and the Mission House, opened by Lady Henry Somerset, in which she is now feeding from three to five hundred persons daily, on account of the great cab strike that has reduced them to extreme destitution, but from which has resulted a public sentiment that will lead to a more just understanding of the situation, and possibly, ere long, to the municipalization of the public cabs. This last seems the only way out for capital and labor alike, for the very difficulty of the problem must shortly introduce great changes in the handling of public enterprises. Keen as the competition is with us, its razor edge receives its hair-line in the crowded population of this island, where nearly forty millions of people must subsist within an area not larger than the state of Georgia. When one has said this he has said all. The situation cannot continue; something must give way, and the masses of the people are determined that the means of livelihood shall no longer center in the hands of a privileged few. There is hardly a man in England who is to-day trusted by so many as John Burns, the leader of the labor folk; this is in itself a revelation of things to come.

COLLEGE FOR THE BLIND.

Another visit was to the Royal Normal College for the blind, in the suburbs of London, founded through the efforts of Dr. F. J. Campbell, a blind man of Tennessee, who has made a remarkable record, having invested every day of his life for the good of those about him. In 1856 he taught my sister Mary and me to play the piano, being then at the head of the musical department in the Institution for the Blind, near Janesville, Wis. Many years ago he came to England to study the condition of the blind, and found it far behind that which he had attained in America. Some generous people caught the contagion of his enthusiasm and said they would help to found an institution according to his plan, and it must be for boys only. Dr. Campbell, however, is not that sort of a man, and plainly said that he would give up the enterprise and return to his own country unless girls were admitted on equal terms. To this his good friends finally acceded, and it is most encouraging to hear him tell of the number of young women who are now earning their own bread and keep, and helping to support needy relatives, as a result of the education they have received in the Royal Normal College. Here they are taught various trades and occupations; the little ones have a kindergarten. The musical department is a wonder in its variety and thoroughness, but the most distinguishing feature of all is the constant effort to train these young people so that they need not be so heavily handicapped by a single physical infirmity. We saw them in the great gymnasium, rowing on the lake, and practicing feats of strength and skill in the swimming school and bicycle gallery that were little short of marvelous. Dr. Campbell himself is a famous cyclist, and his accomplished wife, a New England lady from Concord, Mass., or thereabouts, is an expert in the various physical exercises that are here taught, while his son is an athlete of notable achievements. Dr. Campbell has climbed the Jungfrau, Mount Blanc, and other lesser peaks in Switzerland, which no other blind man ever dreamed of doing; he is a marvelous illustration of what devotion and energy can do for one who has a remarkable mind to start with, and a heavenly purpose to bless the world. Mrs. Dinah Mulock Craik has written a most interesting life of the doctor (although he says she praised him too much and made a few minor errors) and I feel sure that anyone who reads the record will be inspired to battle against "the slings and arrows of outrageous fortune" as this brave man has done. He is devoted to the temperance movement, and is an earnest, broad-minded Christian brother, whose hypothesis of life is embodied in the Golden Rule.

LONDON TEMPERANCE HOSPITAL.

A few days ago I visited the London Temperance Hospital and was shown through all its departments by my "good physician," Sir Benjamin Ward Richardson, a name as honored and beloved in England as it is in America. On the corner-stone of the large and beautiful building is the date of its foundation, 1873, and the statement that it was laid by Sir Wilfrid Lawson, but the important part of the inscription is as follows: "In humble dependence on Almighty God for the cure and treatment of disease." The hospital was founded for the treatment of medical and surgical cases without the use of alcohol as ordinarily prescribed. It was at the same time provided that the medical staff should be at liberty to administer alcohol when they deemed it to be needful, but every such case has to be recorded and published in the succeeding annual report.

During the nineteen years of the hospital's existence, fifteen such cases out of 8,506 have occurred, (this was up to the present year). In 1892, 859 patients were admitted. Of the 8,506 admitted since the hospital was opened, 4,526 have been cured and 3,069 relieved. The deaths were 533 or 6.2 per cent. Dr. James Edmunds is consulting physician, Dr. James Ridge deals with outside patients. These three are the best known names (with the exception of Dr. Norman Kerr), in the annals of medical temperance in our time, so far as the record of Great Britain is concerned.

The buildings are large and attractive, with every convenience, such as an elevator, a balcony on the second story thirty feet wide and one hundred feet long, for outdoor exercise, a conservatory at the end of the children's ward, electric light, attractive pictures on the walls, modern methods of heating, no trace whatever of any odor, either medical or culinary, and the whole building so wholesome and bright that one can hardly believe it is after all a temple of pain. The total number of beds will accommodate one hundred and twenty patients, about one-half of these are total abstainers. Sir Benjamin told me that he never administered alcohol, and that when it is used they are obliged to give it in its unmixed state. I think the latest figures are that in twenty-one years it has been administered seventeen times, last year three times, and in every one of the three cases the patient died. The management of the hospital does not make total abstinence compulsory in its physicians, but tries first of all to get able men. The Duke of Westminster is president of the hospital board, but as is usual in this country he is simply a figure-head. The general spirit among the patients is illustrated by a remark overheard between an old and a new one, the first making some slight complaint and the second saying, "Old fellow, you are a grumbler; if you ain't happy here you wouldn't be happy in heaven."

The children's ward is naturally the most attractive of all. Here Miss Wilson is at the head, a cultivated young lady, a daughter of one of the partners in the Scotch shipbuilding firm on the Clyde, Clyde, Glasgow. Her father is a member of Parliament, and her mother belongs to the executive committee of the B. W. T. A. Miss S. E. Orme, who has been in the hospital from the first as head superintendent, is a strong character. We saw Miss Day and Miss Olliver, members of the Church of England Temperance Society, two earnest young women, who come every week to bring flowers and sing to the patients. It sounded good to us as we approached from a distance, and the clear voices rang out with the familiar, "This is my story, this is my song." The rear of the hospital looks out on a beautiful park, once the cemetery of St. Pancras; smoking is distinctly prohibited, and indulgence in it involves immediate expulsion.

So much for the famous hospital, which has been like a city set on a hill, and has sent out its clear light into all the world to tell mankind that alcohol is not a needful drug, to say nothing of its use as a beverage. It is characteristic of our English friends that they ask few questions about what other people or other countries are doing, as they are strenuously occupied with their own problems and endeavors, but "on my own account" I ventured to speak of the National Temperance Hospital in Chicago, founded by women, under the auspices of the W. C. T. U., and I told my kind entertainers that I felt sure before ten years more had passed we should have a hospital as great and good as theirs, whereat I think they were glad, and very likely in their hearts surprised, although they did not say so.

Two responses have come in behalf of Rev. Sam Small's chivalric dilemma. Dr. O. B. Bird, our old time friend, and the children's "Uncle John," says: "Brother Small is right, and your suggestion is most excellent, 'Miss' assumed unless otherwise specified. But there is, perhaps, a better way, namely, addressing every woman as Madam, irrespective of her social condition, just as we call every man Mr. This would be consistent, and is only simple justice to women, since they should not be forced to announce whether their condition of blessedness is single or double. How would a man like to sign, John Smith, married; or, John Smith, unmarried. This is what we require of women, unless we adopt the universal 'Madam.' If this is done, be sure to write out the name, and not leave us puzzled with initials only. And don't use masculine names, like 'Jo.'" Another view of the matter is taken by a friend who is a Friend, and is certainly a very simple way of getting around the whole difficulty, if people only thought so: "I utterly fail to see how the prefix Mrs. or Miss to a woman's name is either chivalric or courteous. If a woman signs her name as Jane Smith, or Anna Jones, she doubtless wishes to be so addressed. If she wants a prefix to her name she will so signify. As a member of a religious society which places no value upon worldly titles, but believes in a good, honest name, I have been frequently very much annoyed by having an inappropriate prefix put to my name, my children bringing in the mail with the question, 'Mamma, is this thine, it says Miss?' Why cannot Rev. Small and the W. C. T. U. call people by their plain names, particularly when they so desire."

As the Chieftain has not yet reached On Duty's quarters, the following will be timely: "Just before sailing I went to lunch in the beautiful home of Dr. and Mrs. Parker, in the suburbs of London, and I rejoice that with his good, great brain he had wrought out for himself such a sanctuary as that home is. There Henry Ward Beecher and his wife were entertained for six weeks when they visited England but a few months before the Brooklyn preacher's transit from this world, and Dr. Parker said he was like a boy let loose from school; such fun and pathos, such quips and turns, such greatness and good humor had never been combined in any guest before. 'When we said good-bye we both wept, and I little thought how soon he would be taken from us.' Mrs. Parker is the divinity of this home, and it was a rare and beautiful thing to see how fully her great husband appreciated his gifted and lovely, but modest, wife, whose only thought seemed to be of him. He told us she was 'by far the best part of the family'; he showed us her beautiful paintings, and at his and our earnest request she gave us a recitation from James Whitcomb Riley, which would have delighted the heart of that genial poet."

The following testimony from one who knew whereof he affirmed is most encouraging. He said: "When I first knew the concert hall in London, there was a little table in front of each seat and there the people drank and listened, and there the people while listening to the songs solaced themselves with intoxicating liquors. Such a thing is now unknown and would be thoroughly discountenanced." This fact of itself speaks with unmistakable significance of the advancement of the teetotal propaganda.

Yes, it is true that Miss Jessie Ackermann had a gift of a thousand pounds proffered her in Australia, and that she declared she preferred to leave it for the women's white-ribbon work. Such an outcry was made at this that the matter seems to be still pending, and I sincerely hope Miss Ackermann, who has invested seven years of work in Australia without fee or reward except as it came in collections from the people, will allow her friends to give her this well-deserved testimonial of their affection and confidence.

A devoted Indiana temperance woman, Mrs. Kean Rice, who recently passed on to her heavenly home, had a tree in her garden which she assiduously cultivated. She called it her "Temperance Tree," or "Tree of Righteousness," and told her children she wanted to have the United States flag run up to the top of it whenever the saloon power was broken.

A Watch Tower admirer thinks if On Duty would merely suggest that the dress of women should be shortened a trifle, every feminine reader would henceforth cut off an inch or two from her skirt. Isn't that putting a little too much reliance

A BRIEF REVIEW OF OUR WORLD'S WORK.

I have had, within a day or two, the pleasure of "interviewing" your chieftain, Miss Willard, and I believe you will appreciate a brief summary of the "points" made during the conversation. The special object of the talk was to elicit Miss Willard's views as to the progress of the white-ribbon work throughout the world; and naturally she sought first for evidences which had been brought to notice by, and during, the great meetings of the National British Women's Temperance Association. Miss Willard found, in the presence at those meetings of some fifteen ladies representing the W. C. T. U. interests in other countries, strong evidence of the activity of the society the world over. These ladies were "fraternal delegates" from the W. C. T. U. in the United States, Tasmania, New Zealand, South Africa, India, Spain, France and Denmark, and one and all told the same story—one of such great progress that the two last years have seen more growth of interest in the work than all the previous years of its existence. One marked feature is the increased interest taken by women in securing "the ballot," so that through it they may help to close the drinking places. A marked example of this is found in New Zealand, of which colony Miss Willard speaks in the highest terms. Mrs. Sheppard, the superintendent of franchise work, is the leader in that reform which has lately resulted in the enfranchisement of women, and under her guidance the W. C. T. U. thoroughly organized and carried the work through, of course with the coöperation of other societies. A letter read the other day in a London meeting from a minister, formerly of London, and resident in New Zealand, put the result in a nutshell. After speaking of the great program of temperance principles, especially in women's societies, he said: "The male politicians no longer despise them, but stand aghast."

Of South Africa Miss Willard gave me some interesting information. Miss Alice Palmer is steadily organizing, having for her chief coadjutors Miss Ferguson, principal of the Huguenot Seminary near Cape Town; Miss Pride, in charge of a similar institution; Miss Cummings, who has organized the Y work; Miss Solomons, who conducts the press department, and Mrs. Andrew Murray, at the head of the purity work. The latter is the wife of a clergyman, a well-known writer. Several of these ladies were among the guests of the B. W. T. A. at their recent meetings.

The special effort now being made in South Africa has relation to the continuance of the iniquitous C. D. Acts, and a thorough organization of public sentiment is being sought so as to do away with them. In London last week an influential deputation, headed by Lady Henry Somerset and Miss Willard, saw Sir Henry Lock, the governor of the Colony, and urged upon him the importance of taking action in the direction desired. He is believed to be opposed to the Acts. From the two seminaries named there go out year by year numbers of young women trained in white-ribbon principles, who will help to spread them by carrying them into their homes in the Transvaal and the Orange Free State, as well as Cape Colony. The method and spirit of the W. C. T. U. is also reaching the Dutch Boers through their own daughters. The separate W. C. T. U. of South Africa will at their next meetings be federated as a "National." They have added another to the forty or more newspapers published in different countries in the W. C. T. U. interest.

Miss Willard also speaks of the seven years' work of Miss Ackermann, which has resulted in a thorough introduction of the white-ribbon movement in Australia. Editors, ministers, and publicists admit that the W. C. T. U. is the strongest force for Christianity except the United Churches, in the Antarctic continent, and the churches are of course well represented in it. Mrs. Hauser, who was president of the W. C. T. U. in India, has established a white-ribbon paper there, and has made an admirable beginning. She has organized twenty-three new unions in the past year. Mrs. Wheeler Andrew and Dr. Kate Bushnell have lately visited Burma, where the society is now started, and have also strengthened the work in Calcutta and Shanghai. They are now at work in Japan, following up the heroic labors of Miss Mary Allen West.

Of Great Britain Miss Willard can speak from long and close observation from the very best vantage-ground. "The past two years," she says, "have witnessed a positive revolution, under the fearless and untiring leadership of Lady Henry Somerset." A few figures will show the truth of this. In 1892 the number of delegates present at the Annual Council was 255; in 1893 there were 418; in 1894 over 500. In 1892 the gross receipts were £1,186; in 1893 £1,306; but in 1894, over £4,000. Further, last year saw over 300 new branches formed, or half as many as the total reported the previous year. Lady Henry Somerset addressed herself in eight months to over 200,000 people in 132 meetings, held in over fifty separate cities and towns. The women in the Association number fully 100,000, and it has not feared to take up the "wider movement," which means they that have "fellowshiped and joined hands with all correlated reforms, such as labor, purity and suffrage, though they have not incorporated any of these in their plan of work." The principality of Wales has been the scene of the principal success in organizing where there are now one hundred local societies against twelve last year. HENRY J. OSBORN.

JAPAN.

THE JAPANESE TEMPERANCE SOLDIER-TRAVELER.

We have the most encouraging result in our temperance work, and are very glad to inform this to our readers.

In this age, well known not only in Japan but in foreign countries also as a traveler, alone on horseback, Colonel Fukushima has made a quickening effort for our society, as in the behalf of Tokio Temperance Society he gave the most interesting lecture for the monthly temperance lecture course at Y. M. C. A. building, which is said to be the finest of the kind in Tokio. The subject was "Climate during Exploration." He started his long, solitary horseback exploration of the continent from Berlin, Germany, on the 11th of February, 1892, and took an extensive exploration, passing through Siberia in Russia, Mongolia and China. The Colonel reached Vladivostock in June, 1893; thus he traveled 8,719 miles (3,568 ri); thence, he finally reached Tokio, the capital of Japan, on the 29th of June, 1893.

He was welcomed with greatest honor by all the people ever known in the Empire. The Colonel spent one year and five months in making this historical journey. During this long travel he experienced all kinds of climates and difficulty we can possibly imagine, but the Colonel has been always in perfect health. This undertaking, one of the greatest ever known on the face of the globe, was so successful as it was because of his temperance living. He never drank a single drop of any alcoholic beverage. He was listened to with great interest by the audience of 1,300, as the hall was full of people before the lecture commenced.

It is great hope in our future work, and is said that the importance of temperance work is widely known, and people are coming to join the good cause.

OUR THIRD AND FOURTH ROUND-THE-WORLD MISSIONARIES IN JAPAN.

I am glad to write you a few lines concerning Mrs. Andrew and Dr. Bushnell. They reached Yokohama at five p. m., the first of June. The temperance workers of Yokohama and Tokio met them on board and on the shore as they came by the steamer from Kobe.

June 2, three p. m., they addressed the ladies' meeting at Ferris Seminary, in Yokohama.

The chapel was full with a very attentive audience of over three hundred, and they organized a new W. C. T. U. This was sowed by Miss West and ripened by Mrs. Andrew and Dr. Bushnell.

Thank the Lord for the good work and result. Mrs. Hoyoshi is doing the great work in Yokohama. Hereafter Yokohama ladies will take the active work.

June 2, nine p. m., Mrs. Andrew and Dr. Bushnell reached Tokio as they left Yokohama, 8:15 p. m. Tokio people met them at Shinbasho station, and they were escorted to Miss Spencer, the good M. E. missionary lady who always helps us in many ways. June 3, 2:30 p. m., Dr. Bushnell addressed the immense audience at the Presbyterian church, Tokio, in behalf of the Tokio W. C. T. U. She was listened to with great interest, and in the meeting fifteen persons became members of the work.

June 4, 7:30 p. m., Mrs. Andrew and Dr. Bushnell spoke at Yokohama Union church; the church was beautifully decorated for their welcome. The house was, of course, full. Their works were very successful in Japan. They worked specially in Nagasaki, Kobe, Kioto, Osaka, Yokohama and Tokio. Many invitations came from all parts of Japan. But the time was limited. Thank God for the great work produced in Japan. The temperance work is growing everywhere in Japan. SHO NEMOTO.

A LETTER FROM MRS. HAUSER.

An old text comes to mind as a letter from India reaches me in London: "As cold water to a thirsty soul, so is good news from a far country." Within a month previous to leaving that "far country," India, it was my privilege to organize a W. C. T. Union at Jabalpor, almost in the very heart of that great land. Owing to a slight misunderstanding and a variety of local interests, the first meeting was small, and it seemed almost doubtful if the newly-set plant would take root, but how carefully it has been tended by a few earnest workers is shown by this letter written May 1, from Jabalpor, by Mrs. Mary R. Phillips, the present president of the W. C. T. U. for India. She says: "The time is all too short to do justice to any account I can give of last night's W. C. T. U. meeting, but I must catch this mail and tell you it was the best temperance meeting I ever attended. Many English soldiers were present, and a good number signed the pledge. The workers here were greatly encouraged. This is their first public meeting since you organized the union six weeks ago. Mrs. Johnson presided admirably. Her manner had just the right effect. She called on me to 'explain a womans' meeting.' Some young folks and children and young men helped in singing and recitations. My husband never spoke better. Dr. and Mrs. Johnson made fine speeches. The Scotch Presbyterian chaplain and his wife quite outdid themselves. Next week a good Band of Hope will doubtless be organized. This is real fruit, and we cannot be thankful enough. I am very anxious to know the best and most economical way of managing the English temperance literature needed for this work in India and how it can be paid for. I also wish to enlarge the White Ribbon at once. Would not the best way be to get subscribers for it in the United States, any and everywhere now?"

Jabalpor is one of the largest railway centers in India, and some hundreds of English and Eurasian railway employés and their families make this their home and the W. C. T. U. work appeals particularly to them and is greatly needed among them, not only for their own and families' benefit, but for the safety of the thousands of lives that come daily under their care. But some will say: "These people are so far away." Not so far from even America, for all the great company of American tourists who visit India pass over the long lines of railway centering in Jabalpor. It is a very small umbrella that suffices for this old world in these days of rapid transit, and a drunken hand at one point may send sorrow to the opposite point. So we may all rejoice in this good news from a far country of the success of the Union in Jabalpor, and will not some one help as regards the greatly needed temperance literature for India, or send to Miss Alice Briggs, 1107 The Temple, Chicago, fifty cents subscription for the White Ribbon published monthly in India by the W. C. T. U. JENNETTE G. HAUSER.

London, June 7.

PETITION WORK IN BRAZIL.

With this enclosed I send you copies of the World's Petition with a total of 289 signatures, being 187 men and 102 women obtained in Brazil, and in Portuguese speaking parts of Africa sixteen men and seven women; total, twenty-three signatures from Africa. I have sent copies of the Petition to every one in Brazil that I had reason to hope might be interested in obtaining signatures and to some others. Most of them have not been heard from; some who are obtaining signatures have not yet sent them to me, so I hope to send you more in the near future.

WORLD'S WAVE CRESTS.

BOTH the winners were girls in the gold medal contest which closed the great Australasian convention.

IT is earnestly desired that the World's W. C. T. U. should send out a white-ribboner to the W. C. T. U. in Calcutta.

HAKITIKA, N. Z., W. C. T. U., has fairly started in the good work by opening rooms and forming classes for boys and girls.

THE Yokkaichi, Japan, W. C. T. U., numbering twenty members, rejoices in being the only society organized by Miss West during her stay there.

MRS. M. E. KIRK, secretary of the Australian W. C. T. U. from its formation, is a transplanted member of the B. W. T. A., having removed to Warragul, Victoria, in 1887. She is a successful organizer, a good manager and an acceptable speaker.

A TEMPERANCE tent was established by the W. C. T. U. of Pinetown, Natal, to counteract the attractions of liquor at the Easter Volunteer encampment of soldiers. Evangelistic services were held, and the earnest Christian workers felt repaid for the labor expended.

MRS. ZOE A. M. LOCKE, former president of Bulgaria W. C. T. U., writes:—"I have encouraging information that the temperance work is meeting with remarkable success. Public meetings draw their hundreds of listeners. Thus the public is being educated up to the standard of total abstinence."

MRS. JENNETTE G. HAUSER, well-known for her activity in W. C. T. U. work for India, of which she has been president, is now visiting the United States. She has brought with her costumes and curios and will be glad to answer invitations from W. C. T. Unions to give illustrated talks on India. Address her in care of Mrs. S. S. Fessenden, 171 Tremont St., Boston, Mass., for terms and dates.

MANY Hindoo women who have signed the Polyglot Petition did not dare to do so except with their father's names. They, themselves, if married, and all of them are, have no name unless they are mothers; until then they are simply called "that one." Their names are as private as their faces, both are covered away. The dread of publicity is like a disease; it has been hammered into their heads by the men of their households for thousands of years.

AT a meeting of women held in the temperance hall, Middlesborough, recently, at which were present representatives from B. W. T. A. branches in Middlesborough and district, it was resolved that the following message be sent to Miss F. E. Willard:

"That this large meeting of women beg to tender to Miss F. E. Willard their loving sympathy and regards. Whilst we rejoice that your health is so far restored that you are able to return to your own land we cannot but regret to lose you from our midst. We feel grateful for the immense help you have been able to render to temperance work in this country, and especially for the good you did us women by your noble advocacy of temperance in Middlesborough, and equally so for the way you enabled us more fully to realize that God has made of one blood all the nations of the earth. Your sweet sisterly love is one of our most pleasant memories. We trust that your future may be even more blessed than the past has been, and that success may crown your labors in whatever direction our loving Father may direct your steps."

DOMINION W. C. T. U. CONVENTION.

The Seventh Annual Convention of the W. C. T. U. of the Dominion of Canada has just been held in London, the "Forest City" of Ontario. "London" and "gracious hospitality" are almost synonymous terms, and never has this been better justified than during the late convention when the warmth of a hearty welcome was crowned by the taste, wisdom and kindly forethought of the entertainers.

The Congregational Church was the scene of the solid work of the convention, and many were the compliments received on the despatch, order and thoroughness which made it possible to get in the reports of all the departments of work and allow time for discussion on points of special interest. This was due in great measure to the ability, tact and method of the president, Mrs. Ella F. M. Williams, of Montreal, who was also ably supported by the sub-executive, Mrs. Todd, of New Brunswick, vice-president-at-large; Miss Tilley, Toronto, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Tilton, Ottawa, treasurer; Mrs. Rutherford, Toronto, recording secretary; and the ex-officio, vice-presidents, presidents for the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, Mrs. May Thornley and Mrs. Sanderson.

It is quite impossible in the limited space of one or two columns to give more than a few general impressions, and it is perhaps better to take up subjects without regard to the exact date at which they were presented. The secretary's report was most encouraging, progress being reported in almost every direction. Ontario and British Columbia especially ran each other very close in the holy strife of gaining the largest percentage of new members, the former gaining forty-seven per cent and being the winner of the president's prize banner this year. Mrs. Spofford, president of the fortunate province, not being present, the banner was handed over to Mrs. Todd, of New Brunswick, as her "authorized agent," with the remark that by so doing the banner would be a link between the Pacific and the Atlantic.

The treasurer showed a balance of $337.-54. The contribution to the World's W. C. T. U. was $102.75, a report on the work of that society being read by Miss Tilley. Mrs. Atkinson, of Moncton, spoke of the progress in juvenile and Sunday-school departments, stating that 11,557 children belong to the Bands of Hope in the Dominion as reported to her.

Hygiene and heredity was the subject of a report by Mrs. Craig, of Compton. Dress reform is slowly winning its way. Mrs. Williams exhibited a beautifully dressed doll as a sample of how utility and grace might be combined. Dolly had on a very full divided skirt, lace vest and Eton jacket, possessing also a Grecian suit for full dress occasions.

Special attention was drawn to the subject of narcotics by Mrs. Bright, of South London, who read a paper prepared by Mrs. Gordon, Ottawa. A number of delegates joined in the discussion following, and instances of the evil effects of example by teachers and ministers touched on. In connection with this, memorials had been sent by Ontario to the legislature for an improvement in the Tobacco Act.

The press, The Woman's Journal, and THE UNION SIGNAL were favorably reported on.

Soldiers and volunteer camps, the department of Mrs. Wheeler, of Paris, brought out the fact that Major General Herbert, commander of the military forces of Canada, has issued an order prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors at camps of instruction. A vote of thanks was passed to him for his action in this matter.

A most interesting paper on "Woman Suffrage" was read by Mrs. Edwards, of Ottawa, who takes an optimistic view of the present position. She reported a defeat in the maritime provinces which was almost a victory, so close was the voting, being a minority of one in Nova Scotia and seven in New Brunswick. In connection with this a clause in the report of the plan of work committee was adopted unanimously, to the effect that a petition be presented to the legislatures of the Dominion asking for equal suffrage, said petition to be signed by men only.

The question of affiliation with the National Council of Women, organized by Lady Aberdeen, was thoroughly ventilated and discussed. It was evident that there was a strong feeling in favor of federating with the society on general grounds, but the sentiments of the majority of the delegates were voiced by Miss Dougall, of Montreal, who pointed out the possibility of complications arising which might compromise the union both as temperance reformers and as Christian women. She also showed that on the basis of the council's constitution the W. C. T. U. of Canada, with its ten thousand members, would have no more votes than a society of, perhaps, a dozen people; also the meetings were not opened or closed by audible prayer. On putting the question, only four, out of fifty-four, voted for federation.

"Parlor Meetings" was brilliantly treated by Mrs. Archibald, and Mrs. McDonnell reported on her interesting department of "Peace and Arbitration." She told how a resolution had been introduced in the Dominion Parliament in favor of universal peace and for the settlement of all international disputes by arbitration, the Hon. Wilfrid Laurier and Sir John Thompson both speaking in favor of it.

Mrs. Strong, of Prince Edward's Island, sent a paper on "Unfermented Wine" with the encouraging statement that most of the Protestant churches were using it for sacramental purposes.

A paper of bright promise for the future was that of Mrs. Noyes on "Scientific Temperance Instruction." The work has been greatly promoted during the year. The new regulations of the minister of education in Ontario, place the subject in the compulsory list for the high school entrance and the public school leaving examinations, thus insuring the attention of teachers to it.

Other reports of equal interest were given, space only forbidding a detailed mention of each.

The solid work of the convention was brightened and relieved by the introduction of suitable music, a parliamentary drill by the president, Mrs. Williams, and the opening of the question box. Nor must mention of the very helpful devotional meetings held daily be omitted. The noon Bible readings were especially attractive, Mrs. Barney taking the word "Watch" for the foundation of her reading, quoting from Habakkuk: "I will watch to see what he will say unto me, and what I shall answer when I am reproved."

Such are some of the barest details of the day sessions of the convention. For each evening a special program was provided of such a nature as to attract and keep large audiences to the closing hour.

Kindly welcome was the key-note of Friday evening, and the president's address practically closed the doors, so bright and interesting and teeming with information was it. Mrs. Williams on giving a review of the year's work touched on the position of Canada in regard to prohibition, which she described in one word, "expectancy." She also spoke strongly in favor of the enfranchisement of women.

Saturday evening was devoted to a review of provincial work. In the able hands of the presidents of the different provinces the hours sped by as the special characteristics and needs of each province was described and the methods of work and results explained.

"Packed to the door" was the condition of Queen's Avenue Church on Monday evening when Mrs. Barney, of Rhode Island, gave her lecture on "Clean Hands." A fluent and pleasant delivery, sincerity of heart and a cultured intellect make Mrs. Barney a power for good wherever she goes, and none could listen to her unmoved or without a stronger desire to be able to say: "Our hands have not shed this blood, neither have our eyes seen it."

Major Hilton, of New Jersey, was the feature of Tuesday evening, and for an hour he held the undivided attention of his hearers by the brightness and wit of his temperance address on "Delusions." He proved, however, that there was no delusion about the little knot of white ribbon which was more feared by the liquor traffic than all the officers of the land.

The convention proper closed on Tuesday evening, but by special request Wednesday was devoted to a conference on Y work. Excellent papers were read. Mrs. Williams, Dominion president, conducted a parliamentary drill, the subject of which was the source of much merriment and many witty remarks. "That All Married Men Should Be Deprived of the Franchise" was decided by a large majority, it being suggested that they could be represented by their wives.

An object lesson in bandaging was given by a trained nurse from the London Hospital, who kindly responded to Mrs. Williams' invitation to assist. Miss Faircloth, Dominion superintendent, also gave an object lesson in kitchen garden work.

No change was made in the personnel of the executive, the president, Mrs. Williams, being reinstalled with applause and a Chautauqua salute.

Several invitations for the next annual gathering in 1895 were received, that of Quebec being accepted. The time of meeting was changed from June to November, as an experiment, thus bringing the Provincial and Dominion conventions nearer together.

And so closed a convention which one of the delegates described as "the best yet."

MANITOBA.

EIGHTH ANNUAL CONVENTION.

The provincial convention was held at Carberry, June 12 and 13, the president, Mrs. Dr. Blakely, presiding. The address of welcome was given by Mrs. W. J. Small on behalf of the Carberry union, and Mrs. McAdam, of Treherne, gave the response for the visiting delegates. The corresponding secretary's report shows that fine progress has been made along our many lines of work, nearly every department having doubled, and some more than doubled; the number of unions having taken up railroad work three times that of last year, and public meetings have increased nearly five times.

The superintendent of organization, Mrs. Blakely, gave an interesting report showing an enormous amount of work done and very gratifying results. The president then gave her address, which was a masterly review of the progress of the temperance cause, and a full account of the work done within the province during the past year, with many suggestions. It was listened to with close attention by the many earnest-hearted women present. At the close, a hearty vote of thanks was tendered.

Excellent reports of the evangelistic department, scientific temperance instruction, heredity and hygiene, post-office, mission, etc., were given. Three minute addresses were given by delegates from the different unions, and many bright suggestions made.

One of the great treats of the convention was the evening public lecture by the president, Mrs. Dr. Blakely, which was illustrated by about one hundred stereopticon views of a superior character and of the greatest interest to all members and well-wishers of the Woman's Christian Temperance movement. The title of the lecture was, "The Woman's Crusade and W. C. T. U. Work." The pictures were chiefly scenes of the Crusade in Ohio, beginning with the portrait of Dr. Dio Lewis and the mother from whom he received his inspiration and the great leaders with which the Crusade originated. Officers of the Dominion and the Manitoba unions and a number of celebrated men and women in the temperance ranks are included in the gallery of persons. The historical scenes include several of very special interest and have been made from original photographs, in some cases the only ones in existence. Another feature is that of the views of some of the splendid edifices associated with the W. C. T. U., such as the Temperance Temple in Chicago and others in which several of the great conventions have been held, along with the information which Mrs. Blakely conveyed in her lecture. This panorama of the W. C. T. U. history constituted an entertainment such as has never heretofore been attempted. This original idea of hers was a great hit, for which she received many flattering commendations at the close of her lecture. It must have cost her no little time and trouble in selection and correspondence, as well as money, to get together such a collection, and her enterprise is well deserving of the public appreciation that it received. The church was crowded to the doors.

On the second day there were reports of superintendents, as follows: Y. W. C. T. U., flower mission, unfermented wine, Sabbath observance, press, juvenile work, parlor socials, etc.

The report of the resolutions committee contained several important paragraphs, including the following: "Resolved, That we wish to put on record our devout thankfulness to Almighty God for the restoration to health of the president of the World's W. C. T. U., Miss Frances E. Willard."

Carriages were placed at the disposal of the convention, and the visiting delegates were taken out for many pleasant drives about the town. The people of Carberry have been more than hospitable. There are many pretty houses in that go-ahead town. Each delegate was quite certain she was billeted at the nicest place in town, and one gentleman was heard to say that he was sure the best looking delegate was staying at his place.

The second evening's program was a Demorest gold medal contest—the first held in the province. It was a tremendous success; if any unions feel that they are not quite sure whether their life is worth living let them get up a medal contest and watch the results. The church was filled to overflowing; many were unable to get in. The recitations were listened to with intense interest by young and old, and as a direct result many names have been given in to the ladies of the union, one lady getting three names that night. Seven girls were the contestants. Sitting beside me was a gentleman on whose knee sat a little chap about three years old who applauded as eagerly as any of us—"A little child shall lead them." The winner of the medal was Miss Emma Polk, of Winnipeg. The musical program was given by the Loyal Tem-

The officers elected for the ensuing year were: President, Mrs. W. D. Ruttan, Manitoba; Mrs. McClung, Trehome, reëlected vice-president; corresponding secretary, Mrs. G. P. Dolsen, Winnipeg; recording secretary, Mrs. B. Playfair, Baldur; treasurer, Miss E. Cora Hind, Winnipeg.

An important report by the superintendent of work among foreigners was read and some excellent recommendations given, urging particularly the necessity of going to work as soon as a foreigner came into the country and try and win him to Christ and temperance.

A paper was read on the License law of the province, which set forth clearly what could be done by temperance people when they wished to prevent anyone from getting a license to sell liquor.

Taken altogether the convention was a great success; the Rev. Mr. Scarlett, who was present during the afternoon session, when introduced, commended the ladies on the success of the convention, and expressed the opinion that they disposed of business of importance and grappled with difficult questions with an efficiency and celerity he had never seen equaled in a Methodist conference. A great amount of business was transacted through the prompt and parliamentary manner in which the presiding officer conducted the affairs.

The Hockey club and Football club of Carberry are composed of temperance young men. The town council arranged to hold their regular meeting an hour earlier to enable them to attend the Demorest medal contest. One thing was noticeable, a great many men attended the night meetings.

A good many numbers of the Woman's Journal were distributed and a large increase in the number of Journals and UNION SIGNALS taken were reported, also a great increase in the paid-up membership of the province, as is shown by the fact that it has grown from 202 in 1892, to 731 in 1894. The next place of convention will be Neepawa.

STATE CONVENTION.

The beautiful new Presbyterian church in Portage presented an unwonted scene in its vicinity, the morning of June 5, 1894. On the four walks leading toward it groups of bright-faced women were walking as if intent on some object, and the observant person would have noticed a bow of white ribbon worn by each.

From 9:30 to 10:15 a. m. was devoted to a consecration meeting led by Mrs. Katharine S. Lewis, Hudson, our state evangelist; through it we were spiritually awakened and ready to take up the duties of the day to the best of our ability.

Fifteen minutes at each opening service was given to devotions, and one-half hour each day to a Bible reading, closing with the noon-tide prayer.

The report of the corresponding secretary was cheerful in tone, although we were fifty dollars less in dues than last year, owing, no doubt, to the lack of attention given the work during the summer of 1893, when so much thought and time were given to the Columbian Fair. The paid-up state membership is 4,002 and, happily, we have not lost our former number of delegates to the National.

The interest in temperance, and the desire to do something by which conditions may be changed, were never so manifest as during the past year, and the harvest seems nearly ripe. Are we preparing for the reaping?

It seems to me that a different individuality is required for the reaping, and that may account for the fact that so many do not see the fruits of their labor, while another enters in and finds the fruit ready to harvest. If it were not for the inward blessing we receive as we pass along, sowing the seed, such a condition of affairs would seem unjust; however, I cannot understand why we should feel aggrieved if our work is not recognized here for what we think is its real value, if we are really endeavoring to lay up our treasures "where moth and rust do not corrupt."

The superintendents of departments made good reports of work done, but were sure if the local superintendents would more generally report to them a much better showing would be made.

The departments of systematic giving, school of methods and normal class of the L. T. L. were taken up and superintendents appointed.

A W. C. T. U. school of methods (or, as some prefer to call it, a normal class) will be conducted in connection with the Monona Lake Assembly, July 23 to August 8. Mrs. Helen G. Rice, Boston, will lead, assisted by our state president and other Wisconsin white-ribboners.

It was decided to continue the work for homeless children in connection with the Children's Home Society of Wisconsin. The superintendent of that work in one union placed seventeen children during the year.

A motion to re-district according to congressional lines was carried by a small majority, giving us ten districts instead of nine.

The election of general officers resulted as follows: President, Mrs. Vie H. Campbell, Evansville; vice-president, Dr. Annette J. Shaw, Eau Claire; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Maria F. Hanchett, Madison; recording secretary, Mrs. Augusta E. Strong, Baraboo; treasurer, Mrs. Hetta Sue Hastings, Green Bay.

Mrs. Hanchett was also reëlected editor of The Motor, organ of the Wisconsin W. C. T. U.

The first evening was given to the reports of district presidents and the president's address; but when nine women are invited to speak concerning the work in their districts, without limitation of time, why—the president's address was not given until three p. m. the next day. My conscience admonishes me here that several delightful musical numbers were rendered during the evening, and the devotions at the opening and the collection at the close all helped to consume the time.

The second evening Mrs. Louise S. Rounds, president Illinois W. C. T. U., gave one of her strong, convincing lectures, having first read a portion of the 32d chapter of Deuteronomy. Her address gave so much satisfaction that the Portage union invited her to speak for them the night after the close of convention, which she consented to do.

The collection speech was beautifully given in a recitation by the little daughter of Mrs. Fannie K. Earle, Lake Mills.

The third evening was occupied by the Young Woman's Branch, with their state secretary, Mrs. Maude R. Barkey, West Superior, presiding. Miss Bertha Hanson, Ft. Howard, read the Scripture lesson and Miss Lois Russell, Eau Claire, led in prayer.

Mrs. Barkey spoke on the "Position and Power of Young Womanhood," calling upon Miss Marion Peak, Green Bay, to speak of the influence the Y's may have with the children, and Miss Bertha Rich, assistant pastor of the Congregational church, La Crosse, to speak of the influence the young women may have in the church for temperance. Miss Henrietta Bevett, Madison, sang a flower song from the Y song book, and Mrs. Louise S. Rounds, Illinois, closed the enjoyable evening with prayer.

The plans of work recommended were: That each union adopt for the coming year the Scriptural promise found in Isaiah 41:13, as its motto: "For I, the Lord thy God, will hold thy right hand, saying unto thee, Fear not, I will help thee."

That increased effort be made along evangelistic lines.

That every member of the W. C. T. U. be invited to subscribe for The Motor.

That scientific temperance instruction in the public schools be vigorously urged, that the work be presented to the teachers at county institutes and public schools presented with Mrs. Hunt's "Monthly Advices."

That all work along educational lines be emphasized more strongly.

That women prepare themselves to intelligently and wisely use the ballot and also exercise the right they now have in this line.

That we petition for the establishment of a state reformatory for women; and petition the Board of Regents to establish a department of household science in the State University.

That, in view of the enlarged quarters, and the increasing demand for the reception of inmates into the Wisconsin W. C. T. U. Home, the appropriation for its support be increased to meet the needs of the work. (The appropriation was increased from $900 to $1,200.)

That we seek to thoroughly organize the counties, thereby preparing the way for a discontinuance of district organization.

That the full name of our organization and its divisions be used, rather than W. C. T. U., Y's, L. T. L.

That each local union send at least one member to our school of methods at Monona Lake Assembly, and if this is not possible, let each county union send one.

That we emphasize the importance of wearing the bow of white upon all occasions.

That hereafter we display the American flag at our annual, district and county conventions, remembering that our war is for native land as well as for God and home.

The resolutions protest against the licensing, manufacture and sale of liquor, tobacco and opium, and in seeking to extend its traffic; against gambling in every form; against the use of the pictures of women in trade marks and advertisements of liquor and tobacco, on billboards and in saloons; against the methods used by liquor and tobacco dealers to create an appetite for these poisons.

Declared for the preservation of our civil Sunday, for the ballot in the hands of women, and that we continue more zealously than ever before to urge this reform, and pledged our moral support to that political party which in its platform and by its ballots declares for the protection of the home against the saloon, and for the enfranchisement of women.

For a law prohibiting gambling and the selling or giving away of intoxicating liquors within one mile of the State University at Madison.

Declared its belief that one standard of morality is equally binding upon men and women, and that immoral conduct which debase the one from public and social life, should also debar the others.

That we believe the Temperance Temple, as National headquarters, and as a source of revenue to both the National and state unions, is an enterprise worthy of our great society, and as the questions in regard to its management and ultimate ownership by the National have been satisfactorily answered, that this convention express its hearty endorsement of the undertaking, and, if we cannot pledge our active coöperation, we will, at least, endeavor not to hinder its progress.

That as we realize that the happiness and prosperity of a nation depend upon the moral standard of its people—for the sake of posterity and the preservation of the sacred ties of home, we protest against the continuance in public life of W. P. C. Breckinridge of Kentucky.

NOTES.

A welcome letter from Mrs. Amy Kellogg Morse, St. Louis, expressing her love and interest in the members of the Wisconsin W. C. T. U., of whom she was president for many years, was read, and a telegram and letter voicing the love and good-will of the convention were sent in return.

Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge, corresponding secretary of the National, sent a telegram of greeting which was promptly responded to.

Mrs. Augusta E. Strong, our recording secretary, who has served us for many years, was presented by the delegates with a jet pin, its bangle having on one side W. C. T. U '94, on the other her initials, also with a souvenir spoon, silver with gold bowl, with the word "Portage" in net-work on the handle.

A letter from Mrs. Annie J. Bradbury, Milwaukee, whom we all missed from convention, was read, and a telegram sent in response. Her reply is found in Isaiah 54:17.

Greetings from the state Inter-collegiate Prohibition Association at Appleton were presented by Miss Robinson of Platteville.

Mother Williams, now a resident of Tomah, formerly of New York, one of the old "Crusaders," was introduced and cordially greeted.

The Rush Light, a little paper published by the members of the Loyal Temperance Legion of Milwaukee, price twenty cents per year, is very interesting reading, containing an account of the work and aspirations of the Legioners.

The musical part of the program was unexceptional. Portage boasts of a large number of musical artists and Mrs. Eleanor L. Terry, Waukesha, also assisted in the feast of sweet sounds and noble sentiments.

HERE AND THERE.

Seattle Central union reports the loss of their president by a change of residence, Mrs. M. R. P. Johnson. Her successor is Mrs. T. L. Robarts, who was corresponding secretary, leaving that office to be filled jointly by the president and the recording secretary.

Mother's meetings, under the supervision of Mrs. Olive B. Rogerson, are held regularly, and an encouraging interest is manifested in this union. The superintendent of parlor meetings resigned, and this department was given into the hands of a committee. They have made it very successful.

A faithful superintendent of temperance literature supplies the depots and three ocean steamers. She reported three hundred papers distributed last quarter, papers averaging sixteen pages each and including many UNION SIGNALS and some magazines; this gives four thousand eight hundred pages. In addition to this one thousand temperance tracts, averaging four pages each, and some not kept strict account of, would doubtless bring it up to ten thousand pages. They are satisfied they have the right woman in the right place—Mrs. H. A. Morgan.

Mrs. H. S. Rockwell, superintendent of work among sailors and soldiers, also distributes literature but gives no definite report. She does much personal work, and is very much interested in the almshouses.

Regular Sunday afternoon services are held at the Poor Farm, but not all the time under the auspices of this union, the City Mission and the churches assisting; but the meetings were inaugurated by the W. C. T. U.

In conjunction with the Century Club a woman was placed in the field for a position on the Board of Education, the union paying its share of the expenses. Many of our women worked indefatigably at the polls on election day. Though failing to elect, a good vote was polled and much experience gained.

Mrs. Delle Cox gave three lectures in Seattle, but as she came unannounced, her success was not what it would have been otherwise. We hear good reports of her work over the state. Mrs. Cox spent nearly a week in Mason county and did splendid work. She made an address at the Skokomish Indian Reservation to an audience composed of the Reservation employés, and the Indian children attending the school. It was a great novelty to the children and was sincerely appreciated by all present.

At Union City Mrs. Cox had a well attended meeting, and the attention showed the interest taken by her audience as she presented some startling statistics, telling incidents and pathetic anecdotes. It was hoped she might organize some unions at these points, but the financial depression caused the removal of some of the best families, and it was thought best to await a more favorable season.

In Shelton Mrs. Cox held a series of enthusiastic meetings. One on Sunday afternoon, and on the two succeeding evenings. One Tuesday afternoon, for the instruction of the women in union methods, she organized a Y with fifteen members and nine honoraries. To say Shelton people were delighted would not express their appreciation. Mrs. Clara Ausoege, county vice-president, says: "Some of them said to me (but as Samantha says 'It must be kep') that Mrs. Cox is the best speaker we have ever had." Ten new members were added at Shelton. A saloon-keeper attended the lectures both nights and put fifty cents in the collection. May the good work go on.

Steilacoom union was greatly revived by a visit from Mrs. M. L. T. Hidden. She gave an evening lecture and an interesting talk to the women in the afternoon.

Mrs. Cox organized three new unions in King county, Mrs. Hidden one, and we hope for more this coming year.

Cor. Secy's Notes.

Having had the privilege of representing the great white ribbon host of the United States at the reception extended to Miss Willard by the New York W. C. T. U. at the Calvary Baptist church of that city, on the evening of June 21, it was necessary to prepare "our column" while en route, and it could not therefore be from the field, but for one week, at least, must be for the field.

What are the requisite qualifications for a presidential candidate? Ex-President Harrison is professor of law in Stanford University, Cal., in which there is a law that under "no circumstances shall liquor or cigars be taken into Encina Hall," the building, where, during the last winter, Professor Harrison has had his headquarters.

The Daily Palo Alto, the college paper, had the following editorial:

"Some time ago a few bottles of wine and some cigars were stolen from the rooms of Professor Harrison in Encina Hall. It is now rumored that the committee representing the Boarding Club has been requested to pay for these things. The absurdity of such a proposition is manifest to any one who considers for a moment the facts of the case.

"In the present case the strictest rules that are in force in the hall were broken by a distinguished guest. Neither wine nor cigars are permitted to enter Encina, and now it is proposed to make the students there an insurance company for the redemption of contraband goods. What have the students there to do with making good the petty theft of some unknown person?"

Then followed protest after protest, and the students became more and more exasperated. The Encina Hall Committee met and decided to return an absolute refusal to the demand for the thirty-four dollars. Finally the college president paid the bill, and the students, in order to protect him, reluctantly indemnified him. Ex-President Harrison is shown as a law-breaker in the college in which he was a salaried teacher.

Can a law-breaker teach the justice and righteousness of law? Will he teach that all law-breakers should be punished? Does Professor Harrison truly represent the Republican party among whose devotees north are two-thirds of the ministry and male membership of the church?

Careful consideration of this item is commended to the classes in political economy of the W. C. T. U. of Colorado, organized for the definite purpose of fitting its members for the intelligent and moral exercise of the ballot; also compare with the following words of John P. St. John, whose consistent life gives them force as the law of the inner man, in perfect harmony with God's law of right and of evolution. "To legalize the saloons, we commence at the polls with a whisky ballot. And it makes no difference whether it is cast by a preacher, teacher, lay*man* (or "lay*woman*"); if it is in favor of a whisky candidate, or rum-ruled party, it is a whisky ballot just the same. Now this whisky ballot being cast for a whisky party gives us the whisky law, and the whisky law gives us the whisky saloon, see? Whisky ballot, whisky party, whisky law, whisky saloon. That's logic."

THE National W. C. T. U. will ever hold in grateful remembrance the gracious ministrations of Mrs. Mary T. Burt, president of the New York W. C. T. U., to our loved president, Frances E. Willard. Through Mrs. Burt's thoughtful effort, every arrangement was made for her greeting upon arrival from the Old World, and the public reception given at Calvary church, was the perfection of welcome, and Mrs. Burt's graceful hospitality the climax of its charm.

WE believe all friends, to the ends of the earth, will be glad to learn that Ferdinand Schumaker, Neal Dow and Charles Crittenten have, by the payment of one hundred dollars, each become life patrons of the World's W. C. T. U. Thus, the World's union can say they are ours, and in them we have delight. Our generous friend, H. H. Faxon, of Boston, also sent to the National a most generous gift.

MARY A. WOODBRIDGE.

Treasurer's Corner.

THE ENVELOPE SYSTEM AGAIN.

Just another word in continuation of last week's corner. We believe there are many friends of our cause, that would willingly help us if the opportunity were placed before them in a convincing and attractive way. The envelope system, of which I spoke last week, makes it easy to offer such an opportunity. Many would take an envelope, and promise a penny or a nickel a week, or ten cents a month, that would not, perhaps, see their way clear to join the union or pay fifty cents or a dollar as dues. One thing in favor of the system is, it is a system. So much of our giving is haphazard. We give on impulse, or when we cannot well help it, but I believe what we need in our financial methods is more conscientious regularity—giving because we believe the object is worthy, and that it is our duty, or better, our privilege, to help its furtherance. These little envelopes tell their own story, are pleasant but silent reminders to many who are friendly and only need this little nudge to their memory to contribute to the work that is as helpful to their homes as to ours. If you will give this system a trial, send two dollars to me and I shall be glad to send the box of helps.

The dimes come in occasionally, yet Babylon, L. I., sends 60 cents and wishes it was $6; Trenton, Ind., 30 cts.; Salem, $2; Parma, N. Y., 75 cts.; Sunrise W. C. T. U., Minneapolis, $1; Mrs. Crenshaw, Sprague, Wash., 25 cts.; Kendallville, Ind., $1; Mrs. Brooks, Mitchell, S. D., $1; Miss Lily Smith sends $2.73 as contributions of friends from Baptist missionary training school of the city. So the Lord is raising up friends for our W. C. T. U. There are also several 10 cent contributions from individuals.

Dues come in slowly; Michigan sends first installment, $200; Ohio another monthly payment of dues, $59.50.

Our hearts have been greatly cheered by gifts from our good brothers, Ferdinand Schumaker, Charles Crittenten, Neal Dow and Henry Faxon, for World's and National work. Such financial crises as we are passing through have their bright sides, and sometimes show us friends at their best, which prosperity does not always do.

W. C. Smalley sends a donation from Remington, Ind., Sunday-school, for our foreign mission work, of $2.50.

For all these helpful gifts we give thanks to the donors and to Him who inspires the heart with the desire to help in this trying time.

Temple Items.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

And Stephen full of faith and power, did great wonders and miracles among the people.—Acts 6:8.

J. M. Glass, chairman State Prohibition Committee, Pasadena, Cal., sends the following communication under date of June 6 to THE UNION SIGNAL: "I want to endorse what Mrs. Carse said in last week's UNION SIGNAL about the Sacramento Valley. I have traveled all over the state, have been in nearly every county, but I want to say that General Bidwell has the finest ranch in California. The six thousand five hundred acres referred to are unsurpassed for fertility, and I hope the Prohibition Syndicate will purchase the tract and subdivide for a temperance colony. The land is cheap at $90 per acre." We are glad to state from latest advices from California that everything seems favorable in regard to the formation of a temperance colony on General Bidwell's ranch. We have not the slightest doubt as soon as the details of the purchase have been completed and the land subdivided it will be quickly taken up by our temperance friends. No doubt it will be advertised through the columns of THE UNION SIGNAL, at any rate our prohibition brothers can watch the Temple Item column as it will be noted in it.

It is always a comfort to receive such communications as the following, sent by the county secretary, Mrs. C. A. Shrigley: "At the ninth annual convention of the Delaware county Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Pennsylvania, the following resolution was unanimously passed, 'Resolved, That the members of the Delaware county W. C. T. U. heartily endorse the National Woman's Christian Temperance Temple at Chicago, and recommend all the local unions to aid Mrs. Carse in her arduous work to procure means to pay for the Temple in order that the W. C. T. U. may own the building entirely.'"

The beautiful Chautauqua fountain is at last completed and in place in Willard corridors. It is even more lovely than we anticipated, of richly veined alabaster—but we must refrain from describing it until after the unveiling. It is now covered from the inquisitive eye of the public until the hand of our great but gentle leader, Miss Willard, shall sweep aside the veil. We hope by next week to state just when the unveiling will take place. Willard corridors will also contain the beautiful Japanese bell presented to the National W. C. T. U., by the temperance people of Japan. It was greatly admired at the World's Fair, and stood in the Woman's Building in the National W. C. T. U. booth. It was cast from the pipes of over one thousand men who renounced smoking.

How refreshing it is these hard times to receive without mutilation a $100 check for the Temple fund. The W. C. T. U. of Dover, N. H., refreshed our eyes lately with a check for that amount—the gift is for the purpose of placing the name of Mrs. Marilla M. H. Hilles, of Dover, N. H., on a tablet in Willard Hall. Mrs. A. V. Bristow, Tracy, Minn., sends $10 to be credited to the Tracy W. C. T. U. on their hundred dollar pledge; this makes $42 this union has now paid. The W. C. T. U. of Mannington, W. Va., sends a pledge signed by their president and secretary for $100. The treasurer, Mrs. M. J. Hough, enclosed a check for $16.50 to be applied on their pledge. She writes that the union has just been formed. It is evidently a good, healthy union, born not to die early, as it gives evidence of its life by its works. Mrs. Nancy Titus, superintendent Temple work for Crawford county, Ill., sends $20 as a first installment on a hundred dollar pledge for Crawford county. Mrs. Emma L. Shapter, treasurer Summit, N. J., W. C. T. U., sends $10 to be applied on the hundred dollar pledge of the union. The Allston W. C. T. U., Boston, Mass., sends through Mrs. C. H. Abell, $10 on pledge.

All persons sending $1 to the Temple will receive the beautiful Columbian souvenir. Any individual who fills a mite-box during 1894 will receive a solid silver Temple souvenir teaspoon. This, however, does not apply to persons filling boxes for unions; they receive the Columbian souvenir. All money orders and checks should be made out in the name of William D. Preston, and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara G. Johnson, the Temple, Chicago, Ill. All orders for mite-boxes and everything pertaining to the Temple should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, the Temple, Chicago, Ill.

The popular mind is awake to the physical benefits and pleasures of wheeling as never before. Fashion has set the seal of its approval on the safety bicycle as a means of out-door exercise. To be in "good form," ride a Columbia, which is the standard of bicycle excellence, combining in the highest degree every essential quality of design and construction. It is a wheel of lightness, grace, and beauty, with great speed and durability, and is fully guaranteed in every particular. A HYGIENIC NECESSITY.

That the highest mental and moral attainment depends upon the best physical conditions, is coming to be recognized by all scientific authorities, and others who are giving their thought and study to humanity's best development and welfare. "A sound body for a sound mind" is found to be a prerequisite, and it is freely conceded that nothing so conduces to this end as the frequent and liberal use of the bath. The old Romans, whose physical perfections were a source of just pride, fully appreciated this fact, as was fully illustrated in their lavish outlay in their noted public baths, which have not been paralleled in modern times, although they were available only to the favored classes.

Sandow, "the mighty," who affords such a remarkable type of a physically perfect man, states in a recent magazine article, that he considers the bath as essential to health as eating, and should be indulged in quite as often.

The rapidity with which the bath for individual apartments, as well as family use, has come into favor with the wealthy, as well as the fact that no home is now considered by thoughtful and well informed persons as complete unless provided with this sanitary necessity, has given a wonderful impetus to inventive genius and skill in this line, not the least important study of which has been to provide a bath service adapted to the wants and requirements of all classes, from the mansion to the cottage, in the city as well as the country. Perhaps no more signal success has been recently achieved in any department of mechanical science than that with which this want has been met by the Folding Bath Tub, a unique and practical idea, directly in line with the folding bed, now so universally popular, furnishing such superior advantages as to carry conviction to the minds of all who look into their merits. It being admitted that "cleanliness is next to godliness," and that whatever tends to the purity of life and character in the home should be encouraged, we know of nothing which we more cheerfully welcome to our columns than the advertisement of the Mosely Folding Bath Tub Co., to which we call the attention of our readers, with the assurance that, from personal information, we know this article to be worthy of entire confidence. A number of various styles are made, as to which and other details the manufacturers will cheerfully furnish full information upon application to the address indicated in their advertisement.

You will find the "White Ribbon Hymnal" a great help in temperance meetings and song services. Price 35c.

PRESENT FROM CHICAGO.

Queen Victoria Receives the Sketch of Mme. Willard, Mother of Frances Willard.

LONDON, June 22.

The Queen has received a belated birthday present in the form of an elegantly bound volume entitled "A Great Mother," and giving a lengthy and elaborately illustrated sketch of the family and life of Madam Willard, mother of Miss Frances Willard, who died a year ago at Evanston, Ill. The introduction is by Lady Henry Somerset, who is also the donor of the work to Her Majesty. It bears the imprint of the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association of Chicago.

CHICAGO RECORD, JUNE 22.

A biography of Madam Willard, written by Frances E. Willard and Minerva Brace Norton, is published by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association and comes out under the title of "A Great Mother."

While there is so much talk about woman's suffrage going on, it is restful and refreshing to review a volume that points out the great responsibility of motherhood. The training of the youthful, undeveloped mind, or the formation of a child's character is no small task, and is, after all, a more worthy duty than making a weak effort to assist the affairs of a nation.

Madam Willard filled the rôle of schoolmistress and house-mother perfectly. Her keen insight into character, her tender regard for childhood, her cheerful spirituality and her deep, unfailing understanding of young life in all its phases make a charming study.

There are thousands of Madam Willards in the United States to-day. They will never have books written about them, but their tender, loving care and their gentle, motherly training will bear golden fruits in the man and woman of the morrow. So let them not despair even if the ballot is ever kept just beyond the reach of their pink finger-tips.

A GREAT MOTHER, Sketches of Madam Willard by her daughter, Frances E. Willard, and her kinswoman, Minerva Brace Norton, with an introduction by Lady Henry Somerset. Twenty-one illustrations. This can scarcely be called a biography of Madam Willard, but it has all the essentials of one, and serves the same purpose. Hers was a beautiful life, a beautiful death, and a beautiful heritage to all who still live to do honor to her sainted memory. These memorials are very full, very touching, very inspiring. There are many extracts from her journal and from the journals of her family; many eulogies upon her during her life and after her death, by a great number of friends and contemporaries; many descriptions of her by those who knew her best. The book is dedicated to the White Ribbon Women of the world, and their husbands and children, and will doubtless be of much good in extending the influence of a truly noble life and character. A STEP FORWARD

COMMENCING with the July number, 1894, OAK AND IVY LEAF—our young woman's paper—enters upon a new series and a new era. The old title gives place to the new.

The paper is edited as for the past two years by Miss Jennie A. Stewart.

Important new departments are conducted by young women especially fitted for the task. "Kindred Societies" will be treated by Miss Frances H. Ensign, an able writer and the well-known state secretary of the Ohio Y. W. C. T. U. Miss Ada M. Melville, book reviewer of THE UNION SIGNAL, an author and editor of The Young Crusader, will tell what to read among the choice publications of the day. A "College Corner" will be conducted by Miss Elva Hulburd Young, of Wellesley College.

A home department is provided. News of the month in temperance, religious, political and educational circles is a new feature. The Social, Y Round Table, and Helping Hand departments of Oak and Ivy Leaf are continued. Stories, poems, brief biographical and special articles by well-known writers are on the bill of fare.

Young men are not forgotten and have a special column to themselves, besides the whole paper.

Altogether you'll agree we have an attractive paper, well worthy to be read by young and old, of every class and creed.

Will you not prepare to give a cordial welcome and a prompt support to this new evidence of enthusiastic endeavor and final victory for our great cause?

BOWDOIN college has celebrated its centenary.

AT the Omaha gathering of the Congregational Home Missionary Society, an entire session was given over to the women, and conducted so well that it was considered "the great hour" of the meeting.

CHICAGO'S common council has earned commendation by passing a law against selling cigarettes to minors over the mayor's veto. The Massachusetts legislature has under consideration a bill to the same effect.

IN paying the World's Fair ten per cent dividend, 17,385 checks for varying sums, one, two, five and ten dollars, were sent out. Half a million dollars went to the city, and $123,643 to the Columbian Museum for stock donated to it.

IMMIGRANTS to the number of 352,885 landed at Ellis Island during 1893. Fifteen per cent of the total could not read nor write, and the proportion of illiterates among the Italians was forty-four per cent. Men represented two-thirds of the total number.

A CONSTANTLY increasing yield of the precious metals is shown by the figures of the Director of the Mint for 1893, recently submitted to Congress. Africa's product of gold increased by five million dollars and the United States by nearly three million over 1892. $35,955,000 in gold and $77,575,757 in silver represents the total product of the United States for 1893.

A WOMAN again leads off in mathematical honors at Cambridge. Miss Johnson, of Newham, England, should rightfully be given the degree of Senior Wrangler. This, however, is against the rules of the ancient university, so the honor is conferred upon two young men, twin seconds in the race. Such absolute disregard of well-earned rights on the part of the old and honored university is beyond comprehension.

THE condition of Scotch and English laundresses, as pointed out in an English exchange, is most distressing, and the new factory bill before Parliament is welcomed as an ameliorating measure. Many work in small, steaming rooms, standing on wet floors, in soaked garments, in a temperature of eighty degrees, from twelve to seventeen hours a day. No wonder thirst is engendered, intemperance rules and consumption and rheumatism are common.

THE Manchester ship canal, so recently opened in England, is another gigantic enterprise, laden with financial difficulties by enormous expenditures, and now disgraced by charges of incompetency and extravagance. The canal was to be completed in four years, at a cost of eight and a half million pounds. It occupied nine years and fifteen million pounds were invested. When the difficulties are all surmounted, as they must be by English grit and capital, the waterway will be a great boon to commercial traffic.

EIGHT women in all have been ordained as ministers in the Baptist church. The Baptist Examiner does not see fit to recognize them in this capacity, believing that according to the New Testament, women cannot be duly qualified candidates. In this connection The Congregationalist pointedly remarks, "The teachings of the New Testament which might be cited as excluding women from the ministry, would exclude her also from the office of Christian teacher, a position which she is filling acceptably in so many places and forms that she long since silenced objections.

ISABELLA OF CASTILE, by Major-General O. O. Howard, is a valuable history, whose appearance is timely since fresh in the minds of readers and students is the history of Columbus and his period. "While we are wreathing the brow of the great Genoese with those unfading laurels that peoples of the twelfth generation are bringing to him and those connected with him, let not his patroness be kept in the background." The life of Isabella is full of thrilling interest, and though we frown on her for her relation to the Inquisition and her consent to the expulsion of the Jews, we cannot but pay high tribute to her many noble qualities, and wonder, that beset on every hand as she was by temptation and perplexity, she ruled with such a just and merciful spirit.

It is bright and helpful in style and matter, and each Y should supply herself with a goodly number that she may have one always at hand, ready to give to the zealous Christian Endeavorer, Epworth Leaguer, or King's Daughter or Son, who can see "no use in a Y."

"The Trip Around the World Portfolios are simply beautiful, and we enjoy every one with keenest delight. I thank you for making it possible for me to buy them."

I have read with deepest interest the book "A GREAT MOTHER." It seems to me every mother ought to own that book and study it. There is a world of inspiration in the book. It makes one feel that

"Life is real—life is earnest,
And the grave is not its goal,—
Dust thou art, to dust returnest
Was not spoken of the soul."

The life of a woman like Mrs. Willard is full of suggestion in regard to the possibilities of every life, however overfreighted with care. I hope you will do all in your power to place this valuable book in every household, where mothers may ponder it and where daughters may be inspired to noble living.

Most sincerely your friend,

THE beautiful poem on the contributed page was written by Phœbe A. Hanaford, who is, by the way, a cousin of Mrs. Mary B. Woodbridge. The name was inadvertently omitted.

SIR WILLIAM VERNON HARCOURT announced in the House of Commons last week that the Local (liquor) Veto bill would be brought forward before the adjournment of Parliament. This is particularly good news, as the temperance people feared their measure was once more relegated to the rear of the procession of reform.

THE annual conference of the Methodist church of Nova Scotia has just declared for "equal rights for women in church and state." Canada seems to be heading the columns of advance on both the prohibition and woman questions. All honor to the great Dominion!

REV. J. C. FERNALD, Prohibition Park, West New Brighton, N. Y., is the superintendent of the new Bureau of Literature created by the International Temperance congress, recently held at Staten Island, and all money for this purpose and orders for literature should be sent directly to him and not to the W. T. P. A.

THE Suffrage committee of the New York state constitutional convention decided against the ballot for women by a vote of thirteen to four. On the recommendation of a sub-committee, it is probable that the question will be submitted to the electors. At any rate the discussion will unavoidably come before the open convention, the "floodgates of oratory" will be opened, and we predict that the eloquent arguments of the supporters of the measure will win the day for equal suffrage.

GOVERNOR TILLMAN has announced his intention of re-opening the dispensaries of South Carolina August 1. His warmest supporters do not favor this action, as they fear that there will be more blood shed than in last April even, for there are hosts of people in the Palmetto state who believe in law as well as many who are opposed to the dispensaries. The supreme court has decided that the dispensaries are illegal. If Governor Tillman attempts to re-open them as a test case, he will commit nothing short of a flagrant violation of the law, and armed resistance must follow.

IF we had not seen the list with our own eyes, we could not have believed that the National Teachers' Association has not chosen a woman among its officers, not even in the nominal position of one of the vice-presidents; and yet, between eighty and ninety per cent of the teachers in our public schools are women. The question is how self-respecting men can do a thing like that or how self-respecting women can sit by and see it done. THE UNION SIGNAL invites correspondence concerning this strange obliquity of mental vision that has made reasonable men squint at the human race—seeing but half of it.

MONSIGNOR SATOLLI, the Pope's representative in this country, has made a remarkable announcement which is the best news that the temperance cause has heard for many a day. It is nothing less than approval of the expulsion of liquor dealers from Catholic societies. This gratifying decision was called forth by an appeal from the ruling of Bishop Watterson, of Columbus, O., expressed as follows: "I hereby withdraw my approbation from any and every Catholic society in this diocese that has a liquor-dealer or saloon-keeper at its head, or anywhere among its officers; and I suspend every such society itself from the ranks and privileges as a Catholic society until it ceases to be so officered. No one who is engaged either as principal or agent in the manufacture or sale of intoxicating liquors should be admitted to membership." Monsignor Satolli sustains Bishop Watterson's position in these words: "The liquor traffic, and especially as conducted here in the United States, is the source of much evil, hence the Bishop was acting within his rights in seeking to restrict it. Therefore the delegate apostolic sustains Bishop Watterson's action and approves of his circular and regulation concerning saloons and the expulsion of saloon-keepers from membership in Catholic societies." While this refers technically to the diocese of Columbus alone, its moral influence is unbounded, and it is undoubtedly the most important action on the liquor traffic taken for a long time in this country, being so acknowledged by Catholic and Protestant leaders.

FERDINAND SCHUMACHER did well to point out that the strike was voted in a saloon after an all-night debate, with which no doubt, potations mingled. If the strike were against the saloon, and the men who want better conditions for wage workers would peaceably vote together, we should soon see daylight on the vexing problems that now look portentous to the patriot.

MRS. HAUSER, our president in 1893 of the India W. C. T. U., who amid many difficulties organized twenty-five local societies, is now in Auburndale, Mass., (address care of La Salle Seminary). Mrs. Hauser is open to engagements at summer meetings, state conventions, or in localities, and our societies can work up a "benefit" for themselves by means of her illustrated talks on the women of the Orient and the temperance question—young ladies in each locality wearing costumes provided by Mrs. Hauser, who will superintend the entertainment and "do the talking." We advise our societies wishing "to turn an honest penny" to take especial note of this announcement.

MUCH of the contents of our editorial pages this week, if no mention of the fact were made, would announce to our readers Miss Willard's return to THE UNION SIGNAL sanctum. No other pen writes words of such beauty and breadth, such conciliation and cheer as hers. Not that she actually sits at an office desk and drives her pen eight hours a day, but that from her quiet Evanston home she sends to her confréres the best of counsel and suggestion, and dictates to her stenographer the thoughts that teem with Christian courage and a world-wide observation and experience. Miss Willard and Miss Gordon came directly to Chicago from the Christian Endeavor Convention at Cleveland, arriving the evening of July 16. They were met several miles out of the city by a small party of old-time associates, and escorted to Rest Cottage. The week at home has been filled with duties and delights, about equally balanced, and it is good to know that the "Great Mother's" memory is a benediction to the daughter in sweet Rest Cottage. Ere this is read, Miss Willard will probably be ensconced again in her Eagle's Nest, or "Catskill Eden," as she loves to call it. In this quiet, cool spot, she will, with God's blessing, complete the recuperation which we rejoice to see so far advanced, and prepare for an autumn campaign of temperance endeavor.

THE Prohibition convention at Montreal, Canada, July 3 to 5, was a great success both as to numbers and results. Independent voting by Prohibitionists was declared for, but not a separate party. Woman suffrage was endorsed and our own Mrs. Ella F. M. Williams, president of the Dominion W. C. T. U., and Mrs. Edith Archibald, president of the Maritime union, were at the fore, and Miss Scott, editor of the Young Woman's Journal, was among the delegates. General Neal Dow was present and was received with every mark of reverence and gratitude. The elections in Ontario have been very encouraging to Prohibitionists. The plebiscites originated with our temperance forces in Manitoba and have swept over Canada, developing most gratifying and unexpected strength. As Mr. F. A Spence, our standard bearer in Toronto, declared in an effective speech, "The plebiscites have had two incidental results of exceeding significance, they have united the best elements of the English and French, Catholic and Protestant, Grit and Tory, as one man for temperance, and they have opened the pocket-book of the people to give to the cause as never before." "Our brother in black," J. H. Hector, made two of his inimitable addresses before the convention; he is a prime favorite in Canada. The loss of Rev. Dr. George Douglas, the Dominion's favorite orator, was tenderly referred to. Mrs. Letitia Youmans sent a ringing message from her sick-bed, and Anna Gordon pledged the young folks of the Loyal Temperance Legion.

A WELCOME FROM SOROSIS.

(Read at Miss Willard's welcome meeting in New York, June 21.)

Sorosis welcomes thee from lands afar,
And hails thy coming to thy native shore;
Thou whose strong Faith outmatched Hope's gleaming star,
Till stronger Love brought victories evermore!
Student and teacher, who, with steadfast trust,
Laid all upon Ambition's holiest shrine,
And served thy sex, impelled by Love's high "must,"
With zeal inspired by the Power Divine;
Sorosis welcomes thee, and claims her place
Among the channels where thy love shall flow,
And looks with joy again upon thy face
Ere thou, high-called, around the world shalt go!
Take to thy heart our loving welcome here,
Bear on thy way our word of hallowed cheer.
Sorosis looks beyond the stormy seas,
With vision like thine own, clear-eyed and far,
And speaks with prophet-gladness of the time
When Right and Might shall be no more at war;
And, recognizing, in a life like thine,
The consecrated energy of will,
Subordinate alone to Truth Divine,
Urges thee on till His great "Peace, be still,"
Shall sound above the surging waves of time,
And welcomes thee to rest earth never gave.

"TONY."

II.

BY ELIZABETH CUMINGS.

Mrs. Joycox contemplated her neat kitchen with a lingering glance of affection and pride, and it must be admitted, some dismay. "I've said I would take a girl that was clean and would promise to mind, and that wasn't a Catholic, and I'll keep my promise even if it does kill me," she said to the lean little man already in the buggy, and beside whom she climbed laboriously, for she was, as she had to admit herself, "hefty." "But if I live through the next fornit I guess I'll live out my appointed time, for I'd ruther take a whippin' any time o' day an' to have a passel of strange children around."

Mr. Jaycox being stone deaf only answered this outpouring by saying: "G'lang, Foxy," at which the well-kept bay started at a brisk trot which set Mrs. Jaycox's calash waving over her face. "But what can you do?" she whimpered shrilly, half to herself and half to her irresponsive spouse. "There's the new minister a urgin', an' the Woodards have agreed to take some, and even old Elkanah Hitt."

"Old Hitt promised to take some, has he!" cried Mr. Jaycox, suddenly hearing enough to set his mind going. He always had spells of hearing when out-of-doors. "Mebbe he'll keep his promise and mebbe he won't. It'll be jist as he can make most. Needn't talk to me about old Hitt," he continued, as his wife shook her head at him. "Don't care if he has jined the church. It'll take sights of convertin' to make any change in him. Hope if he does take a child it'll be a tough 'un."

The platform at Ferndale was full of expectant watchers. Ferndale, it should be explained, was little more than a station, a store, and a blacksmith shop. It had never entertained waifs from the city till the summer before this story opens, and did not half like it. It was a poor region given over to huckleberry bushes, and scrub pine in its natural state, but producing unexpected crops if laboriously tilled. Mr. and Mrs. Jaycox arrived just as the train pulled up, and had small opportunity to exchange greetings with their acquaintances. But Obediah Jaycox could see if he could not hear, and he noted the object of his special dislike, Elkanah Hitt, was present. The children trooped out, shy and scared. Last of all came a black-eyed, black-haired lad, evidently very weak from recent illness. All were speedily tolled off to their respective entertainers till only the black-eyed lad remained. Mr. Hitt and his two gray horses had somehow disappeared. The Rev. Mr. Todd wet his pencil and looked nervously over his memorandum book. "You was to have a,—ah, girl?" he said hesitatingly to Mrs. Jaycox, who stood quite alone at one side of the platform, her husband having gone on out into the ferns where the station-master's voice rose in loud irritation over Mr. Hitt's "scootin' off."

"Yes, a girl," said Mrs. Jaycox with decision. "I told you so three times." A gentle voice said with a sigh at her elbow, "Oh, I am sorry. I wish, madam, you would like boys."

Mrs. Jaycox's heart melted, but she would not turn her head. Her husband came stamping noisily back. "Ma," said he, "it's just as I said. Elkanah's lit out." Then catching sight of Tony, he cried, "Eh! this is the boy!"

Tony not understanding his situation took off his cap and made a bow. He wanted desperately to weep. His legs trembled under him and as Mrs. Jaycox turned he lost consciousness.

"Poor lamb," cried that good woman. "What a mercy old Hitt didn't get him!" and she gathered him in her arms.

An hour later, refreshed with milk and eggs, Tony was borne out across a sandy plain, then up, up a rocky hill to the quaintest little red farm-house in the region, and that night, for the first time in all his recollection, he slept in a real bed. It was to be sure a plain room, that chamber over the kitchen. But it was sweet with bunches of sweet clover and in at the open window drifted delicious scents of pinks, of dew-wet grass and the "Whew! Whew!" of the flicker calling to his mate in the red elm. And the blue walls were spotless, and so too were the muslin curtains, the bits of carpet, and the old-fashioned rush-bottomed chairs. Twins, a boy and a girl, had been born to Mr. and Mrs. Jaycox twenty years before. The girl had died in infancy and the boy had lived to be fifteen. First one aged relative and then another had found refuge under their roof, but youth had been kept from it, and the good woman stepping about getting breakfast thought of the little fellow upstairs with tremulous misgivings.

"He is foreign," she told Zenas Chase, the withered-up hired man. Zenas despised all foreigners, for reasons too numerous to go into. "And he's a Catholic, I'm certain, but he's a sufferin' child whatever he is."

"Well, I 'spose we'll live through it somehow," said Zenas, rebukingly. He considered the presence of a boy a personal grievance, but it was he who at the end of the two weeks suggested that Tony remain another fortnight, and who got an invitation for Mikey Roach to visit the Browns, who occupied the next farm.

When the leaves were turning scarlet a family moved into the cottage long unused on that Brown farm. It was Mikey's stepmother and the children. Tony and Mikey sat on a stump after multitudinous "chores" were done and talked about it. "I shall earn money, for I am going to be an artist one of these days," said Tony. "But I shall be a farmer, too. Zenas says I weed onions beautiful. And I shall take poor boys to live with me, then there'll not be so many in such places as St. Johns street. It is strange it is so, but there are too many in one place and not enough in others."

"Thrue, b'yes an' girls, both," said Mikey, recollecting Bertha Oleson and Janey Higgs and the rest.

"Yes," assented Tony. "And, Mikey,——"

"Yes, me jewil,——"

"I'd a died if you hadn't a got me out o' St. Johns street."

"There's no tellin' but ye wud," admitted Mikey, scratching his big, round head, "an' thin, whur'd I be, an' Peter, an' th' rist. Mother o' God, Tony, how wees hang on wan nail!"

THE GOTHENBURG SYSTEM.

III.

BY REV. CARL F. ELTZHOLTZ.

When I visited Gothenburg some years ago I received no favorable impression of the efficiency of the Gothenburg system as a temperance measure—as such it is a failure. This is better explained by the following report of a meeting called together at Gothenburg in the workingmen's grand hall for the purpose of discussing the Gothenburg system, which I translate from the minutes issued by the Gothenburg Total Abstinence Society (April, 1877–July, 1879). About one thousand people—mostly workingmen—were present. The following questions were after free discussion answered as stated below:

1. Have the speakers of this meeting generally expressed themselves for or against the Gothenburg system?

Answer: Against.

2. Has drunkenness decreased in this community since this system was adopted?

Answer: No. (A number of voices: It has rather increased.)

3. Are the workingmen generally in better pecuniary circumstances on account of the beneficial influence of this system?

Answer: No.

4. Is there less opportunity for drinking now than under the former system?

Answer: No.

5. Is it the desire of this meeting to ask the managers of the Gothenburg dispensaries to revoke some of their dispensaries now in operation?

To this was unanimously answered: Yes.

When this application was sent to the managers it received no other answer than the establishing of one more dispensary. While I do not regard the above answers as conclusive evidence against the Gothenburg system, I believe them to be of sufficient importance to be admitted in this connection to prove that the Gothenburg system is a failure as a temperance measure.

The English Foreign office has published a report of the working of the Gothenburg system in Sweden, made by Sir F. Plunkett to the Earl of Roseberry, dated Stockholm, January 20, 1893. In this report it is said, according to the London Temperance Record, that the working of the system in Sweden continues to be "as completely satisfactory as ever." That this system is satisfactory to some is admitted, but we have already seen that the Gothenburg system can never give satisfaction as a temperance measure. It is interesting to notice that this report which calls the Gothenburg system "completely satisfactory," goes on to say: "The Gothenburg system affects the sale of spirits only, and has no control over that of beer. Moreover, it practically affects only the sale of spirits to the poor or the lower artisan class. Its provisions do not affect those sufficiently well off to purchase one litre of spirits at a time, which they can take home and drink how and when they choose; but it does throw difficulties in the way of procuring spirits in small quantities . . . On the upper and middle classes the Gothenburg system can have no influence." Now, it is a mystery to me how Sir Plunkett can call such a system "completely satisfactory." And he continues: "The only point on which a well-to-do customer is ever inconvenienced is, that he cannot purchase, say, one-half bottle of liquor or spirits; he must purchase enough to make up the legal minimum quantity of one litre." That such an arrangement must be "completely satisfactory" to the well-to-do tipplers, who will soon be poor drunkards, can easily be imagined, but no thoughtful temperance reformer can for a moment call such a system satisfactory.

The liquor traffic under that as well as any other system continues to be as stated in the Methodist Episcopal address: "So hurtful to the home, to the church, and to the body politic, and so utterly antagonistic to all that is precious in life, that the only proper attitude toward it for Christians is that of relentless hostility. It can never be legalized without sin." And temperance people ought, therefore, to "accept no compromise, but demand the unconditional surrender of the rebellious business."

The liquor business as carried on under the Gothenburg system is not so inviting that American temperance people should ever desire its adoption. It is a complete failure as a temperance measure. I therefore trust that it will never be adopted in these United States. But if any of our states, nevertheless, should be induced to transplant that form of license system to American soil (where we have all the license we can handle) I should advise—

1. That the dispensaries monopolize the whole drink traffic in the state.

2. That all the surplus from the infernal traffic should go to the National treasury.

I do not believe, however, that the Gothenburg system can ever be Americanized. If any of our states should adopt this system the courts would most likely declare it to be as unconstitutional as the South Carolina dispensary law. It can easily be inferred from the decision rendered by the supreme court of that state that it is not only unconstitutional for states, but also for individuals or corporations to monopolize the liquor business, which has been built up by private individuals at considerable risk to soul and body for time and eternity.

I am opposed to the Gothenburg system because it continues to whet the degrading appetite of the drinker; it enlists and educates in a most effective manner new recruits from our homes to fill the places made vacant when the old tipplers fall into drunkards' graves; because drunkards go to perdition just as rapidly through the Gothenburg system as through high license. That there is "system" in this degrading traffic does not make it less dangerous or more desirable; because the government shows—by the adoption of this system—a partiality in favor of the drink-evil which is not shown towards other evils as fighting, murder, etc., etc. Though these evils are less dangerous than the drink evil, which is mother to a whole brood of evils, the authorities do not organize murder and fighting institutions in which these vices can be continued in a systematic manner under the protection of law; no, such evils are prohibited, while the drink traffic, the mother-evil, is not only tolerated but also put into system by the authorities; because it is trying to put a respectable stamp on a disgraceful traffic, which can never be made respectable where morality, purity, virtue and holiness reign; it is trying to hide "the decaying carcass" of the whisky monster under white and clean linen, while "its vile odors" disgust the whole community of pure-minded citizens; it is gilding the trap in which our young men are caught and destroyed, using the respectable older men as decoy-birds to entice the younger into the gilded grap; because it involves the whole community in the guilt which is inseparably connected with the drink traffic, it drags the whole community more or less in under the curse of God, who has said: "Woe unto him that giveth his neighbor drink, that puttest thy bottle to him and makest him drunken also"; and finally I am opposed to the Gothenburg system because it will stand as a formidable obstacle to temperance and prohibition; wherever the Gothenburg system is adopted Prohibitionists will have one more white-worker enemy to fight and to conquer.

The liquor traffic can never be made respectable; it can never be purified. You can put the liquor traffic under the fountain of public sentiment, Democratic or Republican; you can wash it with the soft, velvet gloved hand of high license; you can sponge it with low license, if you please; you can apply the perfumed soapsuds of local option; you can scour and rub it with the sharp sand of an Iowa Mulct law, and you can go down on your respectable knees and scrub it with a genuine Gothenburg system brush until you are tired and disgusted, but you will find to your great dismay that the more you the blacker will this black demon be. There isn't water, soap and lye enough in this wide world of ours to cleanse and purify this unclean beast. It must be destroyed. The saloon must go. Prohibition, pure and simple, is the only effective remedy. We plead for individual total abstinence from intoxicating drinks, and for National prohibition of the whole degrading liquor traffic.

Wash and rub,
Scour and scrub,

LIGHTHOUSES OF CHICAGO.

Hull House.

BY BERTHA DAMARIS KNOBE.

The passer-by along busy, bustling South Halsted street instinctively bestows a second interested glance on a commodious brick structure, with old-fashioned portico, surrounded by a paved court and enclosed by a brick wall. It is, withal, rather suggestive of a baronial home in feudal times. It is, in reality, one of the most powerful lighthouses in the seething breakers of this cosmopolitan metropolis. It is widely known as Hull House.

Hull House is a social settlement. In other words, it is a social home, a social school, a social club, a social workshop for the cultivation of the good, the true, the beautiful in human hearts. Established in a miserable, heterogeneous section of the city, its underlying purpose is by social intercourse to elevate the standard of our submerged humanity. Though but four and a half years old, it claims the distinction of being the most extensive settlement of the kind in the country. And the interested visitor is quite apt to think that of its kind it is ideal, not only in purpose but appointment.

Miss Jane Addams is the soul of Hull House. It was she who founded and furnished it, and it is she who is the guiding spirit. During a trip abroad some years ago she was much impressed with that well-known social center in the heart of London—Toynbee Hall. Upon her return, she, in conjunction with Miss Ellen G. Starr, incorporated their ideas of an ideal social settlement in Hull House. And the great success of the undertaking speaks for itself.

The noble principle of Hull House is more fully explained in the words of Miss Addams: "It represents no association, but was opened by two women, backed by many friends, in the belief that the mere foothold of a house easily accessible, ample in space, hospitable and tolerant in spirit, situated in the midst of the large foreign colonies, which so easily isolate themselves in American cities, would be in itself a serviceable thing for Chicago. Hull House endeavors to make social intercourse express the growing sense of the economic unity of society. It is an effort to add the social function to democracy. It was opened on the theory that the dependence of classes on each other is reciprocal, and as the social relation is essentially a reciprocal relation, it gave a form of expression that has peculiar value."

It is thus seen that the Divine implantation of that irresistible something which makes the whole world kin—the social instinct—is the instrument used to bring about the social, educational, industrial and moral regeneration of a polyglot neighborhood of working people—people, by the way, who are in continual contact with all the opposing influences of slum life.

The visitor to Hull House is instantly impressed with the great, the very great magnitude of the work. It seems to meet every requirement of the people it is intended to reach. And it will only be possible, in a very cursory and somewhat unsatisfactory manner, to enumerate some of the many things that Hull House is doing to help people to help themselves, for it must be remembered that it is not a charitable institution.

Hull House proper, with its spacious rooms, its attractive furnishings, its great bookcases, its real works of art, is the home of "the residents," of whom there are at present eleven. These residents are highly-educated, cultivated women who coöperate with Miss Addams, for a period of not less than six months, in teaching and directing the affairs of Hull House. Their services are entirely voluntary.

Prominent among the features of Hull House are the college extension courses. By the payment of a nominal fee, which merely covers the cost of material, there are at present two hundred and fifty students—young men and young women living in the surrounding district—in the different classes. The courses pursued are quite extensive, the most popular and continuous ones being in literature, language, music, art, history, mathematics and drawing. The instructors not merely include the residents, but there are the added, gratuitous services of college men and women, thirty-five in all.

As a supplement to study is given a regular course of lectures by capable speakers on helpful and popular themes. Many of the lecturers are from the University of Chicago. There is also a summer school at Rockford, Ill., which, with expenses at a minimum, affords a continuance of study and a delightful summer's outing.

Adjoining Hull House on the left is a building of interest. The main floor is given to an attractive, well-equipped reading-room, a branch of the city library. The upper floor is occupied by the art studios and the Hull House art gallery. Pictures of elevated tone and technical excellence adorn the walls. And here the visitor is not surprised to find a young woman copying a life-sized portrait of the beloved Miss Addams. It is in keeping with the loyal devotion accorded the noble woman in that neighborhood, and indeed throughout the city. In this gallery loan exhibits of works of genuine art are given three times a year.

The dear children are not forgotten—no, not by Hull House. In a wooden building, not far removed, one finds an interesting spectacle in the day nursery or crèche. In summer fifty babies, and in winter between thirty and forty, are daily left by wage-earning mothers, for which privilege they pay five cents a day if they can afford it. If one could understand baby talk a happy story would probably be told; otherwise one must infer from bright baby eyes and unintelligible jargon that the little charges, in neat, clean pinafores, are as happy as the day is long. The woman in charge pointed out a number of babies who had really been reared there since they were mere infants. A dining-room with low tables and tiny chairs is proof positive that these babies have a happy noonday lunch. If it is true that, despite heredity and environment, the early training given a child will mould his life, then the little toddlers in Hull House crèche have prospects for a prosperous voyage on the uncertain sea of life.

When the babies grow to three or four years of age they are transferred—promoted, as it were—to the kindergarten, equipped with all the educational accessories of happy kindergarten life.

The inner man finds satisfaction at Hull House. In a new, commodious building is an ideal bakery with a "new-fashioned, old-fashioned brick oven," as the woman in charge calls her cooking apparatus. Here are made such crisp-looking loaves of bread—sweet, scientific bread, if you please—that would be a veritable feast for a hungry man. This kitchen is connected with the coffee house that has been in successful operation less than a year. The room is an attractive copy of an English inn with a great fireplace. At cosy tables one may buy at a minimum cost appetizing viands. Coffee, soups and stews in indurated fiber cans are delivered to neighboring factories at noon. And not infrequently residents of the neighborhood supply themselves with edibles from this deservedly popular kitchen.

Opposite the coffee house is a children's dining-room, where dinners are served to school children upon presentation of tickets which have been sold to their mothers for five cents each.

In the way of amusement there is no end. For the children there is a large, sunny, public play-ground near by, furnished with swings, cross-bars and rings. For the older people of the neighborhood is the gymnasium with the usual equipments. This hall is also utilized for concerts, lectures, receptions and balls. In the same building are the rooms of the Hull House men's club, furnished with billiard tables.

The individual with music in his soul is fed with "the concord of sweet sounds" at Hull House. There is a singing class devoted to the study of standard music; a choral society composed of men; a chorus of five hundred voices directed by the well-known Professor Tomlins, director of the World's Fair choruses; a Paderewski club of twenty children. There is, in addition, a free concert in the gymnasium every Sunday afternoon.

Nothing is lacking at Hull House. There is the Working People's Social Science Club, devoted to the discussion of social and economic topics; the Chicago Question Club, which meets every Saturday afternoon and listens to a live debate; the Nineteenth Ward Improvement Club, pledged to the improvement of the ward in all directions; the Hull House Woman's Club of sixty members, which not only enjoys tea-drinking and friendly chat, but is active in visiting and relief work; the Eight-Hour Club, organized for the purpose of encouraging women in factories and workshops to obey the eight-hour law; the Co-operative Association, which has opened a coöperative coal yard, and hopes in time to deal with other commodities; the Hull House Labor Bureau, which undertakes to find work for men and women.

Another innovation is a Young Men's Coöperative Home, recently organized by six young men on the same principle as the Jane Club, which was described in a previous paper, and which is connected with Hull House only in a very general way.

The fact is, there is simply no end to clubs, designed to meet every need of the people. It would require a volume to give a detailed account of the clubs, and the thousand and one interesting features of Hull House.

Another thing, for the ill there is a free dispensary, a resident physician, and the Visiting Nurses' Association. In the same building with the dispensary is a Penny Providence savings bank.

So Hull House settlement is really a little village—and a village noted as the center of good impulses. The noble work here accomplished will tell for good on the life of the city of Chicago. Its far-reaching influence cannot be compressed into words.

And how does Hull House support itself? you ask. The answer is that the running expenses are reduced to a minimum. No rent is paid for the use of Hull House and the adjacent lots. Two of the adjoining buildings have been built by friends of the institution. The corps of instructors, as has been said, are unpaid. There has never been a public appeal for funds, and the expenses of departments that do not support themselves, such as the nursery, are defrayed by generous friends.

The future plans of Hull House were expressed by a resident member when she said: "We hope to make Hull House a colony settlement."

"Just what do you mean by that?" was asked. "By a colony settlement is meant the bringing to this neighborhood for residence the better, cultivated class of people, who will open their homes in the same social way as does Hull House, and thus through social intercourse and influence help to solve the social and industrial problems of a great city.

The record of Hull House in the past is one of unprecedented success—the outlook for the future is roseate with promises of still better things. In truth, nothing seems impossible to Hull House.

RAILROAD TIES.

BY JOHN G. WOOLLEY.

The "log" of "329," that was his number—the conductor—of a Cottage Grove avenue cable train, south bound, December 21, 1893.

Poor man! I might have known there was something wrong with him from the way he turned his eyes from side to side watching the streets. A "grip" conductor who is "right," watches the upper stories of the circumjacent apartment houses, and for a perfectly clear reason. If, for instance, a man on the roof of a tall building should suddenly decide to take the car, it would be very important for him to catch the eye of the conductor in good time, or he could not possibly catch the train; while in the case of people on the street, they have only to wait on the crossing and the car will stop—or it won't. This is a world of chance, and street railroading does not claim to be an exact science—indeed, could not be, for it is carried on for the convenience of the public, and therefore, largely consists in nice discrimination as to what is convenient, not to say lawful, for the public, the conductor inclusive; but it stands to reason that a man on top of a house, if he is to have an equal chance with one who is on the sidewalk, is entitled to the first attention, and in this country it is fundamental, thank God, that all men are "created equal," or if not, are to be made so by depriving the fortunate of their advantages.

But this man's eccentricities very soon impressed the whole company of those on board.

At Bowen avenue an old woman came into the street and set a basket of laundried clothing on the ground, and looked at the approaching train, and before she had "thrown up her hands," or made any other sign whatever of submission, he rung the bell and stopped it—but not until it had passed her a few feet, and he got off and lifted the basket aboard and EXPLAINED that it was hard to stop on the icy rails.

I lost my head for a moment, I suppose, for when he came to me I handed him five cents and extended two fingers to signify the number of fares he was to take out.

There were two of us; there are always two of us or more when I am in Chicago. He chuckled in a way that warmed the cockles of my heart and put embarrassment out of the question, and said: "Have to charge you two full fares, I reckon," and he did, and I was willing to pay it, he was so cheerful.

. . . . . .

An old man, stranger in the city, who informed the passengers collectedly that he was over eighty years old and didn't wear glasses, and could go about as well as the best of them—with a sleazy grip-sack that might have said as much if not more for itself—wanted to get off at Van Buren street, but seemed determined to stop at 39th. The conductor restrained him; at 22nd street he heard a man next him speak about Van Buren street and arose in haste and pulled the wrong bell-cord, and the conductor smiled, the idiot, and held his arm as we swung round the curve, and said, "Sit down, grandpap, and be easy; it is quite a ways yet. I won't forget ye," and he didn't.

He not only watched the street but also the passengers. I saw several women signal him to stop and he seemed to see them and to recognize them with an alacrity and affability that were positively indecent, the reprobate!

. . . . . .

But what I started out to mention was the effect of this presumptuous man upon the people in his car. It was a bitter day, one of the superlative Chicago efforts of weather; everybody "come on" more or less draggled and cross; the air was bad, for the wheezy man by the door could barely have it open long enough to let us in and out, but the whole car-load began to show the most plebeian interest in each other and spoke and laughed at the weather in a way that was verging on irreverence; good fellowship was epidemic; men uncrossed their legs and wore them plain, and elbowed in; women "sot close," and one took her own baby on her lap though it wanted to tread on the fat man's coat-tail and look out at the window.

If there were many trains like that, police protection would be needed to keep people from loving each other. Conductor 329 ought to be looked after. There is nothing so infectious as health.

. . . . . .

This humble man illustrates how sometimes it helps a rule to break it, and I have been thinking that if some city pastors that I know, country, too, should roll their eyes sidewise instead of up, it would be good for this world, and as for the New Jerusalem,—say,—where is that, anyway? Around "the loop" somewhere, isn't it?

En route in Wisconsin.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

Glad We Came.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—We have not been at home two weeks, yet they have been so packed full of winsome welcomes, tender treatment, and inspiring intimations of immortal friendship, that "we are glad we came," not that we think with any less love and gratitude of those true and faithful comrades whom the "silver streak" divides from us, though we are anchored in the old home and the old work with the worthy ones who from the first have stood shoulder to shoulder in the mighty battle.

I will not speak of the unique and eloquent welcomes in our two great eastern cities; though the thermometer was in the 90's, our spirits bubbled with enthusiasm, and we all had "a splendid time." One thing that I feel sorry about is that so much beautiful behavior, loving brotherly and sisterly good words and deeds could not be adequately recognized, just because so many were in it all, and while there is no limit to our appreciation, there is a limit to the power of memory and the opportunity of acknowledgment. But let me hear and now express to every dear kind heart that has had a generous thought for us, the earnest gratitude that has welled up in our hearts from the very first hand-clasp on the ship, even to this moment, and if in anywise we have not adequately acknowledged the exquisite messages by telegram and letter, flowers and fruit, books and pictures, testimonials on vellum, flags, clocks and lamps, and dear New Jersey's comfortable and restful mattress, already sent up to the Hudson River Nest, it is not because we have failed to note and to be thankful for all the good-will thus ingenuously manifested toward us. There are some dear names that I can hardly refrain from mentioning, but that would be leaving out so many others, that I prefer to let this Omnibus bill of recognition be inclusive of all rather than exclusive of any.

One thing I must refer to in particular, and that is the happiness that Anna Gordon and I have felt in the enthusiasm that has everywhere greeted the name of our dear, great-hearted hostess, Lady Henry Somerset. She deserves it all, and the better she is known the more she will be loved and trusted everywhere.

For a week we have been hidden away in the restful home of Mrs. Stevens, recording secretary of the National W. C. T. U. The big, comfortable homestead, only three miles from Portland, has all the best characterizations of an old-fashioned New England mansion. Here the Stevens family has dwelt well-nigh a century; and here the host, our generous "Brother Stevens," and his sister, Mrs. Olive Stevens Hanson, have warmly coöperated with the great leader whom God raised up for the white-ribboners of Maine, in making us feel that nothing could give them so much pleasure as to forward our recuperation from the fatigues of the voyage, the trying temperature and the unwonted public appearances. It has been a balmy and healing sojourn and everything has contributed to our upbuilding.

We leave on July 2d for Montreal, where we shall be in the home of those well-known philanthropists, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Finley. The Dominion temperance convention can but prove an inspiration to us all, as it will bring before the country the settled determination to secure prohibition laws by the sturdy temperance workers who lead the movement that resulted in overwhelming Prohibition plebiscites.

We hope to greet you all at the Woman's Temple about the 7th of July, and a glad day it will be for us, as your generous words have already assured us it will be to you. "Westward, Ho!" is our motto, too.

By the way, what a "taking" Fourth of July number you have issued. "Hail Columbia, Happy Land!"

Ever yours for a redeemed republic,

Frances E. Willard.

To Young Americans.

DEAR FATHERS (AND MOTHERS) OF THE FUTURE REPUBLIC:—In my Boston morning paper I have just read a paragraph so full of everyday common sense that I have clipped it out to send to you, each and everyone, as my Fourth of July message, with the elder (ly) sister's comment, Go thou and do likewise.

The young man who speaks is John G. Johnson (of Iowa, I think,) who recently rode on a bicycle the most rapid mile that any human being has ever attained (one minute and fifty-six seconds). He is described as "twenty-two years old, in complexion light, and almost as fair as a woman, very modest in dress and deportment," and yet as "a world-beating athlete." However, it is not his riding or record that made me glad, but his advice to "aspiring novices who wish to make a record," for that means those who desire the most perfect physical habits; and here is what he says:—remember he is not a doctor, nor a temperance lecturer, but an enterprising young wide-awake who means to make the most of life and limb. The interviewer asks:

"What is your advice to aspiring novices as regards training?"

The young athlete replies:—

"Do not smoke, drink or chew, and always retire early, as rest is one of the principal things in training. If a man does not get sleep he loses flesh, worries and is unfit where trials of speed and endurance are called for. I also believe in good eating, and am very careful what I eat. My favorite dishes and those I recommend to all trainers are beefsteak, mutton chops, chicken, lots of vegetables, and light puddings. Oatmeal I always eat in the morning, because of its strengthening and invigorating qualities."

Now, isn't that reasonable and helpful for boys and girls, for maidens and young men alike? And if so, it is because this athlete has studied carefully, and clearly stated some of the "laws written in our members," whereby our Heavenly Father has arranged for us to be happy—if we only will.

Yours for the republic of steady heads, true hearts and hands that do not tremble.

Frances E. Willard.

OUR CHIEFTAIN'S QUIET REST.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—I want THE UNION SIGNAL readers to know that Miss Willard had eight days and nine nights of much needed rest at my home in quiet old Stroudwater, where she arrived the evening of June 23, leaving the morning of July 2.

To keep everybody away was not an easy matter, for in no state is Miss Willard more loved and honored than in Prohibition Maine, and our women would have gone clear across our wide domain for even one look at her.

One of our bright county presidents wrote: "You need not feel so grand if you have Miss Willard shut up at Stroudwater, neither to be seen nor heard. Every woman in Maine is penetrating the very heart of your ancient house with her love and devotion, which can't be kept out; and in visions we see Miss Willard resting, which is far more delightful to us than the material embodiment, as unspeakably charming as that sight would be."

Thus I claim that the Maine people have proved that they are not only self-sacrificing by keeping away, but have proved in a notable way their love for our returned Chieftain.

Anna Gordon was very helpful in her services for the public, speaking most brightly and acceptably to the boys of the Reform School, to the members of Portland W. C. T. U., to the children and others, and to the temperance Sunday-school concert at Stroudwater.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR VERSUS SALOON.

BY JOHN G. WOOLLEY.

Three years ago at Minneapolis I spoke to you about gospel temperance. Rarely is a man insane enough to fancy himself responsible for such a scene as took place then. Fifteen thousand of you stood up and cheered. One delegation sprang into the aisle and marched to the platform rail waving a banner with the inscription, "Iowa. A school-house on every hill-top and no saloon in the valley!"

The orator was obliterated in an instant, like the first flake of an avalanche, and for one breathless, inexplicable moment our lives fused into one tremendous impulse as we felt the Spirit of God come into the midst, and in the brightness of His presence recognized the divinity of our own humanity, and uttered a fiat.

From that time, every day the liquor traffic lawfully lives, concerns the innocence, the honor, and the plighted word of these societies. For we declared,—I have the official record—

"Since the liquor traffic is the implacable enemy of righteousness and purity, of Christ and His church,

"Resolved, That we condemn intemperance in every form; that we stand for total abstinence, for the suppression of the saloon, and for the annihilation of the power of the 'whisky ring' in the politics of this nation."

And we meant what we said. We shall make our word good.

WE ARE MAKING IT GOOD.

Albeit none too rapidly. Each house of Congress still has a saloon. Our "Soldiers' Homes" are still institutional drink shops. At our military posts to-day enlisted men in uniform are detailed to do Federal duty serving drinks at the canteen bar. In consideration of the payment by it of about one-third of the public revenue, the liquor traffic remains our sovereign industry, censor of our press, controller of our finances, and moderator of our politics. Christian commerce still lights darkest Africa with the blue hell-fire of alcohol and the brain of a race for a wick.

Where is Iowa's silk and golden hallelujah of three years ago? Look for it among the banners! There is Iowa, but that flag has gone down. Moths eat it. The school still stands on the hill, but the valleys of the Western Massachusetts have been quit-claimed back to the saloon. And in nearly all the land the rampant havoc of it riots on.

But much has been done. In party-cursed Indiana Charles E. Newlin has opened a Quaker cannonade of non-partisan gospel truth, and storms the commonwealth, town by town. Edwin D. Wheelock has set the plumed and bladed prairie forests of Illinois whispering from hill to hill a wonderful new gospel of salvation from Peoria, the hell of corn. Herbert B. Ames and a devoted company of praying boys have taken a Montreal election between their knees and scoured it, and made a literature and working plans by which, altered to fit local needs, any Endeavor union can become a wisp of hyssop in God's hand to purge the city clean. Yonder, beyond the lake, Ontario, already the whitest, fairest, cleanest daughter of the great mother land, has forged ahead, with Manitoba, Newfoundland, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island to lead the epoch. The plebiscite has spoken, and the Provincial liquor traffic packs its lares and penates, its movable plunder, and comes to be annexed to the States, the land of liberty, where even to suggest a plebiscite is politically infamous. The mayor of Toronto, invited recently to deliver a brief address of welcome to the assembled liquor dealers of the Province, moved the previous question, held it undebatable, decided that the main question should be now put, put it, carried it, and declared that no enemy of Canada was welcome to Toronto. And the work goes on and will go on until no license law beslimes the fame of any Christian country.

Two years ago, at New York City, I spoke to you again from a heart that had in that great hour nothing meaner in it than tears and prayers for tempted men and anguished women. And the man is on this platform who has dared to say, I sold you to a party. May God, whose truth I spoke and he insulted, forgive him and enlarge him to the size of comprehending that there are experiences in life through which, if a man come sane, he comes too big for party-lugging, party cowardice, private slander or personal fear.

I speak to-day upon a topic chosen by the International committee:

"THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S SOCIETY OF CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR VERSUS THE SALOON."

Take what road you may of Christian endeavor, it will lead you to a screened and painted door, back of which, "a good man," so certified by the authorities and thereunto expressly authorized by statute, despite the Word of God and the organic law and reason of the government, pumps the putrid blood of murdered harvests into the veins of the body politic, and gangrene into the hearts and homes of men. That is the saloon, the third person of a despicable trinity of which the other two are the partisan city and the politic church—this society versus that.

I am continually receiving letters asking, "What shall Christian young people do against the saloon?" The question is its own perfect answer, and I can only give it back expanded, as one may blow a rosebud into bloom.

The candid, honest, modest way for one to publish an idea is to exhibit a sample of its operation; and so I answer by a simple showing of my own position, which may, of course, be wrong. The question is, what shall I—a "Christian"—"man"—"do"—"against the saloon"?

First of all, I will be a Christian. I will keep myself pure. I will, as to this thing, abolish the word "temperance." It is the Pharisee of grammar, the arch hypocrite of the vocabulary of this reform, the blood-guiltiest common noun in the language, a quagmire of definition not to be trusted by the foot of reason, or crossed by any but an empty vehicle of thought.

What is "temperance"? A claret cup, a drop of sherry, a glass of ale, a pint of wine, a bottle of whisky, a shameful night, a blank day, debt, dishonor, disease, despair, delirium, death. I have inflected it in all its attributes and languages, from the whisper of the dainty, delicious lust of ruby wine moving itself aright, to the adder hiss of the sodden, passionless adultery of drunkenness at the last, and am here alive, but on the way have passed a million men rotting unburied, and though living, lost until the judgment day.

A CHRISTIAN.

I will be a Christian. Henceforth I'll stand upon the mountain top of Paul's great verse of which the familiar version is: "If meat make my brother to offend I will not eat meat enough to hurt myself though the world perish," but which is written: "I will eat no meat while the world stands." And drinking wine does cause my brother to offend. From the first, the strong, clean, moderate drinker has been, and is to-day, the weak man's schoolmaster to lead him to the gutter.

Am I saying that one who drinks is not a Christian? No; but he is not such a Christian as can help in this endeavor. A drinking church cannot rebuke the drinking world. A tippling Christian is a teacher of tippling, a decoy self-anchored in the slough of animalism, luring prey for the saloon—a corrupter of youth, for which offense, merely alleged and guessed at, Socrates was condemned to swallow hemlock for his country's good in the twilight of reform, two thousand years ago. They who would lend a hand to this endeavor must have a clean hand to lend. For this surgery there must be aseptic fingers and ballots sterilized by the very health of God. I will be a Christian in my property; no saloon shall call me landlord.

In the perplexing movements of patriotic service I will keep faith with Jesus Christ, though it cost peace, pride, prestige, pulpit or party. I will confess Him before people, and on election day, which in this land of equal rights is man's day, I will show myself a Christian voter, fit to represent unfranchised womanhood at the polls. I will go to Him, hear His words, and whatsoever He says unto me, I will do it. Upon that rock I will build my politics and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it.

I will take up my cross daily—not semi-weekly—and will follow Him up the long Calvary of criticism, suspicion, uncharity and persecution, to the skull-shaped dome at the land's end of Christian endeavor, and abide the issue there. Cross or coronation, loss or gain, pleasure or pain, glory or disgrace, life or death, in my person, in my property and in my politics I will be a Christian.

I will be a man, an active, definite, persistent, self-respecting and respect-compelling man; no flunky to a party or a sect; no toady to a majority; no trimmer to the popular breeze; no lisping baby-talker to committees; no whimpering petitioner of my own servants; no whispering, apologetic preacher, with a gag; no wire-puller's Punch and Judy, penny puppet annex to a party show; no straddling, small and easy reformer; no driveling camp follower of the world's forward march; no dreary spouter of the Concordance; no Christian whose convictions require editing; no sniveling, moral coward trembling at a politician's sneer; no pastor whose politics are queer; no cray-fish pietist backing under a creed at the approach of a new thought. I will be intelligent; I will take a prohibition newspaper and read it. I will have an opinion and express it. I will be consistent; I will let no man despise me; I will not despise myself; if I keep political company where saloon-keepers feel at home, I will be man enough not to pray, "Thy kingdom come on earth." I will be too much a man to talk of taking the world for Christ while I am consenting to farm out the highways of my own country to saloons and live on the rentals. I will hold no politician's coat while he stones a prophet or denies full citizenship to a woman. By the grace of God I will be a Christian Christian and a manly man.

THE FOOT-ROT OF CIVILIZATION.

I will be "against the saloon" and anything that favors, fears or ignores it. The liquor traffic is the foot-rot of civilization. Saloons are the progeny of cities betrayed by party politics. I will renounce utterly and forever all allegiance to any political party in municipal government. I will not be bound by a caucus. But when a citizen's meeting conflicts with my prayer-meeting I will miss the prayer-meeting. I will count any man the city's enemy who drags his party into its affairs. I will trust no man in city politics who winks at the saloon in national politics.

I will not be cajoled, frightened nor jeered into the stupid wickedness of trying to secure good men to enforce bad laws. Any man is good enough to grant or sign a license. The men who levy, collect and disburse the price of the city's shame shall never be my representatives. The uniformed supervisor of a stipendiary public virtue shall never wear my star. While the law is wrong I will not touch it. Let shrewdness, greed and party policy look out for themselves; I am for Christ and the Church.

In national affairs I will belong to a party and be true to it, so true that when it goes wrong, I will leave it and go straight ahead until it catches up. I will scratch the wickedness out of its ticket, and then throw the ticket away, unless I can stand with it upon a clean, brave, open platform. A man who is false to himself cannot be true to anything, and a party that asks a man to belie himself and speak easy his convictions, will in time betray both him and the country. A coward is potentially a traitor. I will square my politics to my church, or leave the church. The man, the ticket, or the party that expects or desires votes from the saloon shall have no vote from me.

Two great political parties strive for preëminence in our national affairs; it was so from the beginning; it will be so to the end. Their names change, and the lines of their cleavage, but not their general character. The resultant of their contending power records the progress of this country. The problem of our Christian civilization is to diminish the angle of their drawing apart until, in some great day, a clean church shall slip the yoke of Jesus Christ upon their mighty necks and make them pull together for a thousand years. Do you say the saloon will persist? What if it does? A clean church will win its customers and keepers, to a man. Even two hundred and fifty thousand saloons would be an infinitesimal trifle in the race for power against a clean church. Let who will win this election, sell the licenses and administer the all-pervasive paltry-treason of the spoils, when the clean church comes, whose right it is, she will take, without a rival or a question, the scepter of the world, and reign. I will be for that. These hands are hers, only two of millions, but I will wash them, by the grace of God, and keep them clean for her. No sales, no spoils, no saloon votes in Christian endeavor!

THE OLD GOSPEL.

Great men have said to me, the humblest locust-eater in the wilderness, with fine, high admonition in their voice and mein, "Preach the old Gospel!" I do. I did for six clean years. God helping me, I will to-day. I have it from the mouth of its first minister, fresh from the secret place of the Most High, unshopworn, unseminaried, uncoached by doctors of divinity, uncriticisable, ineligible for a salary, incorrigibly clear, smelling of wild honey, "a man sent from God whose name was John."

I will maintain to-day that he lifts most the Son of God who exalts mankind the most. No man cometh unto the Father but by being a son, and no man becomes a son of God but by being a man. To live is Christ; to preach or to "belong to church" is anything or nothing—Paul, Barnabus or Cephus; Peter, who denied his Lord at the election, Eutychus, who slept while Paul spoke, Ananias, who lied about his taxes, or you or I, who do all three or neither.

I preach the Gospel according to John. Listen: "Prepare ye the way of the Lord; make his paths straight. Every valley shall be filled, and every mountain and hill shall be brought low, and the crooked shall be made straight, and the rough places shall be made smooth. O, generation of vipers! Oh, crawling, slippery, sinuous, stealthy, wriggling Pharisees, who hath advised you to flee? How can cause escape effect? What authority do you find for running away from the consequences of your own sin or your own neglect? Wrath is the whole 'afterward' of unforgiven wrong. Whither can we fly from that? Turn about! Face the foe! Repent! Stand up and meet the results of your doings—then live so worthily as to make wrath itself repent! Let go of Abraham. Be men on your own account. Trust no old respectability or ancestry or history. Let the dead past bury its dead. Divine wrath pursues nobody, but men are burning other men for fuel now. Take an ax! Strike at the root of the Upas trees that breathe out poison to the world, nor rest until the very wood is burned to ashes;—so get forgiveness for yourself and give all flesh a chance to see salvation."

When Jesus Christ heard that, He said, "Baptize me!" and when the preacher hesitated, added, "Come on, my brother John; we will show that courtesy to the past, and by this simple, seeming useless link couple the ages together," and then walked straight away dripping from the water of ceremony into a wilderness of temptation and the hot heart of the world; and the rigid old ceremonial Heaven split like a chrysalis, and men saw that the Spirit of God was no abstraction infinitely distant, but a thing of the earth as real, plain-tinted and timid as a dove. Seeing which John prophesied, "Preaching is at a discount hereafter, MESSIAH IS A DOER."

And Jesus "took the road," to live John's gospel, and prepared a way for the world's weary feet Godward, and at the end of it was spiked upon a guide-post where heaven, earth and hell cornered, and after He was dead still preached, with bleeding hands outstretched, in awful pantomime, "Prepare ye the way of the Lord!"

So, and yet not so, labor laid a human body down, they say, for every railroad tie across the isthmus. They died, but they prepared a way for commerce through Panama to India's wealth and California's gold, and every train that draws this world along is lifted up on labor crucified.

"Pre-pare the way," it means build a road beforehand. Jesus abbreviated it as pr-a-y, expanded it in the Lord's prayer, and expounded it saying, "When ye pray," remember that the Infinite and gracious Providence has left nothing unprovided for; your prayer, if it be anything a father ought to grant a child, is answered from the foundation of the world; therefore, "believe, rest assured, ye have the thing ye pray for," pray about what ye have and not for what ye have not. Take possession in your Father's name of everything in sight; hold it up and say, "Father, see what I have found, or thought, or made!" and He will say—has said—"Whatsoever ye discover, invent, or work out, filially, ye shall have. For this is the law, and, therefore, the prophecy. Filial labor is prevailing prayer. Faith is honesty toward God. Fidelity is omnipotence. A filial son cannot fail until his Father does.

STRAIGHT PATHS.

"Make his paths straight!" God is not limited, but like His own lightning comes the shortest way, responds to facilities. Take out the curves, undo the snarls of custom and of law, let us have straight work for His appearing, no easy zigzag compromise to indolence; straight, level, smooth, for Him.

But the valley! Fill it with mountain tops! Mix lowliest earth with crystal summit rock; advance upon the submerged by the exalted; muster the hills in squadrons, march them to the heart of the abyss and break it! You scholar of the diamond-pointed intellect, set it against the cliff! You statesman, turn on power! You preacher, "rightly dividing the word of truth," follow where science excavates, charge the caverns with fulminate and lay down your own life for fuse! Now, voter, thrust in ballots, the clay of civic faith! Now, teacher, tamp it home! All ready! Truth and faith and human life versus the black basalt of error! Now pray for fire; and it shall come to pass that some consecrated child of God, whose feet are planted on the crushed and pent up truth, shall stretch up his hands in the night of one of earth's Gethsemanes, groping, dead beat with agony, and at random clutch one of Heaven's low-swinging electrodes, and "THE LORD SHALL DESCEND FROM HEAVEN WITH A SHOUT."

Now, while the mountains smoke, you with a pick, clear away, and you shovelers and those with hammers, all together; open it up for teams and trams, lay on loam, walk on it, roll it, fertilize it, plant it. On into the forest; fell trees, train vines, hew logs, set fires, scoop out cups for the springs. "The kingdom of heaven is at hand." "Go through, go through the gates. Prepare ye the way of the people—TO FOLLOW. Cast up, cast up the highway, gather out the stones; lift up a standard for the people. "And all flesh, prince, peasant, beggar, thief, horse, dog—shalt SEE Salvation." The rest is in their own hands.

I am tired hearing so much about "my personal Saviour." O, poor, small soul, of course He is your personal Saviour, but not because you have said or done, or believed something,—nor because you are you, but because you are a man—one of a lot swept from the cross-trees of hell when Jesus Christ ran her down. God so loved the world that He sent His every begotten son to hunt selfishness, slavery and superstition out of it, to level it for weary feet, straighten it for the haste of the King's business, drain it against miasma, dyke it against flood, pipe it against fire, wire it for light and power, mine it for gems and gold, and farm it into universal brotherhood.

There is an American desert more bleak and desolate and famished than ever western wind or ravening wolf howled over. Across its arid ridges Capital puffs its flabby jowls, in deadly peril, and gibbers like an idiot about the scenery and the sunset; and Labor gasps and yelps and staggers, and with dry tongue protruding, snaps at friend and foe like a mad dog. It reeks with the blood of millions who would else have been stars in the crown of Jesus Christ. It whitens with the bones of innocent women and little children dragged thither from our very altars by the greedy, red-mouthed pack of two hundred and fifty thousand saloons protected by the law. It is drunkenness, the mauvaise terre—the scourge, the pestilence, the perdition of living men, the wrath of God for violated harvests and mercenary public virtue. And we have been fleeing from it, or dancing about ridiculous incantation fires, or drinking wine and praising the gods of license gold. The hand of Jehovah writes upon the wall of the world in burning letters: "Prepare ye the way of the Lord!" The liquor traffic ought to die; and any politics or any religion that postpones or ignores that, ought to die, too, and be buried with it in the middle of the King's highway. AND IT WILL.

THE LAKE AND THE WATERFALL.

Translated from the German.

BY MRS. S. L. OBERHOLTZER.

The rugged rocks and wild,
The lake by forest bound,
A quiet picture are
For a thought profound.

By a thunder sound,
Dashing stones between,
Bold the waterfall
As a deed is seen.

Thou shalt like the lake
Close thy forces hold,
And then like the brook
Deeds and thoughts shoot bold.

THAT MEDICINE FLASK.

BY E. B. BRADLEY.

"'Tis true, 'tis true, 'tis pity,
And pity 'tis, 'tis true."

Hamlet, Act II.

In a pleasant little home in one of the apartment houses on the east side of New York sat a happy young mother with her two children, a little girl of four years and a baby boy. The father, who was a small tradesman, was away taking fall orders, it being now about the first of September, but he was expected home the next day, and with a glad heart she held her daughter on her knee and told her papa would be home in the morning. And the little one laughed and prattled sweetly till the "sandman" came around, and as she knelt to say her "Now I lay me," added, "Please Dod tate care of papa and bing him safe home."

The mother tucked her up and gave her her good-night kiss, smiling to see the eyelids droop upon the rosy cheeks, then sat down to finish a little dress for her, humming a happy song.

Meanwhile the train sped over the rails,bringing the husband homeward. In the early morning he landed at Jersey City, crossed the ferry and hurried with joyous steps to greet his wife and children.

The trip had been a success. A goodly number of orders had been secured. There was nothing to mar the pleasure of the home-coming.

His wife met him at the door with uplifted finger. "Hush," she said, "the children are not awake yet. Come into the kitchen and let us have a good talk before Mary is up."

He set down his bag and hung his overcoat on a chair, first taking a traveling flask from the pocket and setting it on the table.

"Have you needed that" asked his wife.

"Ah, no," was the answer. "Have been perfectly well, but it is a good thing to have in case of trouble. Can do no harm and may be very useful."

Then they passed through into the kitchen and were soon absorbed in happy chat.

How long it lasted they never knew. It was interrupted by a dull thud in the dining-room, and looking in they saw Mary senseless upon the floor.

"What can be the matter!" cried the father, catching up the little white figure. "See, she has on one shoe and stocking. She was dressing and heard my voice and started to come to me."

"Oh! John," gasped his wife; "the whisky. Look!" and she held up the flask, from which three or four ounces were gone.

The glittering glass had evidently caught Mary's eye, and, childlike, she had stopped to taste, though how she swallowed such a draught no one has ever been able to understand.

The father sank white and trembling into a chair. The mother caught the child from him, and shook her violently to waken her; but in vain. The head fell back, and the arms dropped heavily.

"We can do nothing. We must have a doctor!" she cried.

He staggered to his feet, and reached for his hat. "We will take her to one; not wait for one to come," he said.

The still sleeping baby was hastily given into the care of a neighbor, and, wrapping little Mary in a shawl, they rushed into the street. At the end of the block they met a policeman, who told them the quickest help was in Bellevue Hospital, and thither they hastened.

The child was carried into the baby ward, and the fight for life began. All day doctors and nurses worked over the little form, while the sorrowing parents looked helplessly on. A Fifth avenue physician came and sat by the bed, murmuring:

"This is too bad, too bad," and racked his brain to think of remedies. It was by his order that electricity was applied and oxygen gas poured into the lungs in the vain hope of preventing the deadly paralysis, which had involved all the rest of the brain, from extending to the motor centers which controlled the muscles of the chest and heart. But the red corpuscles of the blood were too far affected by the alcohol to be able to take up the oxygen. The breath grew fainter and the heart beat more feeble through the night. In the morning they ceased, and the very doctors turned tearfully from the bed.

Hospital rules had been set aside and the mother asked to remain by her child all night. The father who had gone home to care for the baby came in just after the end. But over their sorrow let a veil be drawn.

But even this was not the end for them. There remained not only the desolate home-going and laying away of the dead, but the ordeal of a coroner's jury. It was a poison case, and no doctor could give a certificate. The little form had to be given up to the knife to prove that death had really been caused by alcohol. But no trace of any other poison could be found.

Little Mary had died of one drink of whisky from the medicine flask which the father had set down, saying: "It is a good thing to have in case of trouble. Can do no harm and may be very useful."

So ended the happy home-coming,

A REMARKABLE LETTER FROM AN ITALIAN COUNTESS.*

DEAR MADAM:—My heart was gladdened by your kind and inspired lines, and I accept willingly of the challenge conveyed by the little flower of purity, to wage war against impurity, the fiend of home and moral life.

I feel myself honored joining your valiant ranks, and feel furthermore that I am thus enabled worthily to celebrate the fourteen hundredth anniversary of the conversion of our house to the Christian church by the baptism of our ancestor, the Emperor Cloderig, by the hands of Saint Reniger at Rheims.

You have taken one great step, that of overcoming the old, narrow-minded idea that different creeds should form an obstacle for true hearts to make common cause. Do we not all strive for the same goal? Should we think little of each other because our efforts take a different form?

A few years ago I had occasion to be present when His Majesty the young German Emperor held prayer with his troops, and when the thundering choir of a thousand voices broke out in the beautiful hymn of the old Lyra Germanica, "Unser Gott der ist ein feste Burg," I was just as intimately touched, felt just as able to follow the Divine injunction of our mass, "Sursum corda," as when the artistic music sounds under the vaults of our great cathedrals, the incense ascends, the gold and gems of the sacred vessels sparkle at the altar, when He Himself, the Holy One, descends to be incarnated in the blessed sacrament, to be amongst those "who are gathered in His name." Why should not all feel in the same way?

I have not heard of Mrs. Butler's work at Roma. We have been greatly retired of late, my husband, cavalry officer, had a fall with his horse, needed great care and quietness to recover, and the public organs here are not very ready to appreciate or speak, at least, favorably, of the question of the day that womanhood initiated, and I fear the lady will have infinite difficulties to overcome, not the least to be found in the subtleness of the language and its varied dialects.

Roma is not like other great capitals, the heart causing the pulsation of the life artery that runs through the nation; our union is only nominal to a certain extent, not in all cases felt by the nation. Milan is considered "the moral capital," and is perhaps a point of more vital interest than Roma itself. Torino forms its own exclusive, proud and egoistic Pieda montete centre; Firenza cannot forget having been dethronized and keeps up its pretence and jealousies. We Venetols look with contempt upon the haughty Roman princes, whose ancestors were ragged shepherds in the Roman campagna, waiting for some poor frate of the family to be made Pope, then to enrich the tribe by unjust spoil from Holy Church, when our ancestors were ruling doges and our names written already for centuries in the golden book.

Napoli, with its old, poor, decayed aristocracy ever in strife with the young, rich and vulgar, created by "Don Franceschello," represents the most incredible contradiction between the luxury and superficial elegance in public and the filthiness and semi-barbaric ignorance behind the scenes.

Italy is full of contending elements which must all be studied and treated separately,—full of different types of diverse races according to the descendence from the varied nations that populated Italy.

The continued and sad contest 'twixt state and church forms another obstacle for hearts to unite themselves in one great important human cause. All this has to be overcome. I am hopeful of the result; still, the difficulties are there; certainly, the influence must come from outside; we in our own self are too weak to rise out of our deplorable state,—and it is deplorable, God help us!

Could you send me some of your papers that I may get perfectly into your "spirit of action" and also write in it. I should try again to write articles, though doubtful of the result. I write under a nom de plume, and have not as yet courage to dare myself outside this shelter. I have gathered some more feeling that I belong to your great sisterhood, but scarcely enough as yet to associate my personality with my pen in public.

If I present myself for work for next year's success, how should I style myself in relation to the purity work of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union?—"acting member" or have you any other form? And then would it not be well to prepare the way for what is to come, i. e., to introduce the matter before Her Majesty, our most gracious queen, seeing her this summer while at Stiesa? I am perfectly sure she will be favorably disposed, and once gained, the motto of Casa Savoya is Semper Avante! Savoya!—while His Majesty, King Humbert, is very inclined to take advice from our beloved and gifted queen.

I could also go to Milan during the summer months in order to prepare the new archbishop, Cardinal Ferara, to bring his influence to bear upon our case at the Vatican, where he is very well seen, both by His Holiness, himself, as well as by the Sacred College, not always one and the same thing. I know him; he will be apt to be a great and active supporter of our cause.

Yours in the Lord and our holy cause, truly devoted, affectionate, CAMILLA MARGARITHA.

THE "MINISTRY OF BEAUTY."

BY REV. C. E. MANDEVILLE.

I have just been reading again of the origin and work of the W. C. T. U's flower mission and my heart has been touched with the sweet and simple story. How many open doors of usefulness there are in this world, if we will but keep our eyes open to see them. Open doors, not closed and bolted, and if each would enter the door which God opens to him what blessings would flood this sin cursed world. Yes, the "ministry of beauty" is great, and I'm so glad I live in this generation, when this ministry is being effectually worked.

Well do I remember when I was a boy, living less than two miles from the home of Martin Van Buren, how several of us little ones would wander near the elegant home of the ex-president and try to look over the high stone wall that surrounded the mansion. All we could see were the upper stories of the house and the tops of the trees. Sometimes the keeper of the lodge would allow us to pass through the gates and look at the beautiful flowers that were so plentiful. The thought would often come to me, why the high walls to shut out the garden? Surely, giving a view to the passer-by would not impoverish the owner, and withholding did not enrich him. But that was the custom of those days. Now the rich have learned better, the stone fence has given way and the beauty of the velvet lawns and the gorgeous flowers of palatial homes can be enjoyed by the poorest and humblest passer-by.

Let the blessed work go on, and may this ministry be pushed into the damp cellars and forbidding garrets of the poor, into the convict's cell and the chamber of death. Break the alabaster box to the living and let the perfume as well as the beauty fill all this great home where God's people live. And may the "beauty of the Lord our God" be upon these tireless ones, and may He "establish the work of their hands."

Englewood, Chicago.

WE are told that in the good old times so many sick feeble people were not seen as now. This is true, because they died. The feeble could not live under the old conditions, only the most robust and physical natures could survive, and none others were seen. To-day the presence of feeble men and women of advancing years does not show degeneracy of the race, they must be looked upon as a living glory of our civilization, which enables them to exist. It shows elevation of the race and that now, under the conditions which look to the comfortable existence of people, the comparatively feeble cannot only live, but can support themselves in a great measure, for feeble and dainty hands can perform work to which, in the good old time, only a giant would have been assigned.—*Carroll D. BIBLE QUESTIONS.

What brethren once could not agree?
So parting, each the other left,
And helpers chose at liberty,
With minds and hearts together cleft.

What noted men declined to leave
The prison, till the magistrates
Themselves their freedom did achieve,
By bringing them beyond the gates?

Whom stoned the Jew 'mid wrath and frown,
And drew his body out of town,
Supposing that he had been dead,
Who yet arose and from them fled?

When might a Hebrew servant gain
His freedom, or in bonds remain?

Who with a penknife cut the roll
Of sacred story, leaf by leaf,
And burnt upon the hearth the whole,
And thus on self brought direct grief?

What man was he, of great renown,
That by the wall around the town,
Within a basket was let down,
And fled the Jewish wrath and frown?

Among the numbered Israel host,
How many entered Canaan's coast?

Which was the year of jubilee,
When all in bondage were set free?

How large the largest bedstead known,
And whose, as by the Bible shown?

Whence Joseph's bones were borne, by whom,
And buried in whose sacred tomb?

A BUSY SMALL BOY.

I know a small boy, a very small boy,
Who's as busy as he can be,
Would you like to see him? Well, look this way,
That very small boy is me.

They tell me a man is a boy grown up,
And the man who is good and great
Is the one who begins when a very small boy
To grow exceedingly straight.

I want to be good and straight when a man,
And I think I have started fair,
For I've faithfully promised never to chew,
Or smoke, or drink, or swear.

I've promised when able the Bible to read,
I have also promised to pray,
And it keeps me busy; oh, yes it does;
But I'll walk in wisdom's way.

So, my friends, this very small boy,
Who's as busy as he can be,
Wants help from his friends; will you look this way?
That very small boy is me.

TEN MINUTES.

We are but minutes—little things—
Each one furnished with sixty wings,
With which we fly on our unseen track,
And not a minute ever comes back.

We are but minutes; yet each one bears
A little burden of joys and cares;
Take patiently the minutes of pain—
The worst of minutes cannot remain.

We are but minutes, when we bring
A few of the drops from pleasure's spring;
Taste their sweetness while yet we stay—
It takes but a minute to fly away.

We are but minutes. Use us well;
For how we are used we must one day tell.
Who uses minutes has hours to use;
Who loses minutes whole years must lose.

HOW A BOY LED HIS FATHER.

Several years ago my brother was in Springfield one cheerless day, with about half an hour on his hands before train time. Strolling along near the depot, he noticed a tidy restaurant, and went in for lunch. A bright boy came to take his order, and as soon as he brought it sat down to his lessons. A respectable man, evidently the proprietor, was seated near the fire with a disabled foot propped up in a chair. When my brother had finished his meal, he approached him, saying:

"You have a bright boy to wait on your customers."

"Yes, indeed," said the man with parental pride, "I couldn't hire so good a boy as that; he is my son, and was the means of my opening this place instead of keeping a drink-shop which was the way I got my living for some years; and I'll tell you how it was. He came from school one day heavy-hearted, and when I asked him what was the matter he began to cry, but couldn't speak. After I had urged him, he said that in recess some of the boys asked each other what their father did. One said his father was a plumber; another, that his was a carpenter; and when they came to my boy, who said his father kept a saloon, one of them said that it was the meanest kind of business; and I could see they all felt the same way. That made me feel awfully ashamed; so, father, if you will only give up the saloon I'll do anything I can to help you. With that he threw his arms around my neck, and, sobbing, begged me to give it up. Well, the end of it was I sold out. I don't make so much money as I did selling liquors, but it goes farther, and we have a happy home; my wife can help along, because decent people come here for their meals, but before I did not like to have her around, there was so much low talk. My boy has been as good as his word. I couldn't ask for a better son."

My brother thanked the man for his confidence, and after giving his hearty approval went his way.—Julia Billings in the Little Christian.

THE TRAVELER'S TREE.

There is a tree which grows in Madagascar called the "Traveler's Tree," which is of the greatest service to the tired and thirsty travelers in that tropical climate. This wonderful tree has no branches, the leaves growing from the trunk and spreading out like the sections of a fan. These leaves, of which there are generally not more than twenty-four on each tree, are from six to eight feet in length, and from four to six feet broad. At the base of each leaf is a kind of cup containing about a quart of cool, sweet water. The natives save themselves the trouble of climbing the tree by throwing a spear, which pierces the leaf at the spot where the water is stored. The water then flows down into the vessel held beneath it and the traveler is enabled to continue his journey, cheered and refreshed by the precious liquid nature has so kindly provided for his use.

HARD TO PLEASE.

Susy is a young lady of five years and also of a very difficult disposition. The other day a visitor at her father's house found Susy weeping bitterly in the corner.

"Why, what are you crying about?" she was asked.

"'Cause all my b-brothers and sisters have a v-v-vacation, and I don't have any! Boo-hoo!"

"And why don't you have any vacation?"

"'Cause—I—I don't go to school yet!"

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—Among the days which have been recommended for patriotic remembrance, because of the inspiration we can get from the study of the events and the great lives connected with them, are three important ones in July.

The first of these I need not mention, for you know it well. The second occurs on July 14, and is the celebration of the destruction of the great French prison and fortress, the Bastile. This was the beginning of the French revolution in 1789, and the day is celebrated as Independence day in France.

Can you tell any stories of the French revolution?

This year a shadow of gloom has fallen over the French republic and many dark signs of mourning will be placed on the gay bunting for the death of President Carnot who was so foully assassinated two weeks ago.

Another patriotic day, not so well known, is July 24, the birthday of Simon Bolivar, the liberator of South America in 1783.

In remembering these anniversaries, we also pay a tribute to the thousands of unknown brave who gave their lives for the good of their fellowmen.

Affectionately,

I am an L. T. L. boy. Mrs. Beede is our leader; we have about fifty members. There are over fifty saloons in this city; just think of it. But if the L. T. L. keeps on, and prohibition does, too, King Alcohol must fall.

This is a no-license town, but there is more or less drunkenness, and we temperance folks wonder where they get their drink. I wish everybody would be good and use their money for better purposes.

Every time mamma's UNION SIGNAL comes I look for the Children's page, which I enjoy very much.

I think I shall commence correspondence with some of your nieces. I am twelve years old. I think it is about time that I was admitted to the Cozy Corner.

Everything is so fresh and green that I had rather play and jump the rope than write a letter.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

One result of the great strike was to make it impossible to secure a supply of white paper, and as our own was running low, and the feeling in the city was that the strike might be of long duration, we resolved to revert to the early custom of THE UNION SIGNAL and declare a two weeks' vacation, regretting greatly that we had no way of making the proper announcement. We furnish this week our usual edition, embracing the numbers of July 12, 19 and 26, and, asking the indulgence of our readers until we can "catch up" with the accumulated material, particularly Correspondence and News From the Field, we go on our way rejoicing.

THE STRIKE.

The strike has come and gone. Opinions concerning it are as varied as the temperament and environment of those who hold them. The white light of God's truth shines through the stained glass window of the brain, and takes its color from the medium through which it passes, if it passes at all; hence there are many explanations of what the great strike meant. For ourselves we have no sympathy with those who hold extreme views on either side of the portentous question brought to everybody's notice by the current calamity.

The readjustment of the relations of capital and labor is a question too great to be adequately handled in newspaper paragraphs. Adjectives are cheap; exclamation points are cheaper still, but they are as empty as "the chaff that the wind driveth away."

The true statesman is like a wise physician and his patient is the body politic. Its symptoms will not change because he pronounces an anathema. It is rather his vocation to ascertain what caused the symptom and to apply organic treatment to the disease of which it is the most apparent, but doubtless not the most dangerous indication. The multiplication of inventions has so changed the proportion of work to the workers who seek it, that there is not enough to go around. This is not the fault of any individual or any class, but it would seem to be an ingenious way out of the difficulty if we could devise more work, and when one is newly arrived from a country in which every field is like a lawn and every roadside like a garden, where there are no wooden wharfs or sidewalks, no forests of telegraph poles, or stretches of hobble-de-hoy roads or corduroy streets, it can but occur to him that if all our unemployed were engaged in amending the general appearance of things in this particular, and many others, work might be found for all to the incalculable advantage of themselves and the country upon which they thus reacted with vigorous brawn.

But at this point comes up the whole question of finance and a non-expert can only propound the conundrum, Why have we tons of precious metal in our treasury vaults and hundreds of thousands of idle hands in our cities, while we lack the ingenuity to bring the two together? Men have failed to furnish an answer which helps the people in the present emergency. Possibly some woman financier will be raised up who could lead us out of this dilemma.

Everybody knows that strikes are the token of a widespread discontent among those who face the specter of hunger and houselessness when they dare to try conclusions with the capitalists, with whose reserve power they can by no means compete. We can but feel that it is a great mistake to regard the wage-earning class as a menace to the country, when in fact they are themselves the country, nor do we believe that as a class they have been guilty of endangering or destroying life and property. Their great movement entrains, by the very velocity with which it goes forward, a "following" that does not represent its spirit or intention, for the dregs of society are in its wake.

Thus the anarchist with his fusee, the incendiary with his torch, and assassin with his dagger are hideous figures that stride along beside the solid battalions of the honest working people, many of whom look with frightened glance on the confused and hurried figures of the few, while the sturdy procession of the many who are as true patriots, as loyal to what is good as any that make up our multitudinous republic, marches onward to a better future for mankind.

We must not forget that every army has its camp followers, every party its treacherous and hair-brained leaders, and the larger the army, the more powerful the party, the greater will be the number to attach themselves to it for ignoble reasons. It is also true that as the moth to the candle, so the weak-brained are irresistibly borne onward toward the bright shining of a great new possibility that gleams in the forehead of the future.

On the other hand we must remember that it is the government itself which has created and fostered trusts and corporations, and that the millionaire is the necessary apex of the pyramid that we ourselves have builded. If a man is a millionaire in these days, it is rather his misfortune than his fault, and that it is a misfortune, rich men are realizing more painfully each day.

We see the beginning of this wonderful uprising against the power of the dollar, and the next generation will see the end, as we believe, for the evil will have become so great that people will annihilate the trusts and blast the corporations, taking into their own hands these arms that are too great to be wielded by any individual or corporation, and becoming themselves the only trusts under the name and style of "We, Us and Co."

It is a mooted question whether the National troops should have been brought so swiftly into the arena. The popular idea is that the municipal authority should have first been exhausted in the effort to keep the peace, then that of the state, and finally that of the Nation, but we can at least be grateful for this, that sanguinary conflicts between the mob and soldiery have been few and far between. For ourselves, we believe the President was actuated by patriotic motives, and should have the thanks of all good citizens.

We cannot help thinking that it would be well if our government had power to do what they did in England at the time of the great strike which some months ago involved two hundred and fifty thousand miners. The parallel would have been complete if President Cleveland and his Cabinet had issued an invitation to the strikers on the one side and the corporations on the other, to arrange for the adjudication of their differences by the appointment of an equal number of men to represent each side with an umpire appointed by the Cabinet. It is all very well to talk of National arbitration laws, but if the Cabinet itself could have at once arranged an arbitration between contending parties, we would have gone a long way toward settling the great dispute.

We cannot but regret that the laboring masses have not yet reached the solidarity that would enable them peacefully to carry their principles to the ballot box, that they might be incarnated in law. We suppose that their aim in striking was to present to the public an object lesson so impressive that everybody would be obliged to think about the difficulty of the situation whether he would or no. But there are two methods which we believe would lift like levers if the laborer would but adopt them as the only powers to be invoked. And these two are: Strike together against the saloon and strike together at the ballot box!

"ONWARD, CHRISTIAN SOLDIERS."

We have witnessed many inspiring scenes, but nothing has ever come so near to our ideal of the Women's Temperance Crusade which we were not so happy as to see, as did the great convention of the Christian Endeavorers in Cleveland. It represented an enrolled membership of two millions, and numbered forty thousand persons, twenty thousand having come in spite of the strike from outside the Buckeye state. The entire number was not, indeed could not be, present at any one time, but on Sunday, July 15, we addressed twenty thousand of them in two great audiences.

Almost every Protestant denomination was represented, young men being present in much larger numbers than we had thought to find them, although young women were in the majority. Father and Mother Clark were not present, the health of the gentle "Founder" not permitting him to participate in the great convocation. Rev. Dr. Charles Dickinson, of Boston, was his representative and filled the position nobly, while as his "Aaron and Hur" he had on either hand, Secretary Baer and Treasurer Shaw, two young men of earnest devotion and great executive ability, who were evidently at the very forefront of leadership in that mighty host. Our friend and contributor, Amos R. Wells, managing editor of The Golden Rule (organ of the society), with his capable young wife (newly acquired), was the central figure wherever he appeared.

The music from that "Hallelujah Chorus" was something never to be forgotten. If the average church choir could take a hint from such musical directors as Foster of Nashville, Lincoln of Philadelphia, and Warren of Cleveland, or if the Park sisters with their golden cornets and mandolins could be indefinitely reproduced, the Gospel would be sung into the hearts of the nation with a vigor and warmth that would exceed anything ever yet witnessed.

Rev. J. Z. Tyler, chairman, and Miss Miriam C. Smith, secretary of the committee of arrangements, bore away the prize by the completeness with which every detail was carried out. Naturally enough our greatest interest centered in the address on welcome evening by the secretary of our young women's work, Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, of New York City, and the thunderbolt of a speech on "Christian Endeavor Versus the Saloon," by John G. Woolley. As these are published in THE UNION SIGNAL we will only say they were all that we should expect from two whom we greatly love and honor.

It is wonderful to think that just when the church attendance had so fallen off as to cause serious apprehension in the minds of good people, and just when the prayer-meeting had become perfunctory almost beyond the point of endurance, a movement should have come to the rescue whose characteristic feature was the emphasis it placed on doing the will of God. An old lady of our acquaintance went down the aisle of her home church at the close of a great sermon by her pastor, murmuring to herself, "It has all been said; it has all been said—now it has got to be done." This may be called a rough rendering of the Christian Endeavor motto. The purpose of these young people is to work out their own salvation, "while God worketh in them to will and to do of His good pleasure."

It is to us a pleasant, as it is probably a most significant, coincidence that the Christian Endeavor society was born in the quiet home of a pastor in the prohibition state of Maine, who, having felt the need of more vigorous coöperation, called together the young people of his parish and organized them as fellow-laborers.

They promised Christ, not their pastor, that they would be present so far as possible at all the meetings of the church, and would participate audibly in all the social meetings "in some way other than by singing." Henry Ward Beecher used to say that he "learned to preach by preaching," and we cannot estimate the force imparted to the great wave of human testimony for Christ by the taking of this one pledge on the part of the two millions of young people. As women, we especially rejoice that the closed lips of so many young women have been thus magically opened, and we are confident that in the early years of the next century there will be thousands of women ministers who found their vocation when they found their voices in the house of God.

Although the convention was an inspiration from first to last; although its declarations that the saloon must go were as pronounced as any that the white-ribbon army has put forth; although it voted to raise a million dollars for the missionary cause in the next year, and to make active Christian citizenship the central fact of its work in our land, there was nothing so eloquent of the good time coming as the consecration meeting with which the great convention closed. After a stirring sermon by Rev. Dr. Behrends, of Brooklyn, Secretary Baer came forward in one of the tents holding ten thousand, while Rev. Dr. Dickinson did the same in the other great tent, and telegrams were read (in both) from Japan, China, India, the Congo, Madagascar, and a dozen other remote countries, with one from Australia, saying that they had calculated the difference in time, and their National Christian Endeavor meeting would hold its opening session just as the convention in Cleveland reached its closing hours. With this announcement Secretary Baer asked all to bow their heads in affectionate remembrance and in prayer for their brothers and sisters of the antipodes. No matter how worldly one might be, the sight of ten thousand young heads bowed in recognition of the "tie that binds," could not fail to touch the heart. Then followed the roll-call of consecration.

Beginning with Alabama, the name of every state and territory and the District of Columbia passed in review. As this was done all the delegates from that state who were not in the other tent rose in a body, and standing together repeated, so that all could clearly understand it, a passage of Scripture they had chosen as the motto for the year to come, or expressed in concert some special purpose of blessing toward the people among whom they lived, closing with the singing of a verse. When the Kentucky representatives rose in a group, radiant with enthusiasm, and sang to the tune, "My Old Kentucky Home, Good-night," beautiful Gospel words; when a great group from Baltimore and vicinity sang, with their clear Southern voices, some sweet Gospel sentiment to the old decisive tune of "Maryland, My Maryland"; when the delegates from the District of Columbia stood together singing, "Our Father's God to Thee, Author of Liberty," the feeling of the audience was so strong and tender that we could not forbear making the welkin ring with a chorus of ten thousand voices as we took up the strain.

We wanted Massachusetts to sing, "The Breaking Waves Dashed High," especially those lines:

"They came to seek what here they found, Freedom to worship God."

Fifteen hundred stood together from Michigan, and as they sang, "We Are the Christian Endeavorers of Michigan," the enthusiasm reached its climax, until a woman stood "all sole alone," to the call for one of the western territories, when the white lilies which had bloomed a score of times already gave her a swift and wide salute.

Naturally enough we were most of all stirred by the response of Illinois, as the strike was on and pessimists were hinting that "the country had gone to the dogs." But as the great delegation rose and repeated in concert: "Our hope is in the Lord, our God," and with jubilant voices joined in singing, "Glory, Glory Hallelujah," we felt that in the homes and churches of the Prairie state were the heavenly forces that could triumph over pitiful ignorance and wild fanaticism, bringing the saner mind and steadier heart to bear on the turbulence that has made the timorous almost traitors in their despairing declarations.

Surely it was good to be there upon that mount of vision, and thence to go with sturdy steps down to the dusty plain where there is not only conflict and contradiction but the bugle of hope and the white ensign of Christ's militant army calling strong souls onward to victory in the wonderful battle of life.

THE WHITE RIBBON.

We suppose that the white badge was adopted by the strikers in token of a peaceful rather than a bloody intent, as white has been from time immemorial the universally accepted token of a pacific purpose. It is well-known that the white ribbon was chosen nearly twenty years ago as the emblem of the W. C. T. U., and is worn by temperance women in all countries. It indicates that we stand for prohibition, purity, patriotism and peace, and we should be glad if every workman in Christendom would wear our badge with this significance. We have no doubt but that in the present crisis it has been worn by thousands of intelligent and patriotic working men and women who meant by it that they purposed peacefully to secure for themselves a larger and more just proportion of the results of their toil. We also know, alas, that it was worn by many a saloon-keeper, drunkard and rough, and doubtless by some who disgraced themselves by deeds of violence. But we know, too, that the red, white and blue waves over many a dramshop, gambling-house and haunt of infamy, yet its keynote was set at the highest place in the nation, for it always waves over the Capitol and legislative halls. In like manner the white ribbon having been chosen as the emblem of the great, pure and mother-hearted host whose motto is "For God and Home and Every Land," we claim it now as we shall always, no matter who may disport it "amid scenes of confusion and creature complaint." It has been consecrated by too many tears and prayers, borne at the front in too many heroic battles, and waved aloft in too many beautiful victories ever to be given over to those who in its sacred name would work the ruin of society. It has been placed over pulseless hearts that had been warm and true to the sacred purpose for which the white ribbon stands. It has been worn by loyal men who have stood by us women in crucial tests when we had "to choose where two paths meet, the narrow or the broad." The white ribbon is ours forever and a day, and grows more dear and precious to us as the hurtling arrows thicker fly and a heavy cloud enwraps the battle-field.

AN INTERVIEW INTERVIEWED.

We are requested by Miss Willard, our senior editor, to state that an interview in the Chicago Evening Journal, published July 19, and which was not stenographic, needs two or three elucidations, viz.:

"We must win our battles hereafter through the reputable men of both parties" was meant to mean "reconstructed in a new party!"

"Perhaps our campaign has gone below the surface only to reappear when the foundations of old parties are undermined." Miss Willard does not think things look much as if our campaign was "below the surface." She would prefer the phrase, "above board and going on at full tilt."

Instead of "not being prepared to say that prohibition should be carried forward nationally, by states, or by communities," she is—as the W. C. T. U. has always been—convinced that it must be "nationally and by states." They, not she, were represented as "A voice crying in the wilderness."

The following sentence from the interview Miss Willard desires to have reprinted here:

"Both leading parties contain good men . . who have come to regard party solidarity as part of their life. It is our task to take advantage of times and incidents and group them anew."

"Inferential prohibition" is an expression that she does not understand. She is for prohibition straight.

Miss Willard says that in England the interviewer takes the language of the interviewee stenographically, and then sends a type-written copy or proof sheets of the same for revision. This is the only satisfactory way, and the only way that does justice to both and to the public. She has no criticism on the gentlemen who took the interview upon which this paragraph is a commentary, but perceives that it has been somewhat colored by his own mind as all interviews must be that are not verbatim. The closing paragraph as reported in the Journal will be of special interest to white-ribboners:

Miss Willard was present yesterday at the quarterly meeting of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union Publishing Company, and the financial showing made was so gratifying as to call forth encomiums for Mrs. Grow, the business manager of the company, upon the brilliant record made in a dull business year. Concerning the general work of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union Miss Willard stated that dues are promptly and universally met, and that the order has never been more prosperous in every way.

A TESTIMONIAL WORTH HAVING.

During the disorder that prevailed in Chicago at the time of the great strike, when union printers were on the verge of giving up their work, our hearts were gladdened by the following testimonial, signed by the twenty-five women compositors of our publishing association:

WHEREAS, we, the undersigned employés of the composing rooms of the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, wishing in some manner to show our appreciation of the fair and honorable treatment which we have always received at the hands of our association, do hereby Resolve, First, That our most hearty thanks are due to our business manager, Mrs. C. F. Grow, for continuing to give the same scale of wages to the women employed in our composing room as that given to men.

Second, That, fully realizing the business depression prevailing in our midst, and the heavy burden which is being borne by our manager, we hereby guarantee our willingness and readiness to coöperate with her in any way she may see fit for the best interests of the W. T. P. A.

Third, That while deploring the terrible condition of our city caused by the strike, we firmly believe that all such trouble could be avoided by employers treating employés with the same consideration and courtesy as shown by the W. T. P. A. towards its people.

Fourth, That a special vote of thanks be given to Mr. D. H. Christophel, superintendent of printing, for the unvarying kindness and consideration which he has always shown to the employés of said association and for the interest which he takes in each and every one.

Although a twice told tale, my younger readers may enjoy for the first time the following story, so well told by Mrs. Clinton Smith, of Springfield, Ill.: "Old Abe, the war eagle, that accompanied the Union Army, and was counted as a veteran and a pensioner of the government, was a female, as she testified by the fine egg she laid when peace gave her leisure for domestic duties. The maternal instincts were not destroyed by 'battle scenes and strife.'"

Apropos of the recent discussion in this column, of women's signatures, is the following clipping: "Many women of full age who have never been married are taking the title of 'Mrs.,' and it is interesting to note that they are returning to a custom that has only lately fallen into disuse. 'In the Brandon gallery,' says The Century for June, 'hangs the portrait of Eveline, who was laid to rest 1737, and it is inscribed Mrs. Eveline Bird, daughter of the Hon. Wm. Bird.' Master and Miss are for boys and girls. Mr. and Mrs. are for men and women. Miss is vulgar and pert for an adult woman."

A saloonatic's wail:

"We can stand the preacher's preaching,
We can stand the deacon's prayer,
We can stand the 'moral suasion' plan,
Because they ne'er 'get there.'
But when the cranks begin to vote
On the line they use to pray,
We liquor men begin to shake,
For we fear they'll win the day."

A truth for these times was uttered long ago by Harriet Beecher Stowe: "When you get into a tight place and everything goes against you, and it seems as if you could not hold out a minute longer, never give up then, for that's just the place and time that the tide'll turn."

In a certain large university where neither class nor sex prevails, two young people received the degree of D. D. One was a young woman who has literally "worked her way" through her course of study. In the afternoon she was presented her well-earned divinity degree, and not a whit less respect did she receive from the admiring audience, because she had been seen that very morning, clad in a calico wrapper, washing the steps of the hall where she lived.

Dr. Parker is full of anecdote; he evidently believes that a joke should be after the pattern of Sydney Smith's delightful sayings, "lightning that illumines but never strikes." It seems that when General Booth came to see Dr. Parker, who is a great friend of his, they talked over the social scheme for the "Submerged Tenth," of which Dr. Parker highly approves. At the close, as is his custom, General Booth knelt in prayer, ending with the Scripture words, "And all the people said, Amen!" As Dr. and Mrs. Parker, who are a little new to the method, did not join in the "Amen," the General added sotto voce, "only nobody heard them." Dr. Parker also tells another curious story for the authenticity of which he did not vouch. He said that Mr. Moody once entered a gospel temperance meeting in a strange city with a blue ribbon in his buttonhole, whereupon he was asked, "Are you a reformed drunkard?" and answered with his characteristic emphasis, "No, I am not," upon which his questioner, nothing daunted, said, "Well, don't you think you ought to be?"

ON DUTY.

MISSOURI.

"TRYING"—AND SUCCEEDING.

McDonald county, the southwest corner of the state, held its first annual convention at Pineville, this spring, with great enthusiasm and promise for strong future growth. Mrs. La Mance, the energetic county president, is bringing this newly organized corner right grandly to the front. Mrs. Hoffman gave valuable help during the day, and in the evening delightfully entertained her large audience. On Wednesday evening a very successful Demorest contest was held. Delegates were present from Anderson, Splitlog, Southwest City, Noel, Powell and Sulphur Springs, Ark. Excellent papers and discussions of the most important phases of the work were had, and plans laid for future aggressive action. Brothers Dalton, Elliff, Hudson, Collins, Lamb, Benham and others gave royal help throughout the convention. Mrs. Woods, the district president, was also present to inspire and make this initial effort fruitful. The public effect may be guessed from the following comment in a McDonald county paper: "Whatever we, as individuals, may think of the ways and ideas of these ladies, we must concede that they are earnestly striving to better the moral and social condition of mankind. May their efforts in this direction be crowned with success." The convention will meet next year in Southwest City.

The twenty-third district convention was royally entertained at Neosho, and was a grand success. An excellent program was well carried out. A gold medal contest the first evening and a grand lecture from Mrs. Hoffman, subject. "Women in the Bible," the second evening, were specially enjoyed. Mrs. May Laverell Woods is the president for the coming year. Pierce City will have the convention in 1895. Mrs. Hoffman met with the Neosho union for a Bible reading, and gave lectures at Marionville and Anderson, and also addressed the Prohibitionists of Newton county. The district president writes: "There are signs of progress all along the line."

Two county conventions are reported from the tenth district. The Warren county convention at Warrenton where no union existed was cordially welcomed by the Y. P. S. C. E. and College Temperance Society. Attendance and interest were very good, and the papers and discussions helpful, especially upon the topics "The Greatest Advantage of the W. C. T. U.," and "W. C. T. U. Phase of Christian Endeavor." Miss Georgia Woodhull was reëlected county president, and a union of ten members was organized at Warrenton.

St. Charles county has but two unions, the St. Charles Y and the Lewis Y. They met in convention at Cattleville, with Miss Lucy Gillette as county president. The St. Charles Y reported twenty-six members, with over $63 raised for local work. The Lewis Y, organized six months ago, reported nine active and ten honorary members, with over $21 in the treasury. Contest work is being steadily pushed by both unions, and temperance sentiment is steadily increasing. Mrs. Millie Lewis, the district president, gave an entertaining lecture at each of these conventions.

The Johnson county convention met June 5, at Holden, Mrs. M. E. Golladay, district president, presiding. The reports of work done by the Kingsville, Warrensburg and Holden unions filled the day. Our state vice-president, Mrs. Lillian Wood, aided the work with many helpful suggestions during the day, and delivered a fine address to a most attentive audience in the evening. A new union of seven members was reported from Knob Noster. Mrs. Crissey's "Practical Plans for Prison Work," Mrs. Hedge's "Recent Important Events Pertaining to Suffrage," and Mrs. Evans' "Why Do We Call Ourselves the W. C. T. U?" were very helpful papers.

The Kingsville union has had a silver medal contest since last report, and on May 25 held a public meeting at which the district president, Mrs. Golladay, made a fine address, bringing fresh interest and new members to the union. Warrensburg has had a gold medal contest very recently.

The South Side Springfield unions, though not making reports for some time, have been very busy. They are prospering and steadily pursuing regular department work. The Industrial Home has a most efficient president, who, when the work seemed to weaken for want of a suitable matron, left her own home and took up her abode within the Industrial Home, and has made it all that its name implies. One hundred and sixty-eight have been cared for in the year, and of these, forty were fallen women, almost all of whom have been permanently redeemed from sin and shame. Many conversions have been made, and girls are now living purified Christian lives, who came as wretched, sin-sick souls to the Home. $1,075 have been raised and expended for the Home during the past year.

The Springfield Y's are earnest, untiring workers, finding innumerable ways to combine business with pleasure.

The railroad work is most efficiently conducted, services being held weekly in the Gulf, and semi-monthly in the Frisco shops. There are 600 members enrolled in the R. R. T. A. The railroad men are always included in the flower mission distribution, which was observed by Springfield unions June 8th instead of 9th, as the shops are not run on Saturday. Miss Addie Sherman, the railroad Evangelist, has been working for some time under the auspices of the M. E. church, her labors resulting in hundreds of conversions.

Petitions from the Springfield W. C. T. U. to the city council, asking that the ordinance prohibiting the sale of cigarettes and tobacco to minors under sixteen years of age be enforced, was graciously received, and the marshall instructed to rigidly enforce the ordinance. A petition endorsed by the literary clubs of the city, and presented to the board of education, asking that a "Supervisor of Improved Methods of Primary Instruction" be employed in the public schools, has resulted in the election of Miss Mattie Sherwood of Cook county, Ill., Normal school to fill that office. Suffrage is receiving special attention, three fine addresses having been given by Mrs. Julia B. Nelson of Minnesota.

On June 3, 4 and 5, a series of lectures from the peerless orator, John G. Woolley, delighted and uplifted the hearts of the temperance workers. His earnestness, zeal, gentle manners and matchless eloquence won the hearts of the people, who are eager to have him come again. A diversion in the lives of these busy workers was an experience meeting, in which each told in rythmic story how she had earned fifty cents. Fifteen dollars of the pledge for state work was thus raised.

The third district has been helped and strengthened by a series of Bible readings conducted by Mrs. Rebecca Hall, state superintendent of evangelistic work. She spent ten days in Princeton, having meetings in all the churches, and two days in Trenton. Mrs. Ida F. Burr, president of third district, has been visiting and lecturing at several points, among them Milan, Unionville, Powerville and Harris, awakening slumberers to fresh activity, and greatly increasing the interest in temperance work generally.

The Maryville union of ten members keeps a column supplied in county paper, and have held four public temperance meetings in the past two months, besides carrying on several departments of work. Professor Gantz, of the Albany Christian College, and Rev. Mr. Shackleford, of the M. E. Church, South, have each delivered very powerful temperance addresses. The liquor power is strong, a saloon, a gallon house and liquor drug stores combining in the work of destruction, but "a few women" are determined, nevertheless, to do what they can to oppose the ruin.

Neosho has had Colonel Sobieski to stir the people. Adrian had a public meeting, eclipsing former efforts, and calling forth warm congratulations from the local press.

The Fairfax union of thirteen busy workers held a successful Neal Dow meeting, and is doing good work in several departments. A continued agitation has resulted in the closing out of a billard hall.

Excelsior Springs enjoyed the help of a visit from the district president. The many sick at this health resort were remembered by the union on flower mission day. Huntsville union, lately revived, has been giving special attention to the poor, blind and needy at the county farm and the jail.

An entertainment, with literary program and refreshments, by the Barry union, stirred up temperance sentiment and netted $18.65. Mrs. Rollar, district president, has paid them a helpful visit, and the W. C. T. U. is steadily gaining in public favor. The L. T. L. is reorganized, and in charge of Miss Alice Williams.

Deepwater union, organized in January, meets every Saturday, and is doing some vigorous work. Frequent gospel temperance meetings are held, at which collections for the W. C. T. U. work are taken. Their first Demorest contest was held in June.

An old folks' contest was held by the Hamilton union, June 19, a large number of Demorest contests having preceded it.

The Austin union has been making rapid growth, gaining numbers and taking up new departments of work, that in the Sunday-school pledge line being especially successful. Their seventh medal contest was held June 20, with a gold one soon to follow.

Craig union observed Neal Dow anniversary with a social and an appropriate program. An enthusiastic gospel temperance meeting was held recently in which warm speeches of praise were made by the honoraries for the good work done by the W. C. T. U. The union gave a memorial entertainment at the M. E. church, which was beautifully decorated, the G. A. R. being the guests of honor. Several old soldiers were called upon to make speeches as part of the program, and at its close many of the veterans enlisted under the "white banner" to fight "for God and Home and Native Land."

On June 8 the whole union, more than forty women and thirty men, were invited to spend the day at the lovely country home of Mr. and Mrs. McCoy, members of the union, where Fairfax union and a number of friends in that neighborhood were invited to meet with them.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

THE THIRD QUARTERLY MEETING

was held June 20, at the North Capital M. E. church, Mrs. M. E. Griffith, president, in the chair. Mrs. M. E. Merrick, superintendent evangelistic department, conducted the opening devotions; passages of Scripture that had been especially helpful were quoted by a number who were present, the influence of the Holy Spirit was very manifest and each received fresh courage for the work. Some of our prominent workers were absent, either being sick themselves or attending upon the sick. We were honored in having with us Mrs. Angie F. Newman of Nebraska, and Mrs. Matthews of England, organizer of the British W. C. T. U.

The pastor of the church, Rev. Pate, made an address of welcome, in which he said that when a boy he strayed into a W. C. T U. meeting and for the first time thought about the salvation of his soul; also spoke of how he had been enabled to convince a grocer, with whom he dealt, of the fallacy that the sale of liquor was profitable financially when it was proven at the end of a month, that those who bought the intoxicants were all indebted to him for their groceries: the result was he ceased to be a liquor grocer.

Mrs. Hodes, for the ladies' aid society of the church, made us welcome in a neat speech. Rev. M. F. B. Rice also made a brief address. Mrs. J. A. Bartlett made a fitting response. Mr. Jesse Suter (who is employed by the Anti-Saloon League of the District to attend the meetings of the Excise Board) gave some interesting items as to how licenses are procured and the law evaded, also as to how the opinion of the district attorney varies on the same point frequently.

The following superintendents reported:

Flower Mission: Money expended, $31.51; bouquets distributed, 705; visits to sick, 80; visits to hospitals, 27; growing plants left at hospitals; illustrated papers given at Children's Hospital; ten dozen oranges given to sick; Methodist Home visited three times, Edith Gray sang and recited, much to the delight of the old folks; almshouse and jail visited; eight letters written; one Testament given; 711 pages literature distributed; 131 calls made; a large quantity of clothing distributed, also fruit and other food; pulpit supplied eleven times with flowers; sheaves of wheat provided for obsequies of members; unions visited, two; through the kindness of Mrs. S. D. La Fetra, Metropolitan Y gave a Flower Tea at Hotel Fredonia, thus increasing their treasury.

Legislative and Petition: Have waited (in company with Mrs. M. E. Griffith and Mrs. H. Crosby) on congressional committee on Appropriations, where they spoke in favor of increase of pay for government char-women; assisted the press committee of the yearly meeting of Friends of Baltimore, by procuring the signatures of the general officers to their petition for purity of the press; report progress in the work of securing the voice of the churches of the district in favor of prohibition.

Mothers' Meetings: Six visits made to unions; house to house visitation; visits to six mothers; talked with them in regard to religion and temperance; distributed literature; seventy-five cents expended; six talks on narcotics.

Y. W. C. T. U.: $48.31 in the treasuries; meetings held; 115 members; lines of work, messenger boys, literature, flower mission; the district superintendent has made two efforts to establish a Y in one of our churches, also to revive one in another section of the city; the latter proved successful; have attended five regular and two social meetings, a public meeting and one Epworth League; expended by superintendent, $5.48. Miss Frances Ensign addressed a public meeting at Vermont Avenue Christian church. Miss Ensign and the district superintendent were at headquarters to receive the Y's the following day.

Sabbath Observance: 1,372 pages literature distributed; much personal work done; spoke at a mission; early in April a "speak-easy" was raided, and arrests made for selling liquor on the Sabbath; commissioners raided a ball game, arresting sixteen of the players, they having been warned not to play on the Sabbath; have spoken at four meetings; made a strong effort to hold a public meeting in the interest of district Sunday rest bill; have been to the Capitol five or six times in the interest of said bill; the committee have reported negatively on the bill; they think we have Sunday laws enough, but the laws are very meager; have consulted Hons. Blair, Dingley, Holman, Morse, Pickler, Johnson and Baker, of New Hampshire; have tried three times (but all in vain) to see Senator Kyle, chairman committee on Education and Labor, to which committee this bill was referred, then wrote to him; after the bill to open the public buildings on Sunday was introduced, made another effort to see Senator Kyle, was successful; he has no fears that the last named bill will pass, and has hardly more hope for the Sabbath Rest bill; he thinks work outside Congress, in the churches and in the district, will be more effective; several pastors have been asked and urged to take the cause up, and urge their people to do their duty and meet their responsibility.

Unfermented Wine: Four ministers of the Episcopal church have been called on; all use the fermented wine at the Lord's table; the same is used in a few of the other denominations. Hope the coming year to complete the work of the department, that is so far as canvassing all the churches of the city and decidedly convincing those who do not as yet feel it their duty to succumb to the use of grape juice at the Lord's table.

Juvenile Work: Frances Willard band reports twenty-five new members. Union Chapel Band is in a very flourishing condition. Newman Legion have voted to take the seal course of study in the fall. Capitol Hill Band are very decided in their opinions as to what shall be done with King Alcohol; their love for the great cause is not on the decrease, the meetings held have been well attended; there have been accessions at each meeting; have had excellent talks from adult friends, one by Mrs. Chapman on narcotics, of especial interest; have been taken to California and back by Major Walker, showing how he found the liquor question all along the way. The last meeting was held on Children's Day, after the reading of a story by little Rosalie Bartlett, showing how the very smallest duties of life can be done for the glory of God; the children were given an opportunity to give their experience on the line of shining for Jesus; one stated she had induced two children from a beer-drinking home to sign the pledge and join the Band; another child told how she had persuaded a man and wife to cease beer drinking.

Wesley Chapel Band reports from September, 1893, to June, 1894: Meetings held regularly the third Sabbath in each month with an average attendance of sixty; some members belong to other Sabbath-schools, but having no temperance organization join through the influence of the members. The meetings are bright and interesting, the music is a special feature; papers and other temperance literature are regularly distributed. Many of the members are faithful in attendance through winter's cold and summer's heat; and intense interest in the cause is manifested by some of the youngest members, one bright-eyed girl declaring that she "would starve to death rather than eat anything that came from a saloon!" One of the boys when told by his physician that he only had a few hours to live and must take brandy to keep up his strength, replied, "It will not save me and I cannot break my pledge." He passed to the better land leaving an impression of firmness of character which will never be forgotten by those who knew him.

Harvest Home was held which was entirely successful, the decorations were of fruits and vegetables, the fruit afterwards being sent to the sick. Miss Andrews, the president of the band, presented it with a beautiful memorial banner, costing ten dollars, the nucleus of which was twenty-five cents, that had been saved by a little girl. Miss Andrews had invested and reinvested the money by the sale of candy. A young woman whose life has been blighted by a drunken father who died, gives five dollars annually to the work of prevention, rather than in decorating the grave of the deceased. The pledge is presented to the Sunday school each quarter after the temperance lesson has been taught. Names of the older boys and girls are thus secured for the pledge. Two meetings have been held in the interest of the Band of Mercy, many taking the pledge to be kind to animals. Over three hundred names are in the roll and as far as we know very few have broken their pledge.

Narcotics: Gave a talk on tobacco to the Capitol Hill Band of Hope, also to a class at the South East Branch of the Central Union Mission; have persuaded a young man to sign the pledge not to use tobacco or alcoholic drinks for three months, hoping at the end of that time to write "forever" in the place of three months; have talked with a number of boys and young men against the use of tobacco. The cigarette is making such havoc among the school boys, that some of our public instructors are taking the matter in hand and forming anti-cigarette societies in the schools.

The noon-tide hour of prayer was conducted by Mrs. M. E. Cohen, after which adjournment for lunch was taken.

Afternoon session: Mrs. La Fetra conducted the devotions; minutes of the morning session read and approved. Report of treasurer: Receipts, $208.60; disbursements, $189.82. At this juncture an appeal was made by Mrs. T. A. Williams and Mrs. M. E. Cohen for a liberal collection to help the treasury during the summer months, the response was gratifying. Mrs. S. D. La Fetra and Mrs. Anna Bovee were asked to convey the greetings of the union to Miss Willard on the evening of her reception in New York.

The report of work among messenger boys was then given. It is growing in good results. A social has been held each week, picture talks, instrumental and vocal music, fancy club swinging and recitations have been given by friends to entertain the boys, as well as good solid instruction. Signers to the pledge have been the result.

A large audience gathered at the Metropolitan M. E. church and enjoyed a unique and artistic performance, the principal feature being the "Chalk Talk" by Prof. Geo. E. Little. A quartet from the Columbia Zither Club played some of its charming music. The baritone solo with organ accompaniment, and the organ solo, were rich in artistic beauty and excellence. A vocal solo by Miss Emma Devan, a recitation by little Y. J. Kilgore, and the "Fife and Drum March" by Master Kirkwood closed the program. Mrs. Griffith, president of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and Mr. F. M. Bradley, each spoke of the work among the messenger boys, and a collection was taken for the department.

Receipts from all sources $50.16, expended $72.07; balance advanced by superintendent.

Corresponding secretary's report: This quarter has been one of steady plodding, which has been propelled by principle when the enthusiasm of a great convocation (Neal Dow) has passed into conviction. When I compare the reports that have come to me to those of last quarter I can write on them "ditto"; when during the pressure of hard times distracting thoughts on tariff, sugar trusts, good roads, "wherewithal to be clothed and fed," etc., to say we are doing fairly well is a good report. Two reports bear special mention. Chapin is a model union, held up for other unions; some may say "they have the most active working force in the district"; that may be, but most of them were once the quiet Marys, sitting still in the house. Chapin reports five members transferred; two, Mrs. Hannum and Miss Waugh, who were exceeding faithful, have gone to their reward. The meetings have been held regularly, always interesting and profitable: frequently visitors from a distance are with us, giving words of cheer; among the number a Japanese W. C. T. U. woman, who gave us a brief synopsis of Miss West's work in her country. A spiritual uplift always rewards those who attend the meetings. Membership, 184; eight honorary, eight new members; $66.85 raised for local work. West Washington union, which is but a few months old, reports forty-four members; have held seven meetings. Mrs. Jones and Kelly, of the South East union, have passed away; they were earnest helpers.

Resolutions were passed by Chapin union appealing to the Sabbath-loving and God-fearing citizens of this community to bring to bear all right and judicious means upon Congress to secure the passage of Senator Kyle's bill for the protection of Sunday in the District of Columbia.

Rev. Wm. G. Hubbard of Columbus, Ohio, delivered a lecture on the "Higher Life of Nations."

Dr. Dorman, of New Haven, Conn., lectured in Union M. E. church, on the "Effects of Alcohol on Body and Mind," illustrated by paintings and chemical experiments.

Brookland union gave a reception to the district officers in the spring.

The North Capitol union held its monthly meeting in the North Capitol M. E. church, the pastor, Rev. Charles L. Pate, made an address full of encouragement and inspiration. Mrs. M. E. Griffith gave an instructive Bible reading on "What God Thinks of the Liquor Traffic." Rev. Mr. Graham and Mrs. Griffith addressed a good meeting at the Thirty-first Street church. Miss Pauline Leavens lectured on the "Ideal Body, and How to Clothe It." A lecture at headquarters was given by Rev. Mr. Muir.

June 3 Mrs. Sophia Grubb, National superintendent, work among foreigners, spoke at Luther Memorial church, Rev. J. G. Butler, the pastor, giving us part of his evening service, it being the twentieth anniversary of the dedication of the church. June 17, Mrs. Matthews, of England, spoke at the Vermont Avenue Christian church.

The district president has given seven public addresses on various phases of the temperance question, and has arranged for, presided over or taken some part in fifteen public meetings, besides committee work. The Wednesday meetings of the district have been devotional in character, as well as papers being read and talks given.

Literature Department: Distributed 3,315 pages; at almshouse, 250 magazines; workhouse, 200 tracts; leaflets, 350; religious papers, 75; distributed at herdic stables leaflets, papers, tracts, numbering 200; the same at barber shops, 400.

Prison and Jail Work: Twelve visits made to the jail, including almshouse and hospitals; distributed 726 papers; one who was executed left a good Christian testimony and showed his appreciation of the interest taken in him by the Christian workers; a young man said he had learned to love God and his Bible while incarcerated. The Bible has been read to a blind inmate of the almshouse.

Evangelistic Work: Some cottage meetings held; conducted seven meetings; also fifteen Bible readings; service conducted at the Central Union mission; spoken twice to the inmates of the Soldiers' Home; visited many sick, reading, talking and praying with them, also fourteen visits besides to sick; spent two weeks with one sick person, and two and three days with others, helping nurse; a homeless woman taken in for two weeks, until she found employment; distributed literature, and collected four dollars for a poor family; clothing given. The Willow Tree Alley mission has been thoroughly cleaned; the children are still being cared for by the missionary. Mrs. R. F. Brown is untiring in her efforts, and is at present getting the children ready to attend Sabbath-school. Five of these children were brought to the quarterly meeting, and sang "Saloons must go" and "Jesus loves me." Mrs. Brown has distributed four thousand pages of literature and given eight families the Providence Lithograph Bible pictures, such as are used in the primary class in the Sabbath-schools. They are given by a Sabbath-school.

Scientific Temperance Instruction: The schools in the southwest section of the city teach this branch, but in other parts of the city the law is apparently treated with indifference.

Mrs. Angie Newman and Mrs. Matthews each addressed the meeting in the afternoon.

THE unions of the county were all represented at the White county, Ill., convention in Norris City, not long ago. Prominent departments of work were taken up, and officers elected.

PENNSYLVANIA PENCILINGS.

"What gifts for Christ then bring ye with the rest? Your hands have worked well; is your courage spent in hand work only? Have you nothing best which generous souls may perfect and present, and He shall thank the givers for?"

This is a typical June day, and your correspondent has spent most of it under the "vaulted dome" trying to bring order out of a vast chaos of correspondence from various sources, and now you see the result.

ERIE COUNTY

held their inspiring convention at Union City and received a most cordial welcome. Dr. Fradenburg and Mrs. Goodnough gave most pleasant words of greeting. Excellent essays were read by Mrs. Rev. Wade on "The Danger Signal," and Mrs. Ella Ingles on "Franchise." A beautiful memorial service was held in memory of four of the members of the W. C. T. U. Mrs. Hammer was present and gave one of her pleasing talks to the children; also conducted a Bible reading and lectured in the evening to a large audience. Excellent reports were given by the various county superintendents. Over forty delegates were present. The annual address, given by the county president, Mrs. Alice Trow, was a "feast of good things" concisely stated. The last evening of the convention was given to the Y's, and nobly did they acquit themselves. Mrs. Trow was reëlected president.

The semi-annual convention of

was held at Kane; owing to illness of the county president, Mrs. Wakelee, vice-president, presided. An interesting feature of the convention was the school of methods conducted by the various superintendents.

Mrs. Fritts, of Bradford, conducted a Bible reading. Dr. Hariet Kane contributed a valuable paper on "Health and Heredity," which was requested for publication. "Our House Beautiful" was ably presented by Mrs. Wakelee, and a strong resolution endorsing Mrs. Carse, and promising coöperation in the great enterprise she has undertaken, etc. Mrs. Louise Parsons gave the address of welcome, and Mrs. Ida Chapman responded in a beautiful poem which was also requested for publication. Mrs. Alice Hirsch gave a fine recitation; Mrs. Julia Pickett read an able paper on "The Crusade"; Mrs. Bertha Howe's paper on "Lucy Stone, Her Life and Purpose" was well received and commended, one gentleman saying, "It was the best and most sensible thing he had ever heard a woman give from the platform."

The report of prison work by Mrs. Stevens was very touching, and a vote of thanks given for the good work she had done. Mrs. Howe conducted a parliamentary drill, Mrs. Chapman a drill in physical culture. The L. T. L. gave songs, after which Miss Crawford, state Y organizer, gave an address to the children. The last night of the convention was taken up by the Y's. The program was entertaining and instructive, consisting of one original dialogue, paper on Flower Mission and address by Miss Crawford. Thus closed one of the most successful sessions ever held in this county.

The Newberry union has taken up mothers' meeting as a special line of work.

He conducted a meeting for men only at which 600 were present; one for women only at which 650 were present; 90 new names were given for membership as a result. The L. T. L. celebrated Neal Dow Day and sent him a card; he replied and sent them a paper containing an account of his life. The mothers' meetings held weekly are well attended.

Miss Ida Clothier was present and spoke for the First, Sixth, and other unions. She pleased all and new members were added at each meeting.

A very successful stamp social and penny quiz was held by this union as well as a kindergarten tea, which was well attended. Mrs. A. M. Rice has done good work in VENANGO COUNTY, having organized eight new societies during a two weeks' tour. Three new unions and five Loyal Temperance Legions are the result of her visit.

WARREN COUNTY has issued a neat directory, from which we note that there are twenty-seven unions in the county. This county also has a local lecture bureau consisting of nine of their best speakers. Mrs. Ellen H. Lacey is the efficient county president.

NOTES.

The state L. T. L. convention held at Gettysburg, June 13 and 14, was largely attended and much interest manifested. Sixteen graduates received diplomas and twenty-six graduates seals to their diplomas. Mrs. Hammer lectured the first evening and conducted a parliamentary drill in the afternoon. The convention made a brief visit to the battle-field, and on their return stopped at the National Cemetery, where a consecration service was held.

Mrs. Olive Pond Amies conducted schools of methods in Armstrong and Butler counties during the month of June.

State Convention will be held October 2 to 6 in Conwell's Temple, Philadelphia.

Eighteen new unions is the record since last report.

Very successful parlor meetings were held by the following Potter county unions: North Bingham, Ulysses and Ellisburg, at which fine collections were secured.

Several of our workers have received the call to "come up higher": Mrs. McClellan, president of Harrisburg union, Mrs. Post, formerly state recording secretary of the Pennsylvania W. C. T. U's. Miss Mollie McGeehon, former treasurer of the Greenville, Mercer county, Young Women's union, died June 24. This is the first time death has invaded our ranks.

Mercer county will hold the annual convention at Sandy Lake, September 20-21.

Moorhead union, Alleghany county, has been doing excellent work.

TEXAS TIDINGS.

Our state president sends me the following account of the death of Mrs. Harrison, president of the central division of the Texas Woman's Christian Temperance Union. "I was with her frequently during her last illness. The Central union kept fresh flowers always in her room, sat up with her, read and wrote for her. Ministers called upon her. Her resignation, patience and faith were perfect. Not once did she doubt or waver. She had the women read THE UNION SIGNAL and White Ribbon to her so she 'wouldn't get behind in the work.' She would ask me every time how I had succeeded and at every good report would smile and thank God.

"When told how Mary Hetherington had voted in Colorado, and assisted in putting out saloon men from office, she said, 'I thank God Mary can use the whole power of her womanhood where it is felt the most.' A little more than a day before she died I visited her last. She had me read Rom. 8, and Rev. 7, and rejoiced in the comfort and hopeful realities therein expressed. When I knelt to pray she said, 'Don't pray that I get well, tell the sisters not to pray that. Your prayers are keeping me. Let me go.'

"We held memorial services for her in the C. P. church. Mrs. Lebon accompanied the body from Fort Worth to McGregor. Especially did Mrs. Harrison rejoice that in the next world there would be service for her."

During Mrs. Stoddard's trip she organized two new unions, one in Greenville, ten members; one in Lawrence, twenty-six women and fourteen men, most of whom paid their dues on the spot. She held public meetings, also instructive ladies' meetings in Marshall, Sulphur Springs, Lawrence, Weatherford, Midland, Colorado, Baird and Eastland. All have the seal of approval. Many are benefited, many accessions. Crowds in nearly every instance.

"This is my second trip on the T. & P.," she writes. "My first was three years ago, and I can now see that the seed then planted is not forgotten by Him who giveth the increase, but is now bearing fruit some fifty and some one hundred fold.

"One man in order to introduce the temperance physiologies in schools, and parents pleading hard times, took the children of many schools for pay, and the children coöperating with their mothers, brought chickens, eggs, butter and money, and not a cent did he lose on his investment.

"Unfermented wine at sacrament is being introduced. Awakening as to using tobacco, etc. There is no reason to be discouraged when God is so signally blessing our efforts."

As the members of the unions can see this is only one letter from Mrs. Stoddard. No one else writes to me. I only ask for postal cards. I cannot use long letters. I am tempted to write imaginary accounts of the good things being done in our principal unions. I know you are at work. Why not let our temperance hosts know that Texas is keeping step in the onward march.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

THE Villa Road Baptist Church, Schenectady, N. Y., gave an enthusiastic silver medal contest, June 8, and the medal was won by Miss Madge Fryer.

A CHRISTIAN worker, who passed away in the spring, Mrs. Frances Bedell, of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., was a loyal and working member of the W. C. T. U., hopeful and sincere in her labors and professions.

AN earnest worker in the W. C. T. U., and an uncompromising Christian Prohibitionist, has been removed by the death of Mrs. Mary B. Averill, at the ripe age of seventy-one, occurring June 8, in Groton, N. Y.

A COURSE of four lectures by Mrs. Carrie L. Grout, of Rockford, Ill., just given at Freeport, have been well attended and given general satisfaction. Her talks on Home Life and Child Culture were of interest to every woman.

"THE people of Byron, Minn., had the pleasure of entertaining the Olmsted county W. C. T. U. convention last month. Forty delegates were present and a goodly number of other members and visitors," writes a correspondent. "It was declared a grand success, the best held yet in the county."

A FEW weeks since at Augusta, Me., Mrs. Rebecca Sturgis passed very suddenly away at the age of seventy-eight years. A Christian worker of more than forty years standing, Mrs. Sturgis gave her influence to all the varied interests of her home church, and especially to the W. C. T. U., of which she was a member nearly twenty years. From her youth she had been a constant and devoted teacher in the Sabbath-school, holding that position at the time of her death.

A MOST helpful instance of applied inspiration is found in the report of the work of the Pawcatuck, Conn., W. C. T. U. with its sixty-two active members; its fine L. T. L. numbering one hundred and forty-two; its work is the evangelistic, scientific temperance, literature, flower mission and press departments; its headquarters rented at two hundred dollars a year, etc. Back of all this year's effort stands the inspiration (caught at the Boston convention) of one woman, a New York school teacher, who found time with all her professional duties to start the union, and gives it now her thought and attention at the long range of one hundred and forty-five miles.

A CIRCULAR giving the exact particulars of the petition against the sale of liquors within four miles of all Illinois colleges which receive aid by state legislative appropriations has been received at THE UNION SIGNAL office. A recent item appeared in this column which, through a misapprehension, would give rise to a wrong idea of the getters-up of this important bit of temperance effort. It seems that the "local temperance union" of Champaign, Ill., where the movement originates is not the W. C. T. U., Y. W. C. T. U. or L. T. L. only, but is also composed of the Y. P. S. C. E., Epworth League and other Christian Associations who are coöperating in the matter. The intention is to get the petition circulated in one thousand cities or towns, and to secure at least one hundred thousand names.

MRS. SARAH JANE STICKNEY entered into the heavenly rest from her home in Los Angeles, Cal., June 8. Mrs. Stickney was the mother of Miss Gabrella Stickney, corresponding secretary of Southern California, and a woman of pronounced character and devotion to the temperance cause. She was one of the original Crusaders in Chicago, where she had made her home from 1850, and presided over a large meeting at which Miss Willard made one of her first speeches. The Stickney home was within a few feet of the present site of the Temperance Temple, showing how the city has developed within twenty years. Although she had lived in the sunset state but a short time, Mrs. Stickney was greatly beloved by the California women, many of whom mourn as though they had lost a real mother, and their hearts are very tender towards the faithful daughter and her three sisters, one of whom was present at the time of the mother's death. At her special request, nothing rested upon her casket except the beloved white ribbon which she was so proud to wear. On June 26 the body was assigned to its last resting place in beautiful Rose Hill cemetery, Chicago, in the presence of many relatives and friends.

A LIFE full of good deeds came to an end when Mrs. Eliza D. Davis of Sandwich, Ill., passed on recently at the ripe age of ninety-two. Mrs. Davis was always interested in the work of the W. C. T. U., being a member of the local union and a total abstainer from all alcoholic liquors, never using them during her long life.

EVANGELISTIC WORK.

To Superintendents of Evangelistic Work:

Trusting that you have kept a careful record of the evangelistic work done during the year, I send the following questions that a suitable report may be presented at our National Convention, and printed in our annual minutes. Will each local and county superintendent answer by letter to her state superintendent, repeating each question and writing the answer in the letter, rather than on the circular, as formerly. The state superintendent will make out her report from such letters and send the summary only to the National superintendent.

QUESTIONS.

1. How many unions in your state have evangelistic superintendents?
2. How many have not, and are you doing all you can to secure one for every local union?
3. How many copies of the National superintendent's recommendations for 1894 were sent out in your state?
4. Have you continued the campaign in the churches?
5. How many church services have been held under the auspices of the W. C. T. U.?
6. How many sermons preached by pastors? How many meetings were addressed by women?
7. In how many were collections taken for the union?
8. How many pages of gospel temperance literature have been distributed during the year?
9. How many unions have inaugurated the system of coöperative evangelistic work, outlined in our last circular?
10. How many visits have been made by each union?
11. Mention results, incidents, etc.
12. Have gospel missions been conducted?
13. How many and with what results?
14. Have Crusade bands been formed, and with what results?
15. Did you observe Crusade day, pentecostal week, and the Neal Dow anniversary? Mention any results, or facts of interest.
16. Did your last state convention observe the hour from 11 to 12 a. m. as a season of devotion and Bible exposition?
17. Have gospel temperance meetings been held, how many?
18. How many out-door services; how many in jails; prisons; penitentiaries; halls; forts; ships; depots; factories, etc.? How many mothers' and cottage meetings?
19. Has your union held or participated in evangelistic conferences, days of prayer, schools of methods, or similar services? Give report of such.
20. Have you held series of services or Bible expositions for uplifting the workers and reaching those not interested? Did you have an evangelist?
21. Please report any evangelistic work done by your union not included in the above questions?
22. Are you and your union growing in spiritual power, and using the helps thereto —"Daily Communion," "Study of the Word," and "Consecrated Service"?

This Question Circular can be secured from the National superintendent for fifty cents per one hundred copies.

Will each state superintendent secure answers to the questions from every local union and send the summary only to the National superintendent? Will she also add a brief letter giving her own outlook over her state, and a report of her personal work during the year?

THE AGE OF CONSENT.

I have waited to give ample time for all corrections and additions to be sent in regarding the tabulated statement of the age of consent in the various states, which was published in THE UNION SIGNAL of April 5. I gladly make public the statements that have been received and trust that we now have a correct table, which I hope will soon need revision because of legal enactments raising the age as high, at least, as it now is in the two states where women vote.

A late number of the Philanthropist gives the information that in Rhode Island, on the 3d ult., the senate passed an act raising the age of consent from fourteen to sixteen years.

WORK FOR ALL. $75 a month salary and expenses paid. If you want employment write at once to P. O. VICKERY, Augusta, Maine.

Mrs. Terwilliger corrects the statement in regard to Minnesota, saying that the act raising the age from ten instead of twelve to sixteen was passed in 1891 instead of 1893. Mrs. Borden, state president of Albuquerque, New Mexico, writes that seven years ago, through the influence of the W. C. T. U., the age was raised from ten to fourteen where it now stands. She states that the work in New Mexico is wholly missionary work, and suggests that literature would be gladly received for gratuitous distribution. I make this fact known feeling sure that some heart will respond to this call and occasionally remember this work among the Mexicans, where Sunday afternoon bull-fights are still the amusement of the people, and an order from the governor to suppress them is totally disregarded. The work there is full of discouragement, and a sympathizing word from the more favored fields of labor will cheer and encourage our dear workers there.

L. S. Mount, of Mississippi, reports the age at sixteen instead of fourteen. Such corrections as this are most welcome.

In the tabulated statement Virginia was left a blank. Mrs. Anna M. M. Fultz, of Staunton, Va., reports the age at twelve, and says: "It is shameful and our legislators shameless. Several years ago we asked for eighteen and they consented to raise it to fourteen. We replied that we considered this an insult to the womanhood of the state. We agreed to compromise at sixteen which they refused to do. We hope by another year to make another effort in this regard."

There still remain one or two blanks in the table to be filled, and I sincerely trust that reports will be sent from these states that we may be able to see at one glance the legal status of girlhood in our country.

Cor. Secy's Notes.

Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, recording secretary National W. C. T. U., writes: "Mrs. Helen L. Bullock has been in Maine a month speaking at county conventions and for local unions. She has done much excellent work for the cause. The evening addresses have been most acceptable, and everywhere she has been she has added to our work numerically and has increased the interest other ways. I most cheerfully commend her work and I am sure she will always be cordially welcomed in Maine.

"Mrs. Emilie U. Burgess and Mrs. M. E. A. Gleason have also been with us, and their addresses have been highly appreciated."

Mrs. Helen M. Stoddard, president Texas W. C. T. U., writes: "The convention just closed was the best we have ever held in Texas. The broadest welcome, the largest crowds (just multitudes), and the amplest collections; best of all most sentiment made in our favor. Mrs. Hoffman was with us, and gave two addresses on Sabbath. They were masterly."

Mrs. L. B. Smith, Ottawa, president Kansas W. C. T. U., sends this good word: "The Kansas W. C. T. U. has just closed two very successful schools of methods. These schools were held in conjunction with the Ottawa and Winfield Chautauqua assemblies. Two hours each day were given the W. C. T. U., and words of commendation reach us every day concerning the good work done along these educational lines."

Our women everywhere will understand the haste at headquarters to finish the spring renovation before the coming of our beloved chieftain, whose arrival had been confidently expected to-day, July 5, but alas! a telegram just received, reads: "Delayed by strikes." Chicago is all agog because of strikes. We are held here, but have hoped no inconvenience would cause the detention of our long-looked-for president. May she be comforted and strengthened.

Mrs. Eva Higgins, president Colorado W. C. T. U., gave us a happy surprise at headquarters a few days ago. Her health and strength are improved by her Eastern trip, and she returns to her arduous labors hoping much for our cause through the ballot of the women of her state. We pray that each W. C. T. U. woman will prove her loyalty to home, loyalty to the W. C. T. U. constitution, to which she has for years subscribed, and the only platform upon which as such she has stood, by casting her ballot with the only party that attempts deliverance from the saloon.

We were much astonished to find in the morning papers of Chicago, July 3, a request from Eugene Debs, president of the American Railway Union, that "all in favor of the strike wear a bow of white ribbon." We are certainly glad if Mr. Debs has recognized the fact that total abstinence is the only safe basis upon which men under all conditions can stand, and upon such ground we shall be glad to welcome every man with a white ribbon, but we think it necessary to remind all, that the white ribbon is the badge of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, made sure to them by an act of incorporation.

MARY A. WOODBRIDGE.

Treasurer's Corner.

Seven months of our fiscal year are gone and not more than one-tenth of this year's dues has been received.

Mrs. Merrick, Washington, Kan., has sent sixty cents from six members of their union, and Mrs. Bertrand, of Centralia, Wash., sends a delayed ten-cent contribution of forty cents. Those who have in the last few months sent in these small sums that have aggregated a goodly sum, may never know how much they have helped the National in these trying times, that try even our strongest financial institutions.

The following letter just received from Mrs. W. J. Whitford, explains itself: "Enclosed find one dollar, a donation from the Ishpeming union (Mich.) in the twelfth district. We were sorry not to have sent it when Miss Willard asked for the dime offering, but our whole attention was given then in working for the poor of our city. We wish to show that we are loyal to our beloved leader, and think we cannot give her better welcome than by sending this as a thank-offering for her safe return. We wish it was more, but the prayers and best wishes of our union go with it, that God's blessing may rest upon our National officers." I am sure when Miss Willard reads this letter in the Corner (and she writes me she always reads the Corner) she will say, "There, that is a practical welcome," and no one can give her a more acceptable welcome home than to send a dollar, more or less, to help the National treasury. Are any others moved to send a similar welcome? July and August are always dull months and we can easily take care of all contributions that our friends are moved to send us. Many unions are keenly feeling the financial stress and we are fearful it will result in a great reduction of dues, and a consequent reduction in reported paid members. Let every loyal woman see that her dues are paid into the local union this year, if they have never been promptly paid before.

JULY MAGAZINES.

The mid-summer issue of the QUARTERLY ILLUSTRATOR is beautiful. It gives in exquisite reproduction the artistic gems of the day, accompanying them by articles from graphic and facile pens. Mr. Jones, the editor, has added a new feature to his attractive periodical in the shape of a continued story, "Monda" by George Parsons Lathrop; its illustrations are chosen from the work of various artists. This step will serve to popularize the magazine.

The Quarterly Illustrator, 92-94 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

The summer number of THE CHAUTAUQUAN abates none of the serious, dignified character of preceding issues, but takes on a summer tone that is welcome in these days of warm breezes and relaxed energies. The full program of the Chautauqua assembly of 1894 appears in this issue and is, if anything, richer in promise than usual. "Other Chautauqua Assemblies" gives in brief outline, localities, dates, special features, speakers, etc., for the smaller gatherings.

The Chautauquan, Meadville, Penn.

ST. NICHOLAS for July announces itself as "A Great American Number," and its stories, articles and poems all teem with the spirit of patriotism. Perhaps there is no magazine in the country that does more to arouse and preserve the sentiment of American loyalty than this bright periodical belonging to "Young America," and the boys and girls who count ST. NICHOLAS as the dearest of their literary possessions are pretty sure to have within them the elements of good citizenship.

The Century Co., Union Square, New York City.

Henry Wood, the author of "Political Economy of Natural Law," and other popular social, economical and metaphysical works, contributes a paper to the July ARENA on "The Higher Evolution of Man." He makes a very interesting argument for the theory that, besides the Darwinian doctrine of the survival of the fittest, there is a force in the moral world at work for the development in man of those higher spiritual qualities that make the term "fittest" less of a misnomer than it is to many thinkers in its application to-day. B. O. Flower, the editor of the ARENA, writes on "Crucial Moments in National Life," noting the ebb and flow of nations and civilizations and the moral forces that uplift or drag them down. It is an essay—short enough, but full of meat—that all Christian thoughtful men and women can read with profit.

The Arena Publishing Company, Boston, Mass.

The July FORUM presents a valuable list of articles for the consideration of its readers. Of peculiarly timely interest are two contributions which discuss "The Violence of Religious Intolerance in the Republic," Mr. F. R. Condert, in a paper entitled "The American Protective Association," showing the great similarity between the old Know-Nothing movement and the present methods of the American Protective Association, and Prof. J. B. McMaster following with "The Riotous Career of the Know-Nothings," saying there is no difference between that movement and the present American Protective Association. Theodore Roosevelt's incisive article, "The Manly Virtues and Practical Politics" ought to receive an even wider reading than it will through the circulation of THE FORUM. It is a vigorous appeal to those who take an interest in decent politics to work actively and practically, and show that they possess the essential manly virtues of energy, resolution and personal courage.

The current number of the REVIEW OF REVIEWS gathers up by its own comprehensive and discriminative method the cream of the affairs of the world. Its store of information upon matters of general interest is found under the department-head: "The Progress of the World." Here are viewed, clearly and briefly, the events with which the thinking portion of the people are most concerned,—labor movements and disturbances, tariff legislation, monetary interests, foreign problems, the deaths of prominent people, etc. Among the articles more at length are: "A Talk With Mr. Gompers," editor of the American Federationist, and a character sketch—"Wm. V. Allen, Populist," the latter by Albert Shaw, editor of the REVIEW OF REVIEWS. William T. Stead serves up "Coxeyism" with his derisive and uncompromising pen. "A Great Gathering to Come" is a forecast of the Christian Endeavor convention at Cleveland, in the form of an interesting interview with "Father Endeavor" Clark.

"MERIT RECOGNIZED"

In that invaluable little article, the World Pocket Stove, as seen by their advertisement on page 16 of this issue. In our issue of June 28, page 14, we referred to the many meritorious articles advertised in our paper from week to week, under the title "Merit Wins."

We now have an opportunity to demonstrate to the readers of "Our Paper," that merit has won in the case of the World Pocket Stove.

This little contrivance is unique and remedial in cases of neuralgia, earache, toothache, rheumatism, colic, in diseases of women, etc. Wherever there is pain of any kind the heater will be found invaluable. However much physiologists may differ as regards the modus operandi of this device, it cannot be denied that the pain-relieving and sedative effects of dry heat, uniformly applied, form a most valuable means of ameliorating painful conditions in the various parts of the body.

This remarkable family remedy has put the old-fashioned bag of hot salt and the hot, dry flannel into a state of desuetude. One of our strong white-ribboners stated he had carried a World Pocket Stove for two years, and found it indispensable. So do not fail to answer their advertisement, either by purchasing one upon our commendation or sending for one of their "brochures."

"A Christian Worker" writes: "I think we ought all try to circulate W. T. P. A. literature. I was surprised when I first was given some leaflets, etc., by a doctor's wife at a small village on the Northern Pacific Railroad, where I worked awhile. I thought them GRAND, and have circulated many dollars worth since then, now seven years ago. Do urge the people to scatter them broadcast."

TO OUR SUBSCRIBERS.

DEAR FRIENDS:—The news of the appalling strikes which temporarily paralyzed business in Chicago has been already flashed to you across the wires. Yet we wish to offer an additional word of explanation as to the non-appearance of THE UNION SIGNAL July 12 and July 19. While it was not an absolute impossibility to issue these numbers, in view of the delayed mails, blockade of freight, almost complete disorganization of the railroad system, scarcity of paper and the "going out" of various branches of trade, it seemed a prudential measure to delay until the future could be predicted as to resources, supplies, etc. We rejoice to say that business is gradually resuming its normal condition, and we believe THE SIGNAL will make its regular visits to your homes none the less welcome because of the brief interruption.

Yours sincerely,
CAROLINE F. GROW,
Business Manager.

BIBLE READING FOR JULY.

The Bible Reading for July is by Mrs. Alice J. Harris, the beloved W. C. T. U. songstress. Who that has heard her clarion tones in "Victory" ringing out sweet and clear will fail to read her words upon the foundation text, "Sing forth the honor of His name; make His praise glorious." The practical thought which she presents is "how music may be made a more potent factor in our work." She quotes from many well-known authorities to prove the power of music as a moral agent and draws the conclusion that "it may be used in the temperance reform more largely than we have yet done." "It is impossible to have earnest universal singing without plenty of books," says Mrs. Harris, and this belief we emphasize by suggesting for every public gathering a liberal supply of the White Ribbon Hymnal, compiled by Miss Anna Gordon, which can be had of the W. T. P. A. for 35c. each, $3.50 per dozen.

RESPONSIVE READINGS FOR JULY.

The Responsive Reading for July is by the well-known parliamentarian, Mrs. A. S. Benjamin, whose "dictum" is law at all W. C. T. U. gatherings. The subject, upon which no one can write more suggestively and authoritatively, is "Schools of Methods and Parliamentary Usage." Mrs. Benjamin gets at once at the root of the matter by a confession of ignorance upon the part of a new member. "Madam President, I am so unfortunate as to be ignorant, and may as well confess at first as last; I do not even know what a school of methods is, or what it is for, or who attend it, or how long it lasts, or who conducts it."

New members, and some old ones, will gain much wisdom from this Responsive Reading, which should be in the hands of every white-ribboner.

"I do not like to give it up, and should miss it much, for it is dear to me."

"I appreciate the paper very much and have tried to do all the good I could with them by loaning to any that I could get to read them."

"Please send me No. III. White Ribbon Portfolio. I do think they are so nice. I don't see how you can get them up so cheap, but it is a grand good thing for the sister of small means."

"MORE THAN MEETS MY EXPECTATIONS."

"The White Ribbon pictures more than meet my expectations, and I would not give them up for many times their cost. Many thanks for the kindly thought."

TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

The just shall live by faith: but if any man draw back my soul shall have no pleasure in him. Heb. 10:38.

The unveiling of the beautiful Chautauqua fountain in Willard corridor in the Temple is to take place on Miss Willard's birthday, September 28th. Also the unveiling of the Willard fountain, which is to be placed on the street in front of the entrance to Willard Hall. It will be remembered that this fountain is the gift of the L. T. L. of the United States to Miss Willard.

The occasion of the unveiling of these two fountains will be one of marked interest. It will be Chicago's welcome home to our chieftain. All who took part at Chautauqua twenty-one years ago in founding the W. C. T. U. are to be asked to be present and take part in the ceremony.

One half of 1894 has slipped by. Thousands have availed themselves of the offer we made of filling a mite-box during the present year, and by so doing help the Temple and secure to themselves a beautiful Temple souvenir silver teaspoon. When the Christmas holidays come round how many will regret they did not save their daily penny and have one of these beautiful spoons to present to some dear friend. Save regrets, go to work at once and make up lost time by putting aside two cents a day. By so doing you will secure the spoon almost without an effort, and help the Temple fund materially at a time when money was never more needed. Miss Willard was presented with one of the souvenir spoons on her return to Chicago. She was delighted with the design, especially the beautiful cut of the Temple on the bowl of the spoon. We have sent out over a hundred of the spoons already, and all express themselves as highly pleased with them. Many say they are far more beautiful than they expected.

Jane Weeden, that woman of invincible courage and unselfish devotion, is at work in Danville, Ill., as though she had not already sent two thousand dollars to the Temple. She sends $10 for her second Baby Band in Danville. This makes the third Baby Band raised in that town. Miss Weeden writes: "The officers of the W. C. T. U. bid me say, that raising these Bands have not hurt the union, but rather gained for it an increased interest." Why can't all unions raise Baby Bands? The work has been greatly revived since our offer of a "silver Temple souvenir spoon" to all who raise a band. We will send all documents free to any who desire to undertake this laudable work.

All persons sending $1 to the Temple will receive the beautiful Columbian souvenir. Any individual who fills a mite-box during 1894 will receive a solid silver Temple souvenir teaspoon. This, however, does not apply to persons filling boxes for unions; they receive the Columbian souvenir. All money orders and checks should be made out in the name of William D. Preston, and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara G. Johnson, The Temple, Chicago, Ill. All orders for mite-boxes and everything pertaining to the Temple should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

A STEP FORWARD

COMMENCING with the July number, 1894, OAK AND IVY LEAF—our young woman's paper—enters upon a new series and a new era. The old title gives place to the new.

The paper is edited as for the past two years by Miss Jennie A. Stewart.

Important new departments are conducted by young women especially fitted for the task. "Kindred Societies" will be treated by Miss Frances H. Ensign, an able writer and the well-known state secretary of the Ohio Y. W. C. T. U. Miss Ada M. Melville, book reviewer of THE UNION SIGNAL, an author and editor of The Young Crusader, will tell what to read among the choice publications of the day. A "College Corner" will be conducted by Miss Elva Hulburd Young, of Wellesley College.

A home department is provided. News of the month in temperance, religious, political and educational circles is a new feature. The Social, Y Round Table, and Helping Hand departments of Oak and Ivy Leaf are continued. Stories, poems, brief biographical and special articles by well-known writers are on the bill of fare.

Young men are not forgotten and have a special column to themselves, besides the whole paper.

Altogether you'll agree we have an attractive paper, well worthy to be read by young and old, of every class and creed.

Will you not prepare to give a cordial welcome and a prompt support to this new evidence of enthusiastic endeavor and final victory for our great cause?

RAILROAD traffic and mail delivery in Finland are forbidden by a recent act of the Finnish parliament.

MR. THOMAS, at present in Tinnevelly, India, has acted as a missionary for fifty-eight years. Rev. Richard Birt, of Feeltown, South Africa, has been in the field fifty-six years.

A HAPPY indication of the decline of gambling is found in the annual report of the Monte Carlo Casino company which shows a decrease in revenue of two million francs as compared with the previous year.

WASHINGTON, D. C., with 331 public parks, stands at the head of the list of the larger American and European cities in opportunities for out-door pleasure for the poor. London has the largest area and one-fifth of Edinburgh is in parks.

NEW YORK'S tenement house population, according to the recent census of the city board of health, is 1,322,773, out of a total population of 1,890,000; 39,138 houses contain them all, an average of thirty-three each; 180,359 are under five years of age.

THE London Temperance Hospital has passed its twentieth milestone as an object lesson in non-alcoholic medication. This splendid institution has accommodated over one thousand patients during the past year, and treated over five thousand out-patients.

LICENSE in the form of the Norwegian system will not be tried by Massachusetts for a while at least, as the state senate declined to support the House in its action. Although the plan has been referred to the next legislature, the chances are that it will not be urged again.

THE National Prison Association held its annual session in St. Paul in June with General Brinkerhoff in the place of presiding officer, so long occupied by the late ex-President Hayes. The keynote of the conference was prevention, and manual training schools for both sexes everywhere were ably urged as the great preventive of crime.

THE Christian Endeavor Missionary Institute, in coöperation with prominent denominational boards of city, home and foreign missions, has arranged a missionary extension course of lectures by the best platform talent. The addresses are delivered at intervals of about four weeks, only in a course, and free of charge at "strategic points."

A SURPRISING fact which is arousing considerable comment as an indication of the peculiar industrial condition of the United States, is the change in the tide of immigration. The per cent of steerage passengers who have left this country during the first five months of 1894, according to reports of steamship lines, far exceeds the incoming numbers. Africa is deflecting the current from our shores in no small degree.

THE hours of the German laborer are very long, frequently exceeding fifteen hours a day, but there are certain regulations in factories that are rigidly carried out in regard to women's work. All factories where women are employed are registered, and only eighty hours a year overwork is allowed. Children under thirteen cannot work in factories, although the law is often evaded by making them work at home. Strange as it seems, the state is more merciful to the children than the parents; in some villages children three years old are kept busy threading needles. Thuringian watch-makers keep their children working from Saturday noon until Sunday morning at two. After two hours' sleep they must work again until church time.

ACCORDING to the testimony brought out by the New York police investigating committee, the liquor seller in the metropolis could for a stipulated sum buy the right to violate any or all provisions of the excise law. Says the Christian Work: "This is absolutely all that the excise department of this city exists for. It furnishes employment in the first place, at handsome salaries, to odoriferous politicians of the Tammany school, and enables them, in the second place, to double or treble their incomes by blackmail of the liquor-sellers. And what is true of the license system in this city is undoubtedly true to some extent of the same system in all cities and towns where it is in operation. So far as it operates towards the repression of the evils of the liquor traffic here or elsewhere, the whole license system is an outrageous sham and a fraud."

Read What Our Exchanges Say About

A GREAT MOTHER

FROM THE OHIO W. C. T. U. MESSENGER.

A Great Mother.

This last touching tribute of Miss Willard to the memory of her mother is a charming book, peculiarly fascinating in the beautifully told story of the simple home life of Madam Willard and her illustrious family. The interesting incidents of early pioneer life, when the principal street of Chicago was part swamp, and the mode of travel a covered wagon, gives zest to the story, which will interest every white-ribboner to-day. Here they will read of the home life and education of the beloved daughter and our illustrious leader, and Lady Henry Somerset in the introductory chapter predicts that this volume will be "a favorite hand-book of motherly teaching in the purest Christian homes." It is beautifully illustrated with twenty-one engravings. We see the "Great Mother" in Miss Willard's den, on the lawn, and in Rest Cottage parlor, where she received the eight hundred delegates and visitors from the National Convention. The writer remembers well the picture she made sitting in her arm-chair, greeting the friends of herself and daughter. When it came our turn we said: "It will tire you to shake so many hands; let us just lay our hand on yours." She smiled and looked up to Anna Gordon, who stood leaning on the chair guarding her beloved charge.

We predict a large demand for this book, beautiful in principles and in teaching, beautiful even in its make-up, from the silver-gray cover to its closing thought in Miss Willard's "Memorial Hymn":

"Christ and His kingdom, 'our watchwords will stand,' Banners of peace shall enfold every land."

FROM THE REVIEW OF REVIEWS.

A GREAT MOTHER: Sketches of Madam Willard. By Frances E. Willard and Minerva Brace Norton. Octavo, pp. 300. Chicago: Woman's Temperance Publishing Association.

The mother of Frances E. Willard died in August, 1892, needing only a few years of life to increase the Biblical "three-score and ten" to four-score and ten.

She was born in Vermont, but the larger part of her life was spent in Wisconsin and Illinois. She was a type of thousands of the sterling New England women whose direct influence and whose children have built up the great middle West, especially in matters of education and religion. The memorial of Madam Willard, prepared largely by her famous daughter, is a high tribute to her womanhood, and particularly to her motherhood. It contains sketches of her life, her children, her personal traits, selections from her letters and her prayers, together with reminiscences by various acquaintances and sympathetic messages to those who were left to mourn her. A goodly number of portraits and other illustrations add to the general appearance of the book

A great Sunday-school rally took place at Coldwater, Mich., last week. There were two thousand six hundred children and teachers in the procession which was over a mile long.

The event of last week in the Senate was the impeachment and vindication of the President for his connection with the tariff bill, by Senators Gorman and Vilas, respectively.

At the international conference of textile workers in Manchester, Eng., July 26, it was decided to memorialize the governments of Europe and America for an eight-hour day of labor.

A gigantic robbery of New York's city treasury is charged and an application for an investigation has been entered before Supreme Court Judge Gaynor. It is alleged that duplicate city bonds to the amount of fifteen million dollars have been forged and the proceeds pocketed by corrupt city officials.

A LETTER received July 30 from a granddaughter of Mrs. Zerelda Wallace announces the latter's indisposition. While she is not seriously sick, she is unable to write, otherwise we would have had something from her own pen for this issue, in which we have given the face and sketch of our great suffrage leader. May autumn's cool breezes fully restore her to health.

THE report of Carroll D. Wright, United States Commissioner of Labor, contains the surprising statement that mortality in the slum districts of large cities is no greater than in the more favored districts. If these statements are corroborated, scientists will be obliged to hunt up some causes for disease and death other than sewer gas, bacteria and lack of sanitation. Mr. Wright's report shows Baltimore to have the largest number of saloons in the tenement district—one to every one hundred and five persons; New York, one to every two hundred; and Chicago, one to every two hundred and twelve inhabitants.

AMOMPHARETUS, the Spartan, once said, "There is a vote—and there is a Vote!" And, so saying, he seized a rock with both hands, exclaiming as he deposited it before his general, Pausanias, "This is my pebble!" In our republic, however, each vote counts only one, and weighs no more than any other, though cast by men as diverse in spirit, culture, and status as a brewer who votes for the protection of the American saloon, and a bishop who votes as he prays, "for the protection of American industry." But, if brewer and bishop vote for the same candidates and accept the same party platform (judiciously silent on the liquor-traffic question) is the brewer as good a citizen as the bishop or is the bishop as good a partisan as the brewer? Evidently, the brewer's vote does not count against the brewery; neither does the bishop's!

THREE significant utterances at the great Christian Endeavor convention deserve special notice. The first was by Rev. Smith Baker, of Boston, who said: "What justice is there in forbidding an intelligent, cultured woman, possessed of property, who is conversant with the history of her land, paying taxes to support the schools of her land; what justice is there in allowing a poor, penniless, illiterate foreigner to vote when such a woman is not permitted to do so? I do not propose to discuss this question, but when the woman who is capable of being president of a college, when the woman who is capable of presiding over business affairs, when the woman who is capable of teaching boys and girls the principles of our constitution, when the woman who is capable of taking care of a home and children, and, oftentimes, her husband also, shall have justice done her she will have the right to vote. These are truths which any Christian democracy and which Christian citizenship must claim for everybody." Our great-hearted brother, John G. Woolley, said in his marvelous address, given in full in our last issue: "I will hold no politician's coat while he stones a prophet or denies full citizenship to a woman. By the grace of God I will be a Christian Christian and a manly man. I will confess Christ before people and on election day, which in this land of equal rights is man's day. I will show myself a Christian voter, fit to represent unfranchised womanhood at the polls. I will go to Him, hear His words, and whatsoever He says unto me I will do it. Upon that rock I will build my politics and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." Samuel Gompers, to-day the most trusted labor leader in America, had these words in his address to the country in which the Federation of Labor declines to strike: "We reiterate the fundamental trade union principle that working people, regardless of sex, creed, color, nationality, politics or occupation, should have one and the same interest in one common cause for their own political advancement."

THE anti-lottery bill, which passed the Senate some weeks ago, is now awaiting action by the House. Many religious bodies have petitioned the representatives to pass the bill, and we trust the W. C. T. U. will not be behind in this most vital movement. It would not be amiss for each local union to write the representative of its district, securing first the names of a large number of voters to emphasize the sentiments of the women. Whatever is done should be done at once.

OUR hearts were rejoiced last Monday on reading this dispatch from Leipsic, Germany: "The Leipsic University clubs are setting a laudable example. They have decided to drop the ancient academical custom of morning beer drinking on the ground that it interferes with work. The newspapers comment favorably upon this decision and express the hope that the action of the Leipsic clubs will be imitated by those of the other universities." If this strong citadel of the German student (beer drinking) is to fall, we feel as though the liquor traffic had met its Waterloo.

A CHICAGO justice has decided that a liquor dealer, whose license was revoked for cause, may open up a new saloon and sell liquor without a license, if the unexhausted portion of his former license money is not returned. This is clearly in defiance of the law, as well as against public morals and decency, not to speak of common sense. In giving a liquor license, the city reserves the right to cancel it for cause at any time, and there is no clause requiring the return of the license money. But this act of a corrupt justice is in keeping with the farce of all attempted restrictions of this nefarious traffic.

ON Tuesday afternoon, July 24, occurred the oft-postponed reception to Miss Willard, at Evanston, given by the fourth district Illinois W. C. T. U. Although her friends have endeavored to secure to her all the rest and quiet possible during the brief home-visit, they could not be content to discard all social recognition of their distinguished leader's return. The beautiful home and lawn of Mrs. E. B. Stuart was utilized for the occasion, at which Mrs. T. C. Reiley, president of the district, presided. There were poems, addresses and greetings galore, and Miss Willard responded brightly and eloquently to all, despite her weariness and the intense heat which made existence itself a burden. Parts of two of the poems appear in this number of our paper. Rev. Father Smyth, a Catholic priest, spoke most fittingly and appreciatively of our president's work and worth, saying, "Miss Willard deserves our praise because she does not seek it." The bright speech of the young president of the Northwestern University Prohibition League, Mr. Levere, was well received. He said a schoolboy, upon being asked to name the three greatest characters known to ancient and modern history, wrote upon his slate: "The Lord, Buffalo Bill and Frances Willard," and added that if he were asked for the three greatest characters in Evanston he would name Anna Gordon for one and Miss Willard for the other two." The main address of welcome was delivered by Mrs. Woodbridge, National corresponding secretary, and it is unnecessary to say that it was an admirable production. Miss Gordon was thrice greeted, first, by a little girl from the L. T. L., second, by Mrs. Johnson, vice-president of the Evanston Y, and, lastly, in poetic verse by Miss Melville, editor of The Young Crusader. The entertainment closed with the serving of dainty refreshments, and many lingered long after on the lawn to shake the hand and gaze lovingly into the face of their old neighbor and friend, for whom time and absence have in no ways lessened their affection and loyalty. On the Friday following the reception, Miss Willard and Miss Gordon departed for the Catskills where they will remain until near the end of September, and where Lady Henry Somerset will join them for a few weeks' rest.

TO MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD.*

(A recital of the calamities during her absence in England.)

Near the axle, as doth spin
Wheel of spoke and flying rim,
Is the heat intensest grown
By the contact thereupon.
Spoke and rim to hub must cling,
Hub to axle, if they swing;
Nothing turns or roams alone—
All depends upon the home.
Archimedes he might raise
Worlds like this and gain the praise,
If some center he had found
For the lever, safe and sound.
If a circle one would draw,
Perfect and without a flaw,
Firm the center must be set
Ere the ends are safely met.
You've been flying far and wide,
Turning "wheel" on t'other side,
Swinging round the circle some,
And at last to home have come.
Did you find a lovelier place
Where they run the Derby race?
Did you lose all ache and ail
'Cause of "Hinglish" port and "hale"?
Lose your h-es over there?
Did you go to airy fair?
See the Punch and Judy show?
Very "Hinglish," don't yer know?
Did you see the Prince of Wales?
Speak to him about his "hales"?
See the smoke he gently weds
Round so many crowned "'eads"?
Oh, we know that you've been good,
And would say, if say we could,
Same of "we-uns" over here,
But we can't, I almost fear.
Lots of folks have died, or, led
By white ribbons, lost their head.
Everything has failed to thrive
Save the tariff—that's alive.
Senate's dead and Congress, too,
Wilson bill is almost through.
Things are cheaper—wheat, I hear.
Sugar? That's a little dear.
Things been going as they like,
Everybody on a strike;
"Sympathy," an ocean, kind,
But no money can you find.
Populists are all around,
Woman's suffrage gaining ground,
Harmony within the choir—
Anna Diggs called "Lease" a liar.
"Temperance cause is set back," too,
(Goin' to tell it all to you)—
While ago folks acted bad,
Some of 'em got awful mad;
Said our "vaulting" wouldn't do,
Hit us on the Temple, too.
UNION SIGNAL? Tame? Oh, my!
"Public fountains" almost dry!
Loyal Legion losing, too—
Anna Gordon off with you.
Times just fearful, people blue,
Coxey's army going through,
And the "locusts" come again,
Women most as bad as men.
Missed you? Guess we have so much;
Why, we couldn't bear to touch
Things a bit, and left 'em, dear,
Just till you got safely here.
Uncle Sam will welcome you,
He's got lots for you to do—
Big housecleaning still on hand,
Whisky running o'er the land.
Things is mighty out of fix—
Debs and Pullman will not mix,
Country suffering same old loss.
Drink bill? Don't it need a boss?
"Fifty-five" most? Weighing well,
Looking bright—I'm going to tell—
If another decade's lent
What of you for President?
Lots of folks are sayin' it,
Hintin', gossipin' a bit.
And just here I show my bait—
I'll be poet laureate.
But there's one condition lone,
This your native, natural zone,
Can't afford to lose you more,
For by you we set a store.
From the White House down to that Blessed old Angora cat
All United States loves you.
Don't you think we're pretty true?
Flying spoke and wheeling rim
Round the axle safely spin;
You, the wheel; now, here's the rub,
Evanston shall be the hub.
You'll forgive the schoolboy rhyme—
Idle waste of honest time;
Let the jester go, I ween,
With his bow to "uncrowned queen."

LOVE THY NEIGHBOR.

BY MRS. F. M. HOWARD.

Deacon Close read the morning lesson in a loud, impressive manner. It was his way to invest the Holy Scripture with the sonorous fullness of his somewhat pompous rendering, and when he came to the passage, "Love thy neighbor as thyself," Betty the cook nudged Mary the maid with a significant look.

Though the servants were required to attend family worship, and the religious machinery of the home was of the most approved pattern, still there was evidently a deficit in his record at home as a lover of his kind. The explanation was simple. Deacon Close meant to be a good man, he was one (with reservations), yet he had one idol which he worshiped most fervently and unconsciously, and that idol was himself.

The Lord must have been looking down with a merciful eye upon his pitiful attempts to serve two masters, for on that very morning He sent an arrow with the words of Scripture which pierced his heart. "Love thy neighbor" rang in his ears all the time he was eating his breakfast; it tucked itself under the warm, fur-lined overcoat he wore, and pursued its attacks all the way down-town.

There were two shivering children in the car, stretching their blue hands over the stove which warmed it, and he not only did not order them away, but with a tolerant good nature which was a surprise even to himself, he took the poker and stirred the coals to a brighter glow before seating himself on the other side of a thin, consumptive looking woman, whose worn shawl was but a poor protection from the weather. "Love thy neighbor" the clack, clack of the car repeated all the way, and rid himself of the insistent refrain he could not.

He had laid out a very prudential day's work for himself before getting out of his warm bed that morning. He was a prosperous man, a self-made man as he was fond of boasting, and, truly, if he had not considered self so entirely in all his transactions his financial results would have been much less. There is too often a double meaning in the phrase, "a self-made man."

Several years before, two young men whom he well knew to be of the strictest integrity had borrowed money of him to add to their own small capital in business, and had given him, as security, a mortgage on their stock. They had not been prospered as they had hoped, and though they had strained every nerve to pay the debt, there was still a large margin remaining. The mortgage came due in this, a winter of financial stringency, and Deacon Close fully intended foreclosing this very day.

True, it would prove a death-blow to the hopes of two of his fellow church members, honest, hard-working fellows who had done their best, but as the deacon justly observed to his crony, Self, "Money is money, and if a man doesn't look out for himself there's no one going to look out for him."

That rankling arrow of Scripture was playing queer tricks with his determination, however. The performance did not seem nearly so pleasant, just under the pricking of its persevering point, and when he reached his place of business and found one member of the unfortunate firm there before him, he was even doubtful of its propriety.

"Good-morning, Deacon Close."

"Good-morning, Brother Shelton," replied the deacon, holding out his hand. The headsman, I believe, shakes hands with his victim, but it is to be doubted if there is much of real cordiality in the operation.

The young man's face was pale and his hand trembled nervously in the other's grasp.

"Well, sir, how is business?"

"Bad, sir, very bad," with a despondent shake of the head; "customers are buying literally nothing but the merest necessaries."

"Well, sir?" Deacon Close's voice involuntarily took on its "Pay me what thou owest" inflection.

"It will be impossible for us to make the payment we had expected to on your claim, and my partner hoped we might make some arrangement with you to extend the time. We have worked hard, sir, but this year's sailing has all been against the current."

A fierce struggle took place in the prosperous man's heart—on the one hand mercy pleaded, on the other self argued. Here was a chance to add to his possessions. The stock was new and clean; he would put the two young men in as clerks, for they were popular and had a wide acquaintance and custom—oh, yes, he would be very kind—quite paternal in the matter. They would be willing to engage with him at very slender salaries, no doubt, and business was sure to brace up in the spring, for people must be clothed; the longer they pinched along without buying the more surely the day came when they must buy.

"Who is my neighbor?" he demanded of his uncomfortable, inward monitor, and the answer came back like a flash: "Whoever God shows you to be in need of your forbearance or ministry."

Under this pungent teaching the pleasing picture of gain faded slowly away, and Deacon Close lifted his head, the deep lines of conflict still upon his face.

"Brother Shelton," he said slowly, "when I came here this morning I fully intended to foreclose that mortgage but the Lord has been having something to say to me about the matter, and I have concluded to take His advice, and love my neighbor. We will draw up new papers, if you please, to run for five years."

Young Brother Shelton could not speak, the relief was too great, but he grasped the older man's hand as he never had before, while tears of gratitude stood in his honest eyes.

"You know how it is, Deacon," he said, presently, in apology for his emotion. "You must, sometime, have had a struggle for life when you were young."

"Yes," replied the deacon thoughtfully, "and if a friend had not been lenient I should have gone under, and lost years of savings as you were about to do. I had quite forgotten the circumstance."

While the young man sped back to tell his partner the good news, Deacon Close sat at his desk, looking over his books with a feeling of warmth at his heart which broadcloth and fur could not produce; an inward current of grace which was trying to force its way out into other channels. He had a large rent-roll upon his books (he managed the details of his investments himself), and had lately become the owner of a large tenement house, the occupants of which he was but little acquainted with. They were not of the abject poor, paying him their pitiful dole from the very depths of penury, but the respectable class whose poverty was the more galling, perhaps, and more silent, because they had seen better days.

A woman came into the office with a timid, shrinking air. He remembered her face, for she had paid him rent several times—the young music teacher on the fourth floor, who looked as if she had never had a generous meal in her life,—bloodless creature, and even more timid and hungry looking than usual to-day.

"Sit down, Miss—Miss—what may I call you?"

"Miss Stanhope, sir," she said, dropping into an office chair, and dreading to hear the kind voice merge into the stern tones of the disappointed landlord.

"I am sorry, sir, but—but I have been totally unable to raise the rent this month. The times are so hard that everyone who can is economizing by leaving off luxuries, and most persons consider music lessons a luxury. I have only been able to retain a few of my most able pupils, and it has brought us near to starvation, sir, let alone the rent."

"How many are there of you?" asked the deacon. She needed no voucher to the truth of her last statement—her pinched face was her witness.

"Three, sir.—my old mother and my sister's little child."

"And no means of support but your labor?"

"None, sir. We get along nicely in ordinary times, but now——"

But the deacon was not listening. His heart was saying to him, "Another neighbor, Deacon Close. If you were a feeble woman, supporting a family, though hungry, cold and penniless, what——" but he did not stop to argue the case this time.

Drawing his receipt book hastily to him, he wrote out a receipt for three months' rent, and handed it to her.

"That will tide you over the worst of the winter and give you a chance to recover yourself," he said kindly, as her trembling lips tried in vain to thank him.

She went out as soon as she could control her grateful tears, and the deacon looked over his rent-roll again.

"Five dollars—six—eight and ten dollars a month for," said he to himself as he ran his finger down the long list of apartments, "poor, shabby places where the wind whistles in at loose windows and rat holes unchecked. It is too much. The Lord will not hold me guiltless if I exact such usury in the stewardship He has intrusted to me."

It took the remainder of the morning to revise that long rent-roll; but when it was done it seemed as if every dollar he had taken off had lightened his heart until it was as buoyant as a cork. He lunched at noon at the restaurant in the next block, and to-day as he sat at the familiar table he heard two gentlemen talking near by.

"It is the places where idle men congregate which are doing them more harm than any other one influence to-day. It is an almost irresistible temptation to a man who has ever dallied with games to try his 'luck' when he is out of luck and his cash is low. Hope lures him on, and the gambler gets the scattering dollars which the saloon has not captured and which is so sorely needed in the family."

"You are right, Tom. So far as I know there is not one saloon or gambling establishment in this city which has been obliged to close its doors on account of hard times. They pay their rent and license in 'spot cash,' and where does it come from? Out of the pockets of their customers every time, and too often out of the mouths and off the backs of suffering wives and helpless children of working men—or men who would work if they could."

"And yet good men will rent their business places to such."

The speakers went out and Deacon Close winced. Those last words fitted him very closely.

Only yesterday he had had an application for a lease of one of his best paying rooms from a person whom he felt sure would use it right along those very lines. A very gentlemanly person who would do the business in a very genteel way, no doubt, but—ah, those embarrassing "buts"—could he love his neighbor and become a partner in setting the trap which should drag souls along the downward road?

Yesterday he had thought favorably of the offer. To-day, under the clear search-light of God's message to his soul, he could not; and he penned a polite note to the person in question, stating his determination before he left his seat.

The day was an era in the life of Deacon Close from which dated a future based upon a new principle of Christian living. "As thyself," became the plummet by which he measured his duty to his neighbor, and holding himself sternly to that duty, for it was not easy to change life-long habits at once, he became in time just and thoughtful for others where he had once been only penurious and self-seeking.

A KING'S DAUGHTER IN A COTTAGE.

BY ALICE GORDON GULICK.

Bright sunshine, green fields stretching away in the distance, quaint, gable-roofed houses on either hand, and at the end of the winding road "the cottage."

This mental photograph reproduces itself at will, so strongly was it impressed upon my mind that bright June day when first I saw Lady Henry Somerset in her own home.

We unlatched the wooden gate and entered the garden tastily arranged with a wealth of bloom that almost dazzled eyes accustomed to the low-lying clouds of London. We breathed the atmosphere of home as we entered the hall from the rustic porch. At every turn quiet but choice decoration met the eyes. Here a sixteenth century reproduction; there a modern work of art. Comfortable easy chairs near tempting books; rare paintings and engravings; cozy corners where one can hide away and dream or listen to the piping bullfinch hanging in its gilded cage in the sunshine.

This is the drawing room. Framed in the casement of the window is one of those choice English views that must be seen to be appreciated. Velvet turf, the product of careful cultivation, the very aristocracy of green things. Box bordered flower-beds, filled with the blossoms we love, the chosen of song and story. Beyond, near the half-opened gate, tempting one on to the Priory grounds, the white doves flutter to and fro about their pretty dovecote or fly as a cloud to the overhanging branches of one of the old elms which hides from us the sweet fields beyond. It is a scene of peace inviting weary mortals to rest.

But louder than the song of birds, the call of the rooks or the cooing of the doves is the telephone bell, which reminds us that this is the home of one of the most active women of the century. Under the spreading branches of yon noble tree Lady Henry Somerset heard a voice calling her into the service of the King. Obediently she yielded her time, her tender sympathy, herself. No really needy one appeals in vain at the door of her heart. Love has made it large, and there is always room for new objects to find entrance, from the boys who need a few shillings for their cricket grounds to the poor sinful servant-girl abandoned by all—but for whom shelter is found until she can begin life anew.

This King's daughter rarely experiences the rest and comfort of the cottage which is so freely bestowed upon others. She is about her Master's business. Personal ease is forgotten when there is something to be done for others. No one can know the numberless little kindnesses continually thought out and bestowed on His "little ones" who has not had a look into that book which shall be opened on the last day. Her cheery laugh, the musical touch of her voice, her sweet smile, attract her friends and the members of her household, who vie with each other to render loyal service.

The world seems far away, but the great questions of life are daily discussed in the editorial sanctum, so dainty and yet so suggestive of noble plans.

The King's daughter dares to use her God-given influence to right that which is wrong, and to speak for the helpless and oppressed. Lady Henry Somerset has laid aside the jeweled emblems of the world and with Christ-like simplicity has entered the ranks of the followers of Him who went about doing good. When in like manner those to whom influence, wealth, time, opportunity and mental force have been entrusted shall render up their gifts in loyal service, then we may fall in faith on bended knee and pray, "Our Father which art in heaven—Thy kingdom come."

Lady Henry's birthday is August 3, and has been designated by the World's W. C. T. U. as "Fresh Air Mission Day." A working man commenting upon her said: "Why, she's a whole fresh-air mission in herself."

MRS. ZERELDA G. WALLACE.

BY HARRIET B. KELLS.

One of the most notable platforms this country had seen, prior to the great Woman's Congress of the World's Columbian Exposition, was that of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, Annual Convention, 1888, at New York City, in the Metropolitan Opera House. This beautiful audience room was a fit setting for the grace, dignity and talent collected to show forth the potency of organized mother-love as one of the world's redemptory forces.

MRS. ZERELDA G. WALLACE.

A keen observer said: "There's not a head in sight that does not carry its own credentials on the face of it." Close up towards the front, between the shoulders of world-known dignitaries, could be seen an iron-gray head, covered with close waving locks; the heads on old Roman coins and a senatorial vision began to move in stately procession through the brain's arena. The exclamation, "She's the noblest Roman of them all," provoked the reply, "Surely, for that's 'Mother Wallace.'"

This scene is recalled by the intention of the Indiana W. C. T. U. to celebrate the seventy-ninth birthday, August 6, of this great leader of the woman's movement. The universal program will be a Suffrage Tea. Indiana women reflect in this justly merited honor the reverence in which Mrs. Zerelda Wallace is held by all women of the W. C. T. U. and suffrage organizations.

The subject of this sketch was born in a Kentucky home, from which she married David Wallace, lieutenant-governor of Indiana, afterward the chief executive of the state, an eminent jurist and a soldier on the Union side during the late war. Mrs. Wallace wrought into her family life a love of noblest aspirations for the individual and largest hope for the nation and humanity. Those who know her do not wonder that her son, General Lew Wallace, immortalized her as the mother in "Ben Hur," and himself as its author. She was called to the loneliness of widowhood in a moment, without the comfort of a last word. The evening before his going, Judge Wallace playfully handed her fifty cents, saying, "That will buy you a beefsteak for breakfast." Like many public men he had been obliged to live to the limit of his income, and when his widow confronted the transformed face of the future it was with a home over her head, six children to provide for, and this solitary fifty cents in her purse.

The breadwinning problem was faced with a calm and undaunted spirit. The children, in course of nature, settled in their own homes, or were safe in their heavenly mansions. Then the spirit which caused her to influence her husband to vote against the fugitive slave law, and to delve with him into law, politics or literature, began to flame within her against the enslavement and degradation of sons of God by the liquor traffic, and against the injustice of withholding the franchise from woman. She found her natural home in the work of the W. C. T. U., as its superintendent of franchise, and throughout the land she became the voice crying unceasingly the gospel of a whole humanity, in preparation of the way of the Lord.

"We have not a republic," she said; "we have not a democracy; we have not even a respectable male aristocracy; we have only a liquor oligarchy. . . If the voice of the people is the voice of God then the voice of God can never be heard so long as woman's voice is silenced. This must be so, unless you put her outside the pale of the humanity God planted in Eden; 'Male and female created he them' and gave them dominion over the earth. . . I believe this is the last great struggle which the race is to make for freedom—this struggle for the right of woman; that secured the perpetuity of the nation is secure. . . The hearthstone shall become the corner-stone of the nation. . . Christ is the only true republican, the only true democrat; in His government there is no distinction of sex, race or condition."

Miss Willard tells that Mrs. Wallace felt the first rousing to a personal responsibility toward the temperance cause as she listened to an eloquent lecture at Fort Wayne from Mr. Curry. Speaking afterward with great enthusiasm on this subject to a lady visitor, this friend said: "Mrs. Wallace, if you would consent to go before our next meeting at Masonic Hall, and talk exactly as you talk to me, I believe it would do good.' She hurriedly wrote a speech, and in excess of terror stood before her audience. "But," she said, "the moment I began to speak all terror left me, and the devotion I felt for my theme gave me an almost superhuman confidence."

Later, Miss Willard states, her convictions on the suffrage question "came with the suddenness of electricity," while she spoke before the legislature against the repeal of the Baxter temperance law. For the first time in her life, she says, she was made to feel ashamed of being a woman. As soon as she entered she discerned the spirit of the "honorable body." Nudges, leers, and even winks, went significantly around the membership. Most of them illy concealed their contempt for women in general and temperance women in particular. Mrs. Wallace suffered an all but mortal humiliation. She laughs in good-natured scorn at her lack of knowledge, and says: "I am happy to say that it was the last time I ever gave voice to the opinions that the temperance cause is especially a woman's cause, and should not be 'mixed in the issue of politics.'"

A senator arose to say that the members of the legislature were not there to represent their convictions but their constituency; therefore he should vote liquor license. "Instantly," says Mrs. Wallace, "it there flashed into my mind, 'Why am not I one of this constituency which Marion county must vote to please?'" After adjournment Mrs. Wallace shook hands with this senator, and said: "You are against our cause, but I am grateful to you, because you have made me a suffragist."

There are few in the halls of Congress who excel Mother Wallace as a speaker, or in legislative suggestion match her unswerving fidelity to the interests of all, or exhibit an equal statesmanship in the consideration of public questions. "True civilization," she says, "is to do justly and love God with all the heart. When these rule the national life all the questions that now vex the Commonwealth will be easily settled, but you will never solve them without the help of woman,"—and nobody who listens to her wants to settle them without her.

Several years ago when she was stricken on the platform with the illness which closed her public work, there was widespread lamentation—for Mother Wallace is loved as well as honored in the stately homes of the eminent, by the plain folk in lonely hamlets in swamps and prairie and valley, by great-hearted friends on Southern plantations and in sound of the solemn sea-dirges of rock-bound New England and the fruited slopes of the Pacific.

Mrs. Wallace was the center of an admiring and extended group of friends in Chicago from October last to May. During that time she spoke in many parlors for the enfranchisement of women, and was greatly sought by fashionable lunch parties, so that society women might be brought to reflect on their serious responsibilities to the state. "It is all a matter of growth and enlightenment," she says. Notwithstanding her advanced age she took charge during the above mentioned period, of a large

Bible class of young men in Plymouth Congregational church, of which Rev. Gunsaulus is pastor. The Bible is her law book, and there are few as deeply reverent, broad-minded and thoroughly informed students of the sacred Word; to such is spiritual insight given. The oneness, in Christ, of the created and the Creator, of the individual and the nation, of secular and sacred, makes a Mount of Transfiguration of her daily life; and while her eloquent, intense words open up the vision to others they know that "seeketh not its own, rejoiceth not in unrighteousness, but rejoiceth with truth, believeth all things, hopeth all things," is the only way out for the nations of the earth that will not be "blotted out."

In a private letter of late she says: "'What would Christ do if He came to Chicago?' Stead asked. I answer, He would heal the sick, feed the hungry and above all things denounce injustice and sins both national and individual. Upon no other basis than free trade and profit-sharing can the selfish and conflicting interests of individuals, states and nations be settled peacefully and permanently. Laws which discriminate in favor of one class or nation are unjust and destructive. Under our present system of legislation capital and labor are enemies; they are and of right ought to be friends. Now capital is burdened by excessive taxation, strikes and other causes; as a consequence labor suffers. I am sorry for the people; they are wounded to the death and fail to see what hurts them. They are deluded with false issues by the sophistries of corrupt politicians and blind partisanship,—blind leaders of the blind, they all fall into the ditch. As you say, 'God himself cannot force growth where only the conditions of death remain.' Those who sow to the flesh must reap corruption, and those men and women who persistently remain on this plane sustain about the same relation to the ultimate of Humanity that the old Saurians and reptilian creatures of the antediluvian age did to the other forms of animal life."

In the quiet farm home of her daughter at Cataract, Indiana, this great woman spends the warm half year; her winters are passed in Indianapolis. Her natural forces are unabated except for asthma. On her table are the latest books and periodicals; she has read them almost before anybody but the publisher knows they are out,—the most recent annunciations of progressive religious thought, Christian socialism, the better fiction and humanitarian philosophy. She is so cheerful, so man-loving and God-loving, immortality so sure, the eternal life so truly already begun with her, the problems of this world so certain of solution in the plans and principles of Jesus Christ that the beholder is convinced that old age can have no terrors for great thinkers and noble livers. No woman will have greater reverence from the future than this righteousness-loving history-maker in this prophetic century.

SOME POSSIBILITIES FOR LABOR.

BY CHAS. O. BORING.

Christianity is applied coöperation. This was its meaning in the beginning, and this meaning has become clearer with each onward step of history. I have shown in a previous article how gloriously the principles of coöperation were set in motion by the leaders of the Christian Socialist party in England. I do not hesitate to say that I believe no single act of Christ's disciples has been more fruitful of good than this. These principles have proved of vast importance in helping the poor and lowly to a higher manhood by teaching the power of thrift and thus increasing the sense of responsibility to God and government. When a homeless man secures a home—or is on the way to so desirable a result—the power and influence of this possessed or coveted good is as a mighty anchor for a man in settled and desirable convictions.

One of the most potent results was in bringing these people into a closer association with each other, increasing to an almost infinite degree the idea of comradeship. This is a dynamic force for good when properly used, and cannot be overestimated.

Many thousands of industrial enterprises for production or distribution in England have grown out of the Chartist movement—a great and lasting good absolutely unaccomplished up to this time in this country. To be sure, we have coöperative building, insurance and banking institutions, and profit-sharing in many departments, but industrial and mercantile associations have not yet prospered among us except in a limited way.

Here, then, we have an opportunity or a series of opportunities. What God-sent leader will go out to show this mighty host their strength and ability! One single object lesson of a successful enterprise of this sort would lead the way to a succession of other successes. It may be asked, why do not these men themselves organize such institutions? One might as well ask why they do not at once become manufacturers or merchants individually. They have not been trained to such work and the leadership must come at the beginning from the outside.

Some years since I advanced the argument that the only immediate hope of coöperation lay on the side of the capitalist, because he alone was trained to organization. I advanced the thought that the only successful form, for the present, lay in profit-sharing. This has been true to this time, and if manufacturers and employers had been wiser they would have vastly extended this most admirable system of cementing labor to their own advantage. I still think there is great hope, and present conditions should make this thought eminently practical—for time and experiences are ripe for its rapid application. The hope of the lowliest classes lies in such help more than in any other direction. The best manhood can only be obtained by development of responsibility. Anything which increases a sense of responsibility will be the greatest and the truest help.

Our American workmen are certainly not as a general thing in as low a condition of development as those in foreign countries, and yet we have in our midst hundreds of thousands of those who are as foreign in their education and ideas as if they lived in Italy or in Poland or Bohemia. These are our dangerous classes, and truly dangerous because they have so little of their own that they do not appreciate the value of property. These are the ones who most need such education and who are least likely to get it unless helped by honest and intelligent friends outside their own ranks.

The development of our institutions must come, in my judgment, from the application of two ideas.

The first I have outlined herein and it may be briefly summarized as the voluntary association or combination of people for remunerative or benevolent purposes.

The second idea is that the whole people have an interest in those institutions and properties that are used by all. Lest I may be misunderstood let me state that I do not mean a development of the communistic idea held by a certain class of socialists and sometimes called the Bellamy idea. I would certainly hope for anything else rather than such a result. The Anglo-Saxon race has, for four hundred years, fought the battle of humanity for the development of the individual. This advance will not be lost; it has been far too costly to acquire and is too valuable to sacrifice for any consideration whatever. Any plan which lessens individual responsibility in the least degree is a total failure. Our labor unions, valuable as they are in many things, have gone much too far in this direction, and the time will come when they will see their mistake.

The next great political step just before us as a people is, in my judgment, the development of a true commonwealth. History is making so fast just at this moment that I would not feel justified at this time in discussing this proposition.

FACTS ABOUT WYOMING.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Referring to an editorial in the Chicago Record of recent date, in which comment is made upon certain correspondence of the Omaha Bee, concerning woman suffrage in Wyoming, I am pleased, after some delay occasioned by illness and the pressure of public duties, to make such answer as the cause of truth and justice appears to demand.

That the vote in Wyoming has been "considerably increased" by the admission of women to the rights of citizenship is a matter of course; but that any very noteworthy increase of election expenses has come as a necessary consequence of woman suffrage may be safely denied. If it were true, that would not of itself constitute a valid objection to legal and constitutional provisions based on simple and equal justice; but it is not true. The women of Wyoming are as patriotic as the men, and are as ready to make sacrifices in order to the discharge of a public duty. That they would stay away from any important election because a carriage was not offered them is certainly false. In the country the voters, both male and female, naturally ride to the polling places, but in the towns women having carriages of their own not unfrequently walk of choice, as all are pleased to do when duty demands.

So of woman's "less appreciation of the moral responsibility of a vote," the Record's answer touches the core of this objection and sweeps it away entirely; pointing out that, by the common consent of mankind, the moral perceptions of women are, as a rule, more, instead of less, acute than those of men, and very properly ascribing the indifference now and then manifested by women to their readier discrimination between political measures that are vital or purely partisan.

That social vices are to be found in Wyoming is too true, and yet not more true than of many other great communities, East and West. Prohibition and other organizations of like character cannot single out the people of Wyoming as especially wanting in the moral sense, nor can they hold her women, everywhere still in the minority, responsible for not thus early bringing about an ideal state of society. If they knew her people as well as the undersigned knows them, and the real status of society there, they would the rather marvel that in a region so lately on the very outskirts of civilization, and for the time being given to industries that bring to their service the more adventurous and the rougher elements of other frontier communities, this young commonwealth should have taken the comparatively high and worthy rank it has among the states of the American Union.

Whatever the faults and deficiencies of Wyoming, the honorable place she holds among the intelligent, orderly and progressive communities of the United States is in no small degree attributable to the absolute equality of her women before the law, and to the common loyalty with which they meet the responsibilities involved.

Very respectfully yours,

JOHN W. HOYT, ex-Governor Wyoming.

NEW ZEALAND RIGHTED.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—In your issue of March 15, appears an article with the heading, "New Zealand Items." Your correspondent finds much dissent here on her views of the un-Christian character of the W. C. T. U. On my return from convention which this year was held in Invercargill (our most southerly city) I stayed at each city en route one day, in order to meet the workers, and in every union found a healthy, spiritual life, in none more vigorous than in Christ Church; we all admire their zeal, and for several years have had the advantage and pleasure of referring to that union as the first to move in every good and Christian cause.

The two clergymen referred to I do not know, but heard their good work in the temperance cause everywhere praised. The successful candidate for our Parliament, "untried and obscure" is a prominent member of the Wesleyan church. Our conference this year was held in Christ Church and when the election for delegates to the general conference was made, this "untried and obscure" young man was well ahead in the list of lay representatives.

A resolution passed at the general meeting of the W. C. T. U., Auckland branch reads as follows:

"That this meeting having heard the letter read which appeared in THE UNION SIGNAL March 15, we desire to place on record our protest against the statements therein contained.

"We believe the prohibition movement throughout New Zealand is being carried on in a truly Christian spirit which we take to be 'for the sake of others.'

"We think the allusions made to the enfranchisement of woman are quite uncalled for and do not express the truest Christian sentiment. We are firmly of the opinion that this new power, placed in the hands of our women will, in the large majority of cases, be used on the side of righteousness and truth."

The following expressions from a former president of a union, need no explanation:

"I have been in correspondence with our leaders and representatives all over the colony and it is the very joy of my heart to see how thoroughly Christian is the spirit by which they are actuated. Every day the work of the union grows dearer to me because every day I see more and more plainly that it is Christ's work in every department and my hope for New Zealand is in the band of earnest Christian women being trained and educated by the W. C. T. U. No one could have attended our last convention without being struck by the deeply spiritual tone pervading the meetings." A. J. SCHNACKENBERG,

Pres. New Zealand W. C. T. U.

A STIR AMONG THE HILLS.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Colorado women have held the school ballot this many a year, have been eligible to school boards, and in various instances have proved by rare efficiency their right to such eligibility. But no school office above the local board has been open to them. In point of fact, many felt it to be only play citizenship. In many places a real interest in school elections is being brought out for the first time since full citizenship was gained. Some instances will show this, as well as the determination of the sex to stand by temperance.

We have an excellent state law for scientific temperance teaching, due to the wisdom and work of that noble W. C. T. U. pioneer president, Mrs. Mary F. Shields, and to Mrs. E. M. Wiley, who still serves as state superintendent of this department. Here and there it fails of enforcement. In a certain neighborhood at the foot of one of our mountain ranges this was the case. A liquor man has seemed to hold a mortgage not only on the farm lands, but on majorities, even to school elections, and tobacco-using teachers have been the rule; men, of course. Tippling was no bar to the honor and pay of the pedagogue. This spring, for the first, the women of the year-old W. C. T. U. (one of those that doesn't think it is doing anything) decided a change should come. Two women of that union are now on the school boards of two adjoining districts, showing majorities for morality and advanced ideas. In one, which had never cast more than a dozen school ballots, this contest called out sixty-six, and placed a conscientious, business-like woman at the head of the board.

In Monument, where the impetus for temperance given to the neighborhood by its live women had frightened the hold-over liquor authorities into registering no voters and calling no municipal election,—school-day was an index that their fear had been well-founded. The little town, set into what Helen Hunt called "the blue walls of the Divide," now has as secretary of the school board the secretary of the union, an educated and devoted woman, in place of a German woman elected last year, who was her husband's partner in the saloon business.

The ire of the high-license party at Longmont outlived their defeat at municipal election. Had not the righteous city declined to accept saloon-keepers as their tax-payers? Was not the bribe of "no levy of taxes this year" rejected by property owners, who preferred to pay them direct? The woman nominated should not be president of the school board. Indeed, no woman should be anywhere on the board. Our nominee was Mrs. Mary L. Carr, a pronounced temperance woman, formerly president of the Woman's Relief Corps for the department of Colorado and Wyoming. Her opponent was a member of the Ninth General Assembly of this state, and a temperance man. Are they not all honorable men? The friends of both worked faithfully. Election day saw one unwonted sight. The two nominees walked side by side up the broad path to the polls, exchanged ballots, voted, and went home. Mrs. Carr's majority was one hundred and ninety, just three more than that of the no-saloon ticket in April.

Towards the general election in November all faces are anxiously turned. The Republican party, which has nearly always carried the state by great majorities, was replaced by the Populists two years ago, and is now working with superhuman effort to regain lost ground. To this end every possible influence is being centered on the new element. One of these influences is Mrs. Foster herself. Failing to bring any woman resident of the state known to its public platform upon that platform for their party, Mrs. J. Ellen Foster is called in. She is telling the people that reforms should be left to the churches and to associations whose business it is to further them. And a befogged public, half of whom long to know just what to do about it, wonder who is responsible for the forty-six million dollars yearly turned into the coffers of the liquor traffic in our state while hungry children sob for bread.

It would be amusing if it were not a bit tragic to observe the nonchalant air of the politicians; to hear the pur—r—r—ing hush of their misnamed "public prints." While they drone "all is peace," the people are moved as never before by questions which not one of the three liquor parties can ever settle satisfactorily.

One cannot foretell what may at last be brought to bear upon the fate of our beautiful Republican state; but we are full of hope. Its women have consciences, as have many of its men. I have spoken for the Prohibition issue in fourteen of its counties since the year began, and find indifference nowhere. Governor St. John has put in a noble fortnight of work. George W. Bain is now in the state for another fortnight. How we have longed for John G. Woolley to bring the sentiment of our Christians at general election up to that of General Conference! But a grand contingent turns towards our snowy peaks,—Clara Hoffman and Henrietta Moore. Send them upon the upmost crest of your prayers, dear white-ribbon host, for our first year means so much for humanity.

Our own white-ribboners are for the Prohibition party, almost "to a man." Haven't we a right to do now what every wise woman ought to insist upon doing—make her talk count something? Thank God we have a party whose shibboleth is not equally fitting for the white walls of a church or the blood-red walls of a saloon. The annual convention of the Southwest district W. C. T. U., embracing an empire of fifteen immense counties, has just closed at fruit-raising Delta. It pronounced unanimously for the Home party, albeit the mayor, in his really kind address of welcome, showed his tender solicitude for us by advising us to stay far out of the domain of politics! Mrs. S. Rider-Pickett, whose president's pen has never flagged in the interest of home rule and for Christ, and Mrs. A. J. Fairbanks, newly elected, are sound and strong. The Northern and Southern conventions (the three embracing our entire state) will give out an equally certain tone within a few weeks.

THE NEW JERSEY TEMPERANCE EDUCATIONAL LAW.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Some months ago the Presbyterian synod of New Jersey instructed its Temperance committee to petition the legislature of that state for the enactment of a law requiring scientific temperance instruction in the public schools. Not long after the synod, with Protestant churches generally, and different religious and philanthropic organizations, including the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, through a committee, invited Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, of Boston, National superintendent of scientific temperance instruction, to canvass New Jersey and present the matter to the state legislature, which she did with her usual success, as recent events have proved.

Soon after the enactment of the law an article appeared in the New York World, in which the law was denounced and Mrs. Hunt was charged with working in the interests of the American Book Company and receiving a sum of money for her services. Many circumstances favor the supposition that this article was instigated by the publishers of the few unendorsed text-books in which total abstinence is not taught, for the purpose of preventing the introduction of the endorsed books into the schools.

The committee representing the churches and different Christian and philanthropic organizations of New Jersey have sent out a letter through the press, denying every charge against the bill, the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and Mrs. Hunt.

Certain objects are best seen from a distance, and perhaps we are too near the recent victory in New Jersey to see it in all its grandeur, but we know that the advocates of temperance in that state, with tens of thousands all over the land, feel that we owe a debt of gratitude to Mrs. Hunt which words are powerless to express. Much less can we allow to remain unnoticed such grave and unjust charges against one who has consecrated large talent, time and money to a work in which she has been exceptionally successful. It hardly need be said that Mrs. Hunt has not and has never had any pecuniary interest in any book company; her only object in that direction has been to secure the best books on scientific temperance instruction for the schools. To this end and the better instruction of teachers, as well as for the passage of temperance education laws by the state legislatures in the different states, she has labored with voice and pen for many years, with unselfish motives and singleness of purpose.

It is only when the enemy sees his strongest fortress threatened that he dares make the most desperate attack. Temperance instruction in the public schools is without doubt one of the most important factors in the overthrow of the great enemy of our republic—intemperance.

THE GRACE OF COMMENDATION.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—I believe in the grace of commendation; nay, I believe it to be a grave fault to withhold words of approval when we recognize the fact that duties, responsibilities or obligations have been so met as to fulfill all requirements. How is one to know that she is helping people if no commendation is expressed? No doubt much good effort languishes because approbation felt is left unspoken.

I am moved to these thoughts by the fact that I have scarcely taken up an issue of THE UNION SIGNAL for the last six months that has not specially commended itself to me by its excellence. The admirable editorials on current events, the timely and well written contributions on present measures and methods before the public, the wisdom displayed in many of the selections all demonstrate the ability of our editorial corps, aside from Miss Willard, who, though she has been an invalid, has always sent her gracious and inspiring notes from across the seas to testify her love and devotion to our work. Scarcely a week passes that I do not feel like sending you a note of congratulation on your excellent management. Nowhere do I see editorials more finely written, in sentiment moderate, in expression just, in spirit gentle and yet true and strong in good principles, than you have given us, and I assure you it gives me real pleasure not only to read them but to thus testify my appreciation. Certainly there can be no complaining these days as to the conduct of our paper. Our women have great reason to be proud of it, both in the editorial and mechanical departments. Let me therefore ease my conscience and give you the sunshine of commendation, which is simply your due but which gives me great pleasure to express. I hope it is the kind of sunshine that will not overpower you, even with the thermometer at 93 degrees in the shade, as it is to-day!

Sincerely yours,

SOPHIE F. GRUBB.

[The editors present their very best bow to Mrs. Grubb, for her beautiful words of appreciation, which have greatly comforted and encouraged us.—EDS.]

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

For whatsoever is born of God overcometh the world: and this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith.—I. John 5:4.

Our chieftain is back, and in person at the head of the white-ribbon host again. Every loyal heart throughout the ranks rejoices with joy unspeakable that this royal woman has been restored to health, and is again among us to take up her great lifework, but we venture to say that no heart rejoices more at her return than the founder of the Temple. Frances Willard's broad, prophetic vision focuses at a glance the first great work needing attention. She thinks the hour has struck for her to take the platform in behalf of raising funds for the Temple, and if her strength continues to increase in the next four months as it has in the last, she proposes, in company with the founder of the Temple, shortly after the adjournment of the National Convention in November, to commence holding meetings in all the large cities of the country for the purpose of raising funds for the above object. It is hoped by that time that the appalling crisis through which the country is now passing will have come to an end, and an era of prosperity and peace may have set in.

Mrs. Mary A. Livermore, at the breakfast given to Miss Willard in Boston last week, came to the writer and offered her services to take the field for the purpose of raising money for the Temple, in which she is deeply interested. This noble woman during the Civil War raised $100,000 for the work of the sanitary commission, besides a great deal of money for other purposes. Mrs. Mattie McCleland Brown, of Cincinnati, O., Mrs. Emily Pitt Stevens, of California, Mrs. Ellen K. Denny, of Indiana, all within a few weeks past have offered their services to take the platform in behalf of raising funds wherewith to make the "House Beautiful" all our own. What means this turning of so many noble minds towards the accomplishment of an object wherein there was no preconcerted action? We think the influence was heaven-born which has stirred them all to the same line of action. We will have a wide-spread movement in this direction as soon as the country recovers from the financial collapse in which it has been shrouded for the past year. In the meantime, let the rank and file of the white-ribboners stand by the Temple. If you cannot do great things, do the little you can, beloved sisters, for these are appalling times; we must hold on to what we have already secured, and we cannot do this without your aid; now is the time of times for you to help. A little farther along, when prosperity again smiles upon our beloved land, we will be able to secure outside help, but the present is not an opportune time to ask for it. Next week we will give an account of some liberal gifts secured in Boston.

The first six months of 1894 have ended. Thousands during that time have sent for mite-boxes so as to fill them during the year in order that they may secure one of the beautiful silver Temple souvenir spoons which are given to all this year who put a penny a day in the Temple mite-box. Christmas will soon be here again. How many who desire to make presents to dear ones will be wishing they had put aside their penny a day and secured one of the beautiful spoons as a Christmas gift? It is not yet too late, two cents a day which will never be missed will secure the coveted gift in six months. Mrs. L. H. Heyslop, Nebraska City, Neb., has received one of the spoons. She writes: "It is, indeed, beautiful, lovely. I trust it may induce some of my friends to send for a mite-box." Mrs. Everett Jones, Spring Valley, Minn., has received the Columbian souvenir and is delighted with its beauty. She writes: "I had it mounted and placed on a pedestal so it would turn and show both sides, then took it to a temperance sociable; the ladies all wanted one."

Northumberland county, Pa., W. C. T. U. has sent $40 on their pledge; it should have been mentioned before but was overlooked. Thirty-five dollars comes from Mrs. H. W. Woodward, treasurer, on the pledge of the Central W. C. T. U., Sioux City, Iowa. Mrs. J. J. Curtis, secretary, sends $15 on the pledge of the W. C. T. U. of Charlotte, Mich. She writes: "We hope to be able to pay the balance of our hundred dollar pledge soon, then we may do more. I hope to fill a mite-box independent of the union this year, and get the souvenir spoon." How we wish all unions and white-ribboners would act in the spirit of the above. The Central Y. W. C. T. U. of Chicago pledges $100, and pays a first installment of $10. Mrs. Margaret Bradbury sends $5 as a first installment on a hundred dollar pledge by the Norfolk, Va., W. C. T. U.

Mrs. E. L. Wood, Brooklyn, N. Y., sends a check for $3 from the L. T. L. of which she is superintendent. She describes in her letter a delightful gathering of the band, their parents and friends, at an entertainment in which many of the L. T. L's took part. At the close a collection for the Temple was taken with the above result. Why do not more of our L. T. L. boys and girls have little entertainments for the Temple, that great building which in the future is to be their very own?

All persons sending $1 to the Temple will receive the beautiful Columbian souvenir. Any individual who fills a mite-box during 1894 will receive a solid silver Temple souvenir teaspoon. This, however, does not apply to persons filling boxes for unions; they receive the Columbian souvenir. All money orders and checks should be made out in the name of William D. Preston, and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara G. Johnson, the Temple, Chicago, Ill. All orders for mite-boxes and everything pertaining to the Temple should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, the Temple, Chicago, Ill.

WELCOME TO FRANCES E. WILLARD.

At Fourth District Reception at Evanston, July 24, 1894.

BY KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON.

Does any one know why the skies are so blue,
Why pleasures are many and sorrows so few,
Why all the old ills have forgotten to ache,
Why spirits are gay and why hearts fail to quake?
We'll tell you, we'll tell you, just bend low your ear:
Life's gloom has all fled since the Chieftain is here.

Will somebody kindly hold me to-day?
My heart is as light as the wind in its play,
My fancy's the veriest thistle-bloom blown,
And my moods take the range of each wide spreading zone.
Oh, surely, you all can but share in my glee
Since our Chieftain comes back to her "ain fair countrie."

Oh, welcome her, all ye wild winds of the West!
Oh, welcome her, shores which her heart loves the best!
Oh, welcome her, Michigan's wavelets so blue,
And welcome her, hearts which e'er beat for her true!
Our Queen comes again to her own regal throne
And America's womanhood welcomes its own.

No bell sounds the pæan through trade's busy marts,
But the joy-bells are ringing in countless glad hearts;
No cannon booms forth on this festival morn,
But we list to the great shouts of nations unborn;
Past, Present and Future are with us to-day,
And Eternity's sunlight is gilding our way.

She comes, and Wrong shudders before her light tread;
She comes, and Right, down-trodden, lifts its brave head;
She comes, and Oppression skulks back to its lair;
She comes, and a phalanx surrounds her of prayer;
Oh, never did conqueror come in such might
As she whose insignia's the ribbon so white.

God bless her! God guard her! God guide her, we pray!
God give her new strength for each new coming day.
New insight, new courage, new power from above,
New passion of infinite, soul-throbbing love!
Our Chieftain! we welcome thee, pledge thee anew
A love and a service as true as thou'rt true.

THE WAY OF IT.

BY G. M. GARDENIER.

THURSDAY, March 18.

The annual meeting of the W. C. T. U. occurred to-day. What a grand work the temperance women are doing! I have always been averse to wearing a badge, but to-day, when I heard of all the good that is being done by the women, I proudly tied on the white ribbon and shall wear it constantly, even in my everyday dresses. There are so many different meetings to be attended that the union decided to try the experiment this year of holding its meetings only monthly. The third Thursday of the month was the time chosen.

I am sure any one can spend an hour a month for temperance. I don't mean to miss a single meeting this year. It is due to Mrs. Everfaithful, our dear little president, that we sustain her. She accepted the office only upon that condition.

THURSDAY, April 19.

A regular April day! Sunshine and tears. After dinner I went up-town to do a few errands, intending to go to the temperance meeting at three o'clock. How much time it does take to do a little shopping, especially if one stops to even look at the many beautiful things displayed. I was surprised when I left the millinery department of Style & Lowprice to find that it was four o'clock, too late to attend the meeting to-day. I hope they had a good one.

THURSDAY, May 17.

What a busy world this is! I had intended all the week to go to the W. C. T. U. meeting to-day, but last evening Miss Fitwell sent word that she could cut Ollie's new green suit, if I could have it done to-day. We had it well under way, and I could have gone to the meeting, only at the last moment we decided to smock the vest and side panel. The suit is lovely made in that way, and she looks so stylish in it. There is a deal of nonsense about plain clothing for young girls. If they ever care to look well it is when they are young, and tasty clothing is an aid.

THURSDAY, June 21.

Was just about ready to start for the W. C. T. U. meeting this afternoon when Mrs. Judge DoLittle called to take me for a drive in her new carriage. She is very sensitive, and I did not like to refuse her. (They are very aristocratic.) I can go to the meeting any time. We had a charming drive. Went and called on poor, old Grandma Toil; found her very bad with rheumatism. Surely, in comparison with her, "My lines have been cast in pleasant places." I hope I am truly thankful.

THURSDAY, July 19.

Company to-day. My old friend, Mrs. M., of Kansas, is in town, and to-day seemed the most convenient of any time for her to visit me. It is years since I last saw her. What a pleasant visit we did have! I was a little chagrined at tea time, when John said that he met the president of the W. C. T. U. on the street this afternoon and she inquired why I was not at the meeting. Mrs. M. said at once, "Why didn't you go? I should have been so glad to have gone with you. I never miss a meeting at home; I cannot afford to, we gain so much information. I have felt lost without them ever since I have been in town, but as none of my friends have invited me to go with them I thought perhaps the meetings of the union were suspended during the summer months." Well, I hope it has taught me a lesson; after this I shall invite my friends to go.

THURSDAY, August 16.

We came back last night from our trip to the mountains. I was sure I should go to the union this afternoon, for I wanted to go to the store on my way, but after dinner I took my book and lopped down a few minutes to rest. I fell into a doze and actually overslept myself until it was too late. I was just dressing when I saw some of the ladies go by on their way home. They looked so warm, that I am almost glad it happened so, for I am sure I could not have gone there and to the Chautauqua also, and I am very anxious to go to the Circle to-night for two reasons; we have never met with Mrs. Well-to-do before, and we are to have criticisms upon the new book, "Robert Elsmere."

THURSDAY, September 20.

When I came home from my trip I resolved to attend every meeting of the union for the rest of the year. I could have gone just as well as not this afternoon, but am ashamed to own, even to myself, that I actually forgot it. Miss Readywriter, the secretary, called on her way home. I could hardly believe then that a whole month had passed. How time does fly! Miss R. said they had made an estimate, and that less than one-fifth of the members attend the meetings. It is too bad; we ought to take interest enough to go once in awhile.

THURSDAY, October 18.

I was determined this month that nothing should prevent me from going to the temperance meeting, but it was so unfortunate that our Missionary Anniversary should occur at the same time. Our church is pledged to help support a native preacher in Burmah, and we must raise the money in some way. To-day we had a Harvest Festival for that purpose. The tables looked beautiful and the supper was lovely. I suppose the church has the first claim upon us, but I sometimes think we owe as much to the cause of temperance as to missions, but I am too tired to-night to think anything out properly.

THURSDAY, November 15.

How cold it has come off! We had to have our stoves put up to-day, and I always have to see to it. We expected the man all the morning, but he never came until after two o'clock, and it took him a good hour and a half before he was ready to clean out the pipe to the range. Of course I was too late to go to the temperance meeting. I felt very much disappointed, for I saw by the morning paper that Mrs. Goodman, wife of the new pastor of Park Church, was going to lead the meeting. I am so glad to see the ministers' wives take hold of the work; I am sure it will have a great influence with the women of the congregation. I noticed the first time I saw her that she wore the white ribbon.

THURSDAY, December 20.

Only four days till Christmas, and one of them Sunday. I don't know how I am ever going to get through all the work I have planned! I should have gone to the temperance meeting this afternoon, but I knew that my mind would not be there if my body was. I was very anxious to get the fringe tied into the afghan I was making. I finished it just at dark. Christmas comes but once a year.

THURSDAY, January 16.

John and Ollie both have the mumps and I fear Harry is coming down with them. The rest of us all have colds. The temperance meeting and revival services at the church both had to be given up to-day.

THURSDAY, February 14.

I received a valentine this morning in the shape of a dainty invitation to attend a "Thankoffering" meeting at the W. C. T. U. parlors, lunch and social to follow the meeting. The members are requested to bring a temperance sentiment and an offering for the state society. I have been looking over my diary, and find that I have not been to a single meeting this year. I could not believe it.

LATER.

I went to the union. The meeting was delightful. I don't see how so many good things can be crowded into an hour. Some of the sentiments were beautiful and two women told how the union had actually rescued them. There was quite a large collection for the state society. Miss Paywell sent the money on her way home.—Woman's Temperance Work.

CRUCIAL MOMENTS IN NATIONAL LIFE.

BY B. O. FLOWER.

When in the history of a nation the shell of conventionalism encrusts a civilization, a gross and deadly materialism crushes faith and hope, turns the index finger downward, and sneers at the ideals of duty, justice and love by whose leverage the world is raised; when human sympathy becomes paralyzed in consequence of self-absorption; when capital becomes more precious than human rights; when life is less sacred than property; when the letter is enlarged and the spirit disregarded; when theology magnifies the importance of form, rite and ritual while industry begs in vain for employment; when widows starve and orphans grow up amid an environment of moral death; when divine love is at a discount, and the faith so loudly proclaimed by the lips finds no responsive echo in the deep recesses of the soul; when we have the melancholy spectacle of a nation which has reached a point beyond which it cannot go without forever losing the soul which made progress possible, and which alone held the element of perpetual rejuvenation,—then the voice of the divine speaks through prophets, poets and seers, crying "Choose." On the one side are duty, justice, love and stern morality; on the other the selfishness of pure animalism expressed in luxury, voluptuousness and venality. The moment is supreme. The coronal region struggles with the basilar for final supremacy, and the issue is life or death; not necessarily a sudden going out if the lower triumphs, for sometimes, as in the civilization of Rome, a slow and terrible agony of decay precedes the final downfall.

We are to-day facing one of these great crises. Professor George D. Herron voices the common conviction of earnest students of social conditions when he says:

"We are in the beginnings of a revolution that will strain all religious and political institutions, and test the wisdom and heroism of the earth's purest and bravest souls. It will not do to say the revolution is not coming, or pronounce it of the devil. Revolutions, even in their wildest forms, are the impulses of God moving in tides of fire through the life of man."

The slogan cry of "All for all" is far more noble than the creed "All for self" which has held sway in the past. The dogma of the divine right of property has too long obscured the rights of man. Plundering by law may be safe, but it is not moral, and throwing a few millions of acquired gold into the lap of philanthropy, conventional education or a church more awake on the material than the spiritual side of her being, may be politic, but such acts do not take away the woe pronounced by Jesus upon the Pharisees who paid tithes and posed as philanthropists while they "devoured widows' houses" and ignored the "weightier matters of the law," such as judgment and mercy.

The hour for dreaming is past. Not a moment is to be lost if the republic is to be redeemed. From this time forward plain speaking will be in order. The time for the soul to assert its supremacy has arrived; blessed is the man or woman who makes the great renunciation, and consecrates life to the cause of the people and for the restoration of the republic from the rule of the Assyrians.

"He's true to God who's true to man; wherever wrong is done,
To the humblest and the weakest, 'neath the all-beholding sun,
That wrong is also done to us; and they are slaves most base,
Whose love of right is for themselves, and not for all their race.

"'Tis ours to save our brethren, with peace and love to win
Their darkened hearts from error, ere they harden it to sin;
But if before his duty man with listless spirit stands,
Erelong the Great Avenger takes the work from out his hands."

EVERY day's experience tends to more and more confirm me in the opinion that the temperance cause lies at the foundation of all social and political reforms.—Richard Cobden.

CHILDREN'S GIFTS.

In token that I owe
All that I have to Thee,
I drop my little gift
Into Thy treasury.

In token that the world
Needs some of what is mine;
The sad, the rich, the poor, I own,
The gift is Thine.

In token that Thy Name
Makes all men's needs Thine own
Father, I give my gift for them
To Thee alone.

In token that I think
That Thou art pleased by
This gift, I give it thee, though small,
Father on high.

In token that I wish
Thy happy child to be,
By loving kindness will I strive
To grow like Thee.

PEBBLES.

BY FRANK DEMPSTER SHERMAN.

Out of a pellucid brook
Pebbles round and smooth I took;
Like a jewel, every one
Caught a color from the sun—
Ruby red and sapphire blue,
Emerald and onyx too,
Diamond and amethyst—
Not a precious stone I missed;
Gems I held from every land
In the hollow of my hand.
Workman Water these had made;
Patiently through sun and shade,
With the ripples of the rill
He had polished them until,
Smooth, symmetrical and bright,
Each one sparkling in the light
Showed within its burning heart
All the lapidary's art;
And the brook seemed thus to sing,
Patience conquers everything!

THE "LAL FITA FAUJ."

BY ELLA BARTLETT SIMMONS.

"Oh, papa! mayn't I join the Lal Fita Fauj? (red ribbon club). All the boys of our school are invited to become members."

The speaker was a bright-eyed, dark-complexioned little fellow, by the name of Juman, whose home was in Bareilly, India.

The intense excitement depicted upon his countenance, and the unconscious grace of his attitude, all taken in connection with his Oriental surroundings, produced a picture such as an artist would long to transfer to the canvas.

The day upon which our story opens, Dr. Scott, one of the American missionaries, had visited the Makan (school) and told the boys about the Red Ribbon Club and Loyal Temperance Legion, and asked them to explain the matter to their parents and request of them permission to become members.

"And," added Juman earnestly, "Scott Sahib said he would be around to-morrow to see how many of us could join."

Then said the father, "What is it anyway; what does it mean, this Lal Fita Fauj?"

Juman explained as best he could, but felt that he did not make it very clear just what the society was.

His father gave him little encouragement that he would be permitted to join, but said, crossly, "'Tis all nonsense! Why, what would you do without your hookah (pipe) each night? You know that tambaka (tobacco) is cheaper than food, and sometimes when we have neither maida (flour), curry nor rice we often smoke the hookah instead of eating our supper. Besides, I am sure there is no harm in drinking the Auguri Sharab (grape wine) on the great feast days to our gods."

"But, papa, Scott Sahib said it was not good to drink and smoke, and when I told him I had done both ever since I was two years old, he inquired, 'How old are you now, my little man?' I was so glad I knew, for a great many of the boys have no idea what their age is. I answered promptly, 'Ten years old, Sahib.' At which he looked quite sober, and said, 'You are no larger than a boy eight years old should be, perhaps the tobacco has stunted your growth.'"

"Ho! ho! that's all behuda," angrily exclaimed his father. "Bring me the hookah now and we'll both take a smoke while that lazy woman is getting supper."

"But, papa, let me help mamma grind the flour, it seems so hard for her to do it alone."

"Nonsense! such work is only fit for women. The gods didn't intend them to be as good and noble as men. They are inferior to us and should serve us."

"But I love my mamma and would like to help her."

"Well, you can't, so there! And don't you go to pitying her, either. Women have neither hearts nor souls. Bring me the pipe, I say!"

Thus commanded, our little Juman arose slowly and went into the house after the hookah. Such a poor little house it was! A few weeks previous it was swept away by the floods, but having been rescued it was again set in place. The roof, however, could not be found, and no new one had been added as yet. The little low building was made of mud—the floor was of the same material, and the roof had been of long, coarse grass. There was at this time literally no furniture in the house save a hideous mud idol and a rude box.

To this box Juman repaired and took from within the beloved hookah. This pipe was very different from the ones used in this country. It was made of two joints of bamboo cane and two cocoanut shells; only half of the larger shell was used, however, and it formed the bowl of the pipe. A hole had been bored through its base into which one of the pieces of bamboo had been fitted. The smaller shell had two holes piercing its hardened sides. Into one of these the lower end of the bamboo stem was placed and allowed to extend some distance into the cocoanut. Into the other opening near it was the other bamboo standing at almost right angles with the first.

As Juman came from the house bearing the hookah he spoke lovingly to his mother as he passed by. She having finished grinding the meal was preparing the curry and rice, which was to be cooked out of doors on the mud stove which her hands had fashioned.

Carrying the pipe to his father he started away when he was recalled by the stern voice of Masih Charan bidding him return and bring some water. When it was brought he poured a little of it into the cocoanut (as is the custom) then filled the bowl partially full of tobacco and touching a match to it handed it to his father, who, placing his mouth at the end of the bamboo cane which stood at right angles to the one bearing the bowl, began smoking in true Oriental style.

He was reclining on the low carpai (bed) which is always removed out of doors during the hot, dry season. After smoking a few moments in silence Masih Charan called Juman to his side and bade him also to take a few draws from the pipe.

"Oh! no, papa, I do not want to, indeed I do not!" exclaimed our little hero.

"But I say you must do as I bid you."

Without a word our little baba took the hookah in his mouth and began smoking, yet all the while the tears ran down his cheeks.

Seeing which his father called out, "Stop crying! What's the matter with you? You have always been very anxious to smoke before. You can't attend that school again if it is going to make such a fool of you. You shan't go to-morrow, so mind! Yes, you can too, but I'll go along and tell that missionary Sahib what I think of him."

"I know you will like our missionary and I believe when you hear him tell of the Lal Fita Fauj you will not be so opposed to it," answered Juman.

HIS LITTLE CHIVALRY.

Sometimes the spirit of sympathy and tenderness crops out on apparently barren soil. On the corner of one of the business streets of a city, a shoeblack had just finished polishing the shoes of a well-dressed man. The latter was unfortunate in having a deformity which compelled him to wear a shoe on one of his feet with an exceedingly thick sole, thus endeavoring to make up mechanically for what nature had denied him.

"How much shall I pay you?" he asked the boy.

"Five cents, sir."

"Oh, but you should have more than five cents for polishing my shoes," said the gentleman, tapping the thick sole significantly with his cane.

"No, sir; five cents is enough. I don't want to make no money out o' your hard luck."

The customer handed out a coin, laid his hand on the youngster's head for a moment, and passed on.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—After the interesting story of the temperance boy in India, which is commenced on this page, you will also like to read the two letters from the little Hindoo widows which are printed below. These letters were written to Miss Willard about a year ago by the young girls of Pundita Ramabai's school in Poona. Pundita Ramabai is the learned Indian lady of high caste, who came to this country several years ago and received help from kind people to establish a school for the abused girl-widows of her race. These letters tell their own sad story and yet make us glad to know that there is a place where these unhappy girls can find comfort and help.

Yours affectionately,

Aunt Jane

NEPHEWS AND NIECES.

MY DEAR AUNT:—You do not know me yet you are going to support me and pray for me, poor sufferer. Many thanks for your kindness; I was in great sorrow and was treated cruelly. In India generally the girls suffer a great deal at their father-in-law's house, but I suffered at mother-in-law's and also at my own mother's house. I do not want to say anything unhappy, but now you are to me like mother and so I tell you. When I was a small girl my mother sent me to my mother-in-law's house. The whole day I used to work and yet they used to treat me badly. Once my father-in-law beat me so much that my whole body was swollen and I could not move; thinking I would not live they sent me to my mother's. I am very happy here. I learn the Bible and believe Jesus as my Saviour. I have perfect peace. Pundita Ramabai loves me very much. All the girls are quite well. Please send me your photograph.

Your orphan,
MATHURABAI TIKOTTER.

I am very glad to write to you a letter. I had no friend whom I can write a letter except my father. But now I thank God that He gave me a friend such as you to express my thoughts. And I thank God for Ramabai and also Sunderbai. They told me about the grace of God and how He shows His kindness to us. So by all these I trust God of Jesus as my Saviour. When I was eleven years old I became a widow. And I was treated unkindly by my mother-in-law and suffered great deal. My father intended to send me in a school. But as soon as he found Sharada Sadan he asked me whether I would learn. First I denied. But at last I said yes; then I came in this school. When I came I was very weak. But now I am getting better. The cause of getting better is kindness of Bai. She took care of me very interestly. Now I am sixteen years old. I have passed Marathi fifth standard and English third. I am learning violin. I learn Bible every day. I thank you very much for you pray for me, I will pray for you. Many people are against me because I learn the Bible but I hope God will give me the power to bear their speaking. Not only people are against me but my father is against me too. Because they are Hindo, I am Hindo, but I don't worship idols. In May holidays we went to B-anaowar woods. There were many monkeys. Every day we used to have our baths under water falling. I hope God will give a great strength to Bai to do this good work. I can't write a long letter because I don't know your language as I know my own. But I hope God will help me to learn. Your affectionate child,

Sharada Sadan, Poona. KASHI DAUDHUR.

THE NORWEGIAN BILL IN MASSACHUSETTS.

Massachusetts, during the past six months, has been a strategic point in the temperance warfare. Indeed, since 1852 the same fact has been true, at different periods, to a greater or lesser degree.

In that year the first prohibitory law was enacted, which was, later, declared unconstitutional by the courts. In 1855 a new bill, prepared by General Butler, was adopted and stood all the legal tests and quibbles.

That law remained upon the statute books, though but poorly enforced, until a constabulary force was created which, under the constant pressure of the friends of prohibition, secured its execution with such vigor and success that the wrath of the liquor-sellers' association was aroused and a plan devised which resulted in the repeal of the law in the legislature of 1868-9.

Local option then became the state's method for dealing with the problem of the liquor traffic, a method whose weaknesses have been bolstered up, in more recent years, by high license, with all its prophesied beneficent results, which have so strangely failed of materialization.

In 1889 occurred the heroic struggle for the prohibitory amendment to the state constitution; a measure which met with defeat at the ballot-box although 88,000 men voted in its favor.

Since that time there has been no sustained effort to change the policy of the state upon the liquor question until last winter, when a bill to introduce the Norwegian system in license towns passed the house, and in the Senate was referred to the next general court.

The history of that bill is in brief as follows: It was introduced by Mr. J. G. Thorp, Jr., of Cambridge, a man of waelth and social standing. Rev. J. G. Brooks had previously been sent to Norway as Massachusetts' commissioner for the purpose of investigating the system upon its native heath. As he had already written an article in The Forum against prohibition and in favor of restricting the traffic, he can hardly be regarded as an absolutely impartial judge. He returned with a report so favorable that one may be justified in bestowing upon it the adjective partisan. He quotes largely from H. E. Berner, a Norwegian champion of the system, but singularly omits Mr. Berner's seven pages of objections which follow his "But, notwithstanding."

Reinforced with Mr. Brooks' report a grand mass-meeting was held in the new Old South church which was attended largely by the wealth and aristocracy of Boston. In the swing and enthusiasm of this great gathering the names of prominent citizens were given galore. At least twelve clergymen confessed afterwards that they had given their names before reading the bill, while one of the most noted of Boston's divines said that though he had at first been inclined to indorse the measure, he had since been convinced that it was a "compromise with the devil."

Armed with the eclat of the Boston meeting the same speakers went through the state, everywhere holding most enthusiastic meetings.

The bill had four hearings before the liquor law committee, March 19, 20, 23 and 26, well known advocates speaking on each side. Literature in its favor was widely distributed, notably Mr. Brooks' report; letters from Mrs. Livermore and ex-Governor Long, also from Dr. John Blackmer and President Carter of Williams College.

The bill was three times amended, and in its final state consists of seventeen articles, filling thirteen printed pages. Its salient points are:

1. That the system can only be tried in towns which for two successive annual elections shall have voted to license the sale of intoxicating liquors.

2. The licenses granted under this system must continue in force for three years, unless forfeited by failure to observe their conditions.

3. A corporation must be formed which shall have full control of the granting of licenses, and all profits above four per cent must be applied "in aid of non-sectarian objects of general public benefit and utility."

4. Liquor is to be sold only by salaried agents who are supposed to have no personal interest in increasing its sales.

5. The commissioner of corporations is to examine and investigate every such corporation in like manner, and with the same powers as are granted to the commissioner of savings banks.

6. Six classes of licenses are granted under the bill.

The temperance people have been most active in their opposition. Mrs. Fessenden, president of the state W. C. T. U., came out with a strong letter in the Boston Herald in which she gave seven cogent reasons why she opposed the bill:

1. Because it proposes the continuance of the liquor traffic.

2. Because it grants government the right to license an evil which ruins the people.

3. Because license, in any form, is demoralizing.

4. Because towns now voting "no" would be tempted to vote "yes."

5. Because we do not want our "streets paved" and our "libraries furnished" with the price of the souls and bodies of our boys.

6. Because the scheme is impracticable.

7. Because the power of the liquor monopoly would be greatly augmented.

Mrs. A. J. Gordon, president of the Boston Central union, also published an admirable letter in opposition; while "Twelve Reasons Why the Norwegian Bill should not Become Law"; and "The Norwegian System," by P. Carlson, of Stockholm, have been widely circulated. The latter is deserving of special mention, since it gives in detail many of the points of President Berner's report, omitted by Mr. Brooks; and also shows conclusively that the diminution of drunkenness throughout the countries in question is not due to the "system," but to an educational propaganda carried on for the past twenty-five years by the foremost men and women of the country.

Everything points to the fact that a great battle is to be waged during the coming winter, and already the hosts are marshaling. A committee consisting of some of the strongest of Boston's clergymen and laymen has been appointed, and one of the most striking things to be noted in this committee is that its first motion was to make the president of the Massachusetts W. C. T. U. its chairman, and to place itself "subject to her command." A motion was also unanimously carried that the one thing to which they should bend their energies must be the securing of woman's ballot as the final solution of the liquor problem.

Massachusetts will have the sympathy and prayers of the entire white ribbon sisterhood in this coming struggle, and will, we doubt not, come off victorious against this old foe in a new guise.

HINTS FOR THE LOCAL PRESS SUPERINTENDENT.

In one reliable newspaper directory the temperance and Prohibition periodicals are esteemed of sufficient importance to claim a separate classification, and examination of the records reveals the following: In the United States and Canada there are one hundred and ninety-three Temperance and Prohibition periodicals (including distinctively W. C. T. U. publications). These have an estimated total circulation of over six hundred thousand. Supposing each one of these six hundred thousand copies to be read by five persons (and the estimate is doubtless too small), there is an audience of three million reached by this silent evangelist. Add to this the hundreds—if not thousands—of columns in the local papers of the country, each one edited by a white-ribbon press superintendent. To these add the scattering work done by means of temperance paragraphs, poems, stories, articles and reports inserted now and then by semi-sympathetic editors, all helping along the great work of press evangelization. Who dares estimate the results?

The National W. C. T. U. press department sends temperance and W. C. T. U. data throughout the country by means of the A. N. Kellogg Newspaper Company, which, through some nineteen hundred papers, reaches an aggregate of over one million readers; The United Press, which reaches fifteen million readers; The Associated Press, which flashes its telegraphic news to nearly every daily in the United States and Canada, and Hunt's News Bureau, in touch with a million readers. With her hand on such sources of power as these what may not the W. C. T. U. credit to the work of the press in evangelizing the world?

Facts can be piled on facts, but the practical question ever pushes itself to the front, "What can our union do through the press?" and since a union never accomplishes more than the measure of capabilities of its individual members, the query becomes, "What can I do?" A few weeks ago we published an editorial on The Press as an Evangelist, we wish now to speak directly to the press superintendent.

Let us consider first what is usually called the W. C. T. U. column or corner in the local newspaper, granted gladly or grudgingly as the case may be. This column, appearing once a week, fortnight or month, is most commonly filled with W. C. T. U. news—always with W. C. T. U. doctrine in some form or other. Preceding temperance news must be temperance activity, and before a press superintendent can report work, work must be done. She was a wise local president who, having been appointed over a dead union to resurrect it if possible, instituted early in her administration a department of press work, putting at its head the most thoroughly alive woman of the union. The press superintendent was in despair; there was at her disposal no less than a column a week of space in the leading daily and she could not write of one forward movement of the union she represented. Chagrined and aroused, she never rested until, to use her own expression, she had "prodded up" her sleeping sisters and set them to work that she might have some work to report!

Given, then, a live union, a live press superintendent and space in a local paper, what is needed besides? Everything! The press superintendents must study local conditions on political, educational, social and religious lines; she must watch developments on all sides—in public sentiment, in the attitude of the pulpit toward the cause, in the action of political "machines"; she must be conversant with the movements of every reform force about her not distinctively W. C. T. U. Not one day's vacation in her watchful and listening attitude can the press superintendent take, unless she first be sure that the world is "vacationing" with her, for nothing should escape her earnest thought and flying pencil. She must read, and to enable her to do this she ought to be voted as liberal an allowance as possible each year, that she may have at her command one or more of the best temperance periodicals of the day, leading religious papers, a foreign paper or two if possible, party organs, and at least one of the leading liquor periodicals; these last, that careful spy-work may be done in the enemy's country. The press superintendent needs to know what that saloon near her home is doing, what that distiller in the great city is about, and what movements were set afoot by the last Brewers' Association convention. These liquor papers watch the temperance press—witness their would-be witty or insolent comments in Mida's Criterion and the Wine and Liquor Gazette concerning various phases of the work done by the "Prohibs" and "the temperance cranks." It looks like a mountainous task to ask the busy wife and mother who perhaps has charge of the mothers' meetings, is the backbone of the gospel meetings, and is press superintendent as well, to read as above. But these accomplishings have ceased to be miracles in the W. C. T. U., and the busier these white-ribbon heroines are the better work they do!

It may perplex some unions whose funds are limited as to how to get these papers, but it is not such a deep problem after all. Every paper of any size receives a large number of exchanges, and from the editor who has been friendly enough to accord space for W. C. T. U. items, some of these exchanges can be readily obtained for the simple trouble of calling for them. Others can be obtained from friends and acquaintances, and strangers will be glad sometimes to favor "the cause" by putting their periodicals aside for the press superintendent.

The enterprising, determined worker will have news if she has to visit reading-rooms and newspaper offices, and stand, pencil and note-book in hand, long enough to get the temperance cream. Every member of the union ought to be a committee of one to clip or copy for the press superintendent any temperance items or articles that may possibly be of use, leaving her to sort them herself. The Y's and the honoraries can do good service here, each contributing to the library of the one who is to keep the temperance column alive.

It need hardly be emphasized to our readers that the one paper to be read from cover to cover, fifty-two weeks in the year, is the paper made possible by the W. C. T. U.,—THE UNION SIGNAL. It scents the battle from afar, foretells victories, analyzes causes of defeat, plans the siege, details marching orders, issues calls for recruits, cheers the discouraged, inspires the ambitious, and brings the uttermost parts of the temperance world to your doors.

"WHAT GOD HATH CLEANSED."

In a recent issue of a religious magazine we read a sentence from which we quote as follows:

"When God has sanctified a soul, it no longer cares for beauty except as associated with Himself. It sees new beauty in Nature, but none in Art. I have heard many a devotee of Beethoven, Mendelssohn and Wagner say they would rather hear a hymn, if it were set to the tune of Yankee Doodle, than the most perfect secular music. Why? Because they now hear as the angels hear around the throne. Do you think they listen just to please the ear? No, it is for the praise of God that they make their music, and it is for His name that they listen."

We have not given the exact words, but, from memory, the substance only of this article, filled with deep spiritual aspirations from which we, nevertheless, turned away with a heartache, and with the memory of the words spoken to Peter long ago ringing in our ears, "What God hath cleansed that call not thou common."

The root of the whole matter depends upon one's conception of what "God's praise" is, and in what it consists. The writer of the article from which we have quoted assumes that that only is praise which voices itself in words. She can hear no melody in music where she does not hear God's name. She can see no beauty in art because the name of God is not blazoned there.

But she concedes beauty in nature, and says that the truly sanctified soul sees beauty there as never before. This seems to us strangely illogical. God is not seen or heard in nature, with the outward eye and ear. His name is not writ across the mountain's brow, nor folded in the heart of the lily's cup. No leaf that waves in the breeze, no flower that is kissed by the sunshine, bears upon it the outward name of God.

His praises are not heard in nature. The mountain torrent does not shout hallelujah. The waves do not break upon the shore in any articulate words of thanksgiving. No bird carols His praise in words which our ears can comprehend. It is only the eye and the ear of the soul which see and hear God in nature.

Why should not the eye of the soul see Him in art, and the ear of the soul hear Him in music? Nature is God's handiwork, you say, and art and music man's. But whose handiwork is man? Whence came his power to create works of art which thrill one to divinest ecstasy? Whence came his power to make a concord of sweet sounds upon which the soul can float as on a sea of heaven's own bliss? The old heathen poet who declared, "for we are also His offspring," knew. Paul, who quoted His words, knew. Man is the child of God, and as such is the highest unfoldment of God's power. Shall we trace God's work in nature; shall we say that the brooks sing His praises, and the ocean swells the pæan, and then shall we say that that alone which has conscious volition is not praising God when it works out its highest possibility?

The eye which cannot see God in the paintings of a Raphael, or the sculpture of a Michael Angelo; the ear which cannot hear His praises in the wonderful symphonies of a Beethoven or the magic creations of the spirit-touched soul of a Wagner are certainly lacking in the highest spiritual development.

Praise to God is something more than vocal. Its highest expression is not in hallelujahs. It reaches its fullest note in lines set to the harmony of peace and good-will. There is room in the reach of its glorious octaves for the child's glad laugh, for the organ's swell, for the beautiful in nature and art; for the higher beautiful which finds expression in the loves, the joys, the patiences, the long-sufferings, the simple, natural pleasures of the simple, natural, everyday, human life.

THAT TELEGRAPH ALBUM.

We think our women everywhere will desire to learn more particulars of the album presented to Miss Willard by the National W. C. T. U. at the New York reception, June 21. Each state president for herself and her constituency telegraphed in appropriate words a "welcome home," and the many Bible references indicated well the place the blessed book holds in their hearts. These telegrams were sent to Headquarters, and a book was prepared with padded covers, of a delicate shade of drab chamois skin, the cover page bearing the inscription, "To Frances E. Willard, President World's and National W. C. T. U." Upon the lower right-hand corner is a large monogram seal in wax and the initials "F. E. W.," which hold the elegant bow of white moire ribbon. The first inside page bears the dedication to our returned leader in handsomely illuminated letters. The size of the book permitted the entrance of each telegram, which was carefully pasted upon the cardboard leaf just as it came from the hands of the operator. Upon the clear white margin above the messages were printed the names of the states in alphabetical order, accompanied by a small symbolic or conventional decoration. The album was presented by Mrs. Woodbridge in a few words as follows: "Welcome, beloved chieftain. I come to you not as an individual, though, were it so, it would be with a heart of love overflowing with joy and gratitude; but it is my honor and privilege to bear to you the loving welcome of the great white-ribbon host of the United States. Perhaps in no two years of history has there been more turning and overturning of conditions in the temperance field than since you bade us farewell. Christ has been in our midst and by the principle He has planted in our hearts, and the spirit He has given, He has shown us more clearly the sin and wretchedness, the poverty and woe of our nation. We have heard a piteous cry in the land, a cry for bread, bread for the hungry masses. We have seen the unemployed wandering up and down, hardly knowing whither, and have looked upon famishing women with outstretched arms holding their starving little ones before the public gaze as they repeated the cry of bread for their children. By such conditions, we are, unwittingly in many cases, brought to a socialism based on a late definition of its originating principle—'a desire to ameliorate the condition of the less favored classes and to overcome by association the deprivations to which individuals, especially those without rank or culture or capital, are exposed.' We are more and more assured that this can never be done, until the liquor traffic of the United States is forever banished. You return, therefore, to find us not as you left us, save in our love and loyalty to yourself. We are a vast army waiting for the command to go forward—and in your presence is our assurance that it will soon be heard. In this spirit the women have bade me greet you in the name of our Sovereign Commander. From each state have flashed across the wires burning words of welcome, by which the hearts of more than ten thousand times ten thousand women meet your own. The memento I present is but leather and paint and ribbon, but within its covers are yearnings for you and through you for suffering humanity and the building of the Kingdom of our Lord. These women through all the months of your weakness and absence have lifted you in arms of faith to the divine Healer, crying unto the Spirit to present their petitions with groanings that cannot be uttered by them for your restoration to health; for your return to the faithful host and for your continued leadership. While we are here gathered, they are singing their pæans of praise, having thanked God and taken courage for the onward march. Accept then, I pray you, this telegraph album, an expression of thanksgiving for answered prayer, which, unable to utter ourselves, the Lord has graciously written for us through His lightning flash." Miss Willard was delighted with the gift, saying it was more unique than any she had ever received, and the telegrams seemed to her the very touch of the women she loved.

THE time has passed when women are the sole champions of their cause. It is immensely gratifying when such papers as the Chicago Inter Ocean print a paragraph of this kind: "What pleases us is the true womanhood of Kentucky. It is of this that we like to speak. It is an indication of what may follow wherever women take part in politics. It is an answer to the slander that woman is weak. It is an answer to the plea that womanly interest in politics is degrading to women. It is proof in politics, as in domestic life, that the influence of woman is a force making for righteousness." By the way, we notice that nearly all the great dailies which employ women on the reportorial staff are favorable to their enfranchisement. When all men once learn by observation, as has the press, that women can be womnaly while they share the privileges of citizenship, the greatest obstacle to full franchise will have been removed. Good men will then see that they need woman's vote as well as woman's influence to counteract the tide of iniquity.

Miss Ingelow is a quiet little lady, weighing less than one hundred pounds and about sixty years of age. She is wholly unassuming, and when the autograph album was passed during a recent lunch party, said in the most humble-minded way: "I suppose it is my business to write a line or two before my name."

In response to a question as to how she became an astronomer, Mrs. Huggins, of England, said that at ten years of age she saved up her pocket money to buy a dark lantern and a little book on astronomy; with these she went out alone under the open sky, and from that day on has been a devoted student of the celestial orbs. She said that sometimes those who give themselves wholly to such studies think, at least she has done so, that "it puts no bread in the mouths of the hungry" and therefore fear lest they are not helping humanity as they might, but that on deeper reflection the sacredness of their work could not fail to be perceived, for they gave to humanity a wider horizon, a deeper sky, and by thinking God's thoughts after Him, helped to increase the other worldliness which is so essential to true Christian character.

A woman is now among the scientists in the famous observatory at Greenwich; the conviction that the other worlds must be inhabited grows upon astronomers and women are going more and more into the study of this greatest of the sciences, especially since photography has become its handmaid. It was interesting to learn that a noted mathematician has recently remarked that women would, he thought, excel in mathematics, especially in the higher ranges of that study, when they had been sufficiently developed mentally, for women had imagination, and without that faculty no one could greatly excel in the higher mathematics.

One of my friends has inscribed the following motto above the fire-place in her library:

"When ye sitte by mye fyre
To kepe yersel warme,
Take hede that your tongue
Do your neighbour noe harme."

I think this would bear copying on an extensive scale.

"In regard to the 'long felt want' that On Duty speaks of it seems to me," writes Mrs. Ella V. Carter, of Montana, "just as awkward for a woman to subscribe her name 'Miss' or 'Mrs.' So-and-So, as for a man to begin his signature 'Mr.' The most sensible thing I have ever read on the subject was a suggestion in some newspaper that every woman receive the title 'Mrs.' According to present usage the title 'Miss' applies equally well to a little girl of six, or to an unmarried woman of sixty, while the 'Master' applied to boys becomes 'Mr.' when the boys reach manhood, whether married or single. There may be a legal objection to carrying out the above suggestion, but if there is, it is to be hoped that when women shall have a voice in making the laws, they will consider the matter worthy of legislation and fix upon some title that may be applied to every woman grown, whether she has 'committed matrimony' or not."

Mrs. Mary Case Lord, editor of the Southern California White Ribbon (a charming little paper) writes: "Dr. Rachel Reid, Pasadena, Cal., has long held that as a boy is Master and a man Mr., so girls should be Miss and women Mrs., irrespective of whether they are married or single. Is not this the best solution of the question asked by On Duty? Until this custom prevails, if a woman signs herself A. B. Cee, address her envelope in this way. It is awkward to put Mrs. before one's name, and women are not going to do it."

A new magazine, which looks so interesting that I would like to read every word of it, lies on my desk. The title is Zenské Listy, and the only English words I can find in the paper are: "The first Bohemian newspaper in America devoted to the interests of Bohemian women. Published semi-monthly by Mme. Humpal-Zeman, 247 Polk St., Chicago, Ill." While we cannot fathom its mysteries, we are assured by the editor, Mme. Zeman, who is, by the way, one of the brightest women On Duty has ever seen, that the contents are such as white-ribboners would sanction. The editor herself is a total abstainer and while she does not think best to build her paper on that basis at first, she will introduce temperance principles at every opportune occasion. Seldom is anything advertised in this column, but the suggestion that this is an invaluable paper to present to Bohemian women, will be permissible, I am sure.

ON DUTY.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

WESTERN WASHINGTON.

IN STATE CONVENTION.

That our state work is growing is proved by the increased attendance at the state convention in the pretty little city of Chehalis.

The M. E. church was decorated with growing plants and banners, after the manner of women's conventions. Not the least enjoyable feature of the occasion were the greetings on board the trains as we met familiar faces, and clasped hands for the first time with new ones wearing our emblematic bow of white, interspersed with yellow more frequently than heretofore. We arrived about one p. m. and business meetings filled the afternoon.

At the evening session many warm words of welcome greeted us. Mr. David Stewart, mayor of Chehalis, bade us welcome in a few well-chosen words. Rev. E. M. Bliss, of the Baptist church, gave us a blissful reception. He said that some conventions might come that he could not welcome, not knowing what influence might be brought or left behind, but he could welcome this convention knowing its influence would be for good. Mrs. V. E. Harmon voiced the welcome of our entertainers. The response was by Mrs. M. L. T. Hidden.

Short addresses were then given by county and district presidents, consisting mostly of reports of work done in their respective fields. State superintendent of music, Mrs. Rockwell, being present, the program was interspersed with enlivening hymns. Thus ended the first evening.

The three and a half days were crowded full of reports of work done, committee meetings, etc., very important to the local workers, but probably would not interest the distant reader.

Mrs. Unruh, of Oregon, who has spent much of the year in our state doing noble deeds, was present. We have learned to love her as one of our own. Rev. E. B. Sutton, secretary of the Prohibition State Alliance, was introduced to the convention Wednesday morning. He is well known to us as a stanch friend and brother. A rising vote of thanks was given railroad Conductor Dustin for kindness in telegraphing for permission to back his train to a station off his route to take on delegates, which permission was granted.

The local Prohibition club invited the convention to a banquet on Friday. Needless to say the invitation was gratefully accepted. The local union and their friends provided meals for all delegates and visitors at a public hall free of charge. They deserve great credit for the manner in which they performed their arduous duties.

Wednesday evening Narcissa White Kinney was expected but failed to arrive. Her place was supplied by the Rev. Clark Davis, of Seattle, whom all love to hear. He arrived at Centralia, five miles distant, just about an hour before he was to appear before the audience, and was informed that his train did not go any farther. Said he, "My ticket says, 'no lay over allowed,' so with your permission, Mr. Conductor, I'll walk," which he did, and, minus his supper, gave us a remarkably fine lecture. Each evening except the first the choirs of the city furnished good music.

Thursday afternoon the convention was invited to visit the state reform school which is located one and one-half miles from the city, on a beautiful site of sixty acres, costing six thousand dollars. There are seven handsome buildings, costing thirty-five thousand dollars. The school was organized June 10, 1891. There are in the school one hundred and twenty-six boys and twenty-five girls, in ages ranging from eight to eighteen years.

Three teachers and three industrial instructors are employed, besides a large corps of assistants. The branches taught are reading, writing, arithmetic, geography, history, grammar and physiology. Industries taught are shoemaking, tailoring, farming, gardening, carpentering, painting, engraving, laundrying, cooking, baking, dressmaking, knitting and housework.

The superintendent of flower missions provided a large number of bouquets with Scripture texts attached with white ribbon, which were given out as far as they would go to the pupils, beginning with the youngest. They seemed to be greatly appreciated and we only regretted not having enough for all. Mrs. Unruh and others addressed the pupils, gave them some music, after which one of the pupils, a little fellow, sang, all the school joining in the chorus. The superintendent played a march on the organ, and in perfect time to the music the boys marched out and down to the playground, where they cheered us heartily as we rode away.

We felt glad of this opportunity of knowing how these boys and girls had been snatched as brands from the burning and placed in such good hands to be trained for purity of character and usefulness. How much our common enemy, the liquor traffic, is to blame for the necessity of such a school we cannot compute, but it is doubtless the direct or indirect cause of filling those halls with children on whom the "sins of the parents have been visited to the third and fourth generation." Mr. Thomas P. Westendorf, the superintendent of the school, is the right man for the place. Young, quick, active, and ever on the alert for the good of those entrusted to his charge is the mental verdict after seeing him and the school.

In the evening there was a gold medal contest by four young ladies and two young men, all from Olympia, conducted by Miss Emma L. Page, also of Olympia. It must have puzzled the judges to decide which deserved the medal where all did so well. They reflected great credit on their teacher, both expression and gesture being uncommonly good. The following morning the contestants went to the reform school and recited their selections for the benefit of the pupils there.

The public schools of Chehalis were invited to visit the convention, which invitation they accepted. The convention marched out in a body as far as the postoffice to receive them. The ladies parted in two single columns, letting the school children coming from the opposite way, headed by the high school board, pass between the columns, falling in in the rear when the schools had passed. All marched to the church, where Mrs. L. A. Irons addressed them on mercy. Music by the band, also by ladies of the convention, closed a happy hour with the children.

I would like to tell of some of the good things in the reports read, but fear I have already taken more space than I should. The report of the White Shield Home and some of the county reports I will soon send in another letter.

The election of officers resulted as follows: President, Mrs. Dr. Fifield, of Tacoma; vice-president, Mrs. Anna E. Saunders, Tacoma; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Melinda A. Shaffer, Tacoma; recording secretary, Mrs. Ellen K. Simison, Seattle; treasurer, Mrs. Homer Hill, Seattle; Secretary Young Woman's Branch, Mrs. Mattie Graves, Centralia; organizer, Mrs. Dr. Fifield; delegates to National Convention, Mrs. C. E. Sulliger and Mrs. J. B. Croake. Superintendents were elected for the departments of work.

The convention adjourned to meet at Olympia one year hence, where we hope to storm the capitol and capture it for the W. C. T. U.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

OVER THE STATE.

The friends throughout the state are coming to the aid of their state reporter nobly, and I am thus enabled to give quite an extended account of the work being done.

The Salem union seems in a very flourishing condition; it has received several new members the past year and has entertained the county convention, at which time Mrs. J. R. Nichols spoke to them.

A kind sister in Hampton Falls sends us the following: "Our union numbers less than twenty members, but we are firm in the faith as our granite hills. Arbor Day evening was observed by a social, and also an informal meeting at the town hall; the L. T. L. were invited, and their parents. Sixty persons were present. Appropriate exercises in keeping with the day were enjoyed by all. An essay was read by the president, Mrs. B. F. Weare, entitled "Am I My Brother's Keeper?" the thought was, we are our "brother's keepers," and are more responsible for their downfall or their salvation than we are aware. Coffee and cake were served at the close.

"Three parlor meetings have been held at the homes of members, and two silver medal contests. Miss Lillian Sanborn and Master Herbert Bishop received the prizes; the other contestants were presented with books. Our L. T. L. have recently made and given to Mercy Home a very pretty patchwork quilt and are now working on another."

Rev. Mr. Mitchell, the Unitarian minister at Wilton delivered a temperance lecture in the town hall at Littleton, Mass. Scientific men have proved the statements which he made to be true. No wonder the brain becomes dull and the step unsteady. No wonder that in due course of time the once proud and happy husband and father becomes a terror in the house. No wonder the once respected citizen lies asleep in the gutter at the roadside. Such lectures bring us face to face with the truth and will surely carry much good influence with them.

An L. T. L. has been formed at Loudon with twenty members.

Greenville union holds its regular meetings; has given a coffee party and a fair, and hopes soon to report a concert.

Colebrook has had three medal contests and has sent books and papers to the lumber camp. They have a flourishing L. T. L.

Candia has a novel idea in the shape of a scrapbook to be kept at the railway station. They have recently sent ten dollars to the Mercy Home.

Much good might be done by distributing good juvenile temperance papers among the young. Marlow W. C. T. U. has been following out this idea with grand results. They also keep a box in the postoffice filled with reading matter.

Concord union has sent a quantity of comfort bags to the lumber camps.

Meredith sent two dollars to be used at the camps.

Lancaster union raises two hundred dollars each year to support a free reading room. They have held six medal contests during the past year. The union is alive and active, doing a good work in many departments.

A very spirited meeting of Rockingham county was held at South New Market, at which ten unions were represented. Remarks were made by Revs. Smiley and Tilts; by Miss C. R. Wendall, state president, and Mrs. Perkins, Strafford county president. Miss Burrell defined the significance of the white ribbon, Christian conversation, personal purity, helpfulness, loyalty.

The discussion upon the need of temperance teaching in our schools was opened by Miss H. E. Sanborn, followed by Miss C. R. Wendall. She also called their attention to the National banner upon the wall, given in keeping for this year to New Hampshire for having increased the largest per cent in membership during the past year of any state in New England. She urged every one to still increase the membership so that the banner could be retained another year. There were remarks upon the life and character of Neal Dow by several speakers; "In Memoriam" of Mrs. C. E. Albee, who died in Claremont, was read, and many added their testimony to her useful life. The question-box had questions on hygiene and the methods of scientific temperance instruction in our schools, which caused much discussion.

Peterboro W. C. T. U. has spent about five dollars for free reading. It has aided some worthy poor in their midst. It sent two dollars to the lumber camp and one dollar and fifty cents to the county farm to aid in providing Christmas gifts for the inmates. They have had two union temperance services in the churches. Each member pledged themselves to earn one dollar and report at some future time how it was earned. It has given five dollars to the Mercy Home.

Keene union has not forgotten the lumber camp, having forwarded five dollars and reading.

At a quarterly convention in Farmington it was voted to appropriate three dollars yearly for work among the lumber men. Rev. J. H. Harrington made some very helpful remarks. Mrs. Barney, of Providence, superintendent of prison work, was present, and lectured on "Facts and Fancies," a very thrilling and soul-stirring lecture. Every heart was filled with a desire to be helpful to others and to live a higher and better life.

In a recent number of our Granite State Outlook, the Claremont W. C. T. U. has a set of resolutions upon the death of their old and valued co-worker, Mrs. C. E. Albee.

The following unions have contributed needed and valuable articles to the Mercy Home at Manchester: Sandwich Center, Franklin, South Candia, Laconia, Exeter, Manchester, Dover, Franklin. Let none of us forget that this is our state home for wandering girls.

The death of Mrs. Amos Paul, of the South New Market W. C. T. U., sends a shadow over the community and robs the sisters of a true and valued helper.

After a three days' sojourn of the Clarions at Littleton, ten new members were added to the local W. C. T. U.

East Haverhill also speaks in high terms of the Clarions and urges upon all the sisters to secure their services.

These unions have sent their Neal Dow celebration reports: Derry, East Haverhill, Franklin, Littleton, Hopkinton, Penacook, Salem and South New Market.

The Henniker union has met with a sad loss in the death of Mrs. Frank Huntington.

The Coos county convention met at Lancaster, and was conducted by the president, Mrs. W. A. Loyne. Jefferson was able to report no place in town where liquor was sold. Mrs. Sawyer, of Grafton county, kindly gave an account of the temperance instruction in their schools at Littleton. Words of welcome were given by Mrs. S. W. Brown. Mrs. John Wark read a paper from the pen of Mrs. E. K. Jewett, of Hollis. The Loyal Temperance Legion of Whitefield was reported by a young member, Ernest Colby. Mrs. Fred Spaulding prepared a paper giving an account of her six months' work as president of the L. T. L.; there were also very interesting papers upon the work at the county farm, the Mercy Home, the lumber camps.

A loving tribute was paid to the memory of Hon. Horace T. Holton and our white ribbon sister, Mrs. C. E. Albee. At the Demorest contest in the evening Irving Fellows took the prize.

Notes from Mrs. Loyne's letters cannot fail to be of interest not only to every one in our state, but all over the country; therefore we quote from that attractive little paper that is published by her at Jefferson, N. H. Hers is a wide-spread interest receiving remembrances from all over the New England states.

Mr. S. B. Davis, from New York, a banker, sends us a check for forty dollars for the benefit of the department.

Two new libraries have been donated, one from Miss C. R. Wendall, state president, in memory of her mother. The friends of Mrs. Hatch, matron of the Mercy Home at Manchester, have given a case and one hundred volumes in her name to the camp. Holyoke, Mass., and several other towns have given books the past month. A library case costs $2.50. Thirty volumes will fill the case, beside the magazines and other reading we put in. There is a place underneath for salve and bandages. Surely this is a pleasant thing to do in memory of some friend either living or gone.

Boxes and packages are carried by the American express free of charge to the Jefferson headquarters. The King's Daughters are lending a good, strong hand to this work both in this state and Massachusetts.

A summary of the missionary's work in the past month cannot fail to interest: "I have visited twenty mill boarding houses and camps this month; held thirteen religious services; traveled five hundred and fifty miles, twenty of them on foot; put in two library cases; distributed sixty comfort bags, thirty-seven large bundles of reading matter, many Bibles, Testaments, tracts, both in French and English."

Alton, N. H., the smallest W. C. T. U. in the state, sent two dollars to help on the good work. Numerous letters from the camps show how well the reading, etc., is appreciated.

Hillsborough county convention met in Nashua. Every W. C. T. U. in the county was represented. Mrs. E. K. Jewell led the meeting. The discussion, "The Power of Persuasion," was opened by Mrs. M. L. Goodale, with an excellent paper. "Training the children for temperance" was Mrs. Addie N. Field's subject. Mrs. Field is a state superintendent of the children's work, a person well qualified to take the position.

That important question, "What can the young women do?" was opened by Miss Ella Abbott with a fine paper. Other ladies spoke and the day came to a grand close by the crowd who listened to G. J. Burns' eloquent lecture.

NEWS OF THE WORK.

Our schools of methods were closed by the superintendent, Mrs. E. L. Calkins (who is also our state vice-president), on June 8 after two months of ceaseless exertion on her part, conducting the schools during the day and lecturing in the evenings.

Mrs. Calkins has few equals as a temperance lecturer, and upon the subject of equal suffrage she awakens great interest. Mrs. Cammack, another state officer, also delights her constituents. The great array of statistics at her command are wound through her discourses with telling effect. She arouses an eagerness to remove the "Black Cap" from Indiana. Miss Ayers' parliamentary drills are instructive and helpful. The schools are well attended, although they come in the busiest season for our housekeepers. The last school, at Kendallville, was the most enthusiastic of all; which speaks well for our workers.

In quiet conversation with our white-ribboners, your reporter learns of deeds which required individual bravery, wisdom and quick decision, that should some day be recorded among our white ribbon reminiscences. Though wise and brave in emergency, many of our women remain silent in our public meetings, and thus we are deprived of the inspiration which would be given us by the recital of these heroic acts.

THE Y'S.

Under the management of Miss Dickson and Miss Hay, six Y conferences were held in June, each followed by either a temperance or equal suffrage medal contest. The conferences not only instruct the Y's but others wander in, occasionally professional men, to hear what these young people are talking about. They are often converted to our faith, as in the case of a physician in Mitchell, who publicly announced that he will cease to use alcohol in his professional practice.

On the 9th of June the Indianapolis Y had a flower mission service in the woman's prison and reformatory. One Y has taken up the study of civil government. The Mitchell Y reports a gypsy social, which was a financial success. The Y's are increasing their membership and their workers are as faithful and as earnest as our W's.

CONVENTIONS.

Several counties report the best conventions ever held.

Wells county reports three unions recently organized and an increase of membership of twenty-five, and Vanderburgh reports one new union of eight members, and an increase of membership in other unions, through the efforts of Mrs. Ellen Denny, our state evangelist, who has for many weeks been engaged in effective work in the southern part of our state.

The Switchmen's National convention was in session in Evansville while she was in this city. She, with the superintendent of work among railroad employés, went before their convention and invited them to attend the mass-meeting on the following Sabbath, at which time Mrs. Denny would deliver an address. They accepted the invitation and between two and three hundred attended in a body.

Four of our churches adjourned their meetings to attend this mass-meeting and two of our prominent ministers assisted in the services; something your reporter is not cognizant of having occurred before in our work in this city.

The subject of Mrs. Denny's lecture was "Our country, and its relation to the nations of the earth." She made a profound impression upon her audience. After the lecture the switchmen came forward to grasp her hand and thank her for her lecture, some of them pledging themselves to total abstinence and many asking for the R. R. T. A. buttons which the superintendent of railroad work gladly supplied. The Grand Master and others expressed a deep appreciation of the influence of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union upon their union, which influence not only affects them morally but financially.

They aver that the deaths among their order costs each man thirty-six dollars a year, which would be twice as much if it were not for the influence of our temperance union. Our dear Jennie Smith's name was always greeted with applause. A brief, beautiful sketch of her life was given by Mrs. Denny, and listened to appreciatively by them. Resolutions of thanks and appreciation of Mrs. Denny's lecture were passed by them.

HADLEY HOME.

I must not close without a few words about this institution, the conception of which originated in the heart of Mr. and Mrs. Hadley, who, though childless, realized the struggle of helpless girls to maintain an honest living. They donated a farm to the W. C. T. U. of Indiana, with the understanding that a school for girls shall be established, wherein they can be taught such industries as cooking, housekeeping, laundry, sewing, cutting, fitting, the cultivation of fruits and flowers, the care of a dairy and also be given a common school education. This home is now completed, at a cost of between $15,000 and $16,000, and will accommodate fifty girls.

The W. C. T. U. hopes soon to dedicate it free from debt, which only necessitates raising about $1,800. Our women have had a herculean task in collecting this money during these times of financial depression, but the perseverance of Mrs. A. V. Mendenhall and her co-laborers has met its reward.

MORE REPORTS WANTED.

Perhaps because of the scorching weather, and the unpleasant prospect of drouth and poor crops in addition to the hard times we have already passed through, our unions have felt too discouraged to report the good works they must have been doing to help on the suffering hundreds around them, for only two reports, too late for my last letter, are before me.

One from Johnson City gives a graphic description of an interesting mothers' meeting. At this meeting twenty-seven were present, mothers and grandmothers all alike interested in the great subject under consideration. Mrs. Simpson, the efficient district president, was with them, and did much to add to the interest of the occasion. She read an instructive paper on "What of the Night?" Several articles were read from THE UNION SIGNAL, which had been selected with special care by their beloved president. Miss Grace Hart, a little girl of nine years, daughter of their secretary, recited an appropriate piece. The music was specially prepared. This union meets twice monthly, and holds monthly mothers' meetings. They use the Responsive and Bible Readings, published by the W. T. P. A.

From Deer Lodge comes a delightful report of the district convention held at that place. The program was well arranged and full of interest from beginning to end, and well displayed the earnest zeal and efficiency of the district president, Mrs. T. H. Thayer, and her able coadjutors. A report from an outsider, a gentleman, in the Harriman Advance, shows that others besides the W. C. T. U. women thought the convention a decided success. Addresses of welcome were delivered by Revs. Lusty and Williams and Mrs. Anna Williams, which were responded to by Mrs. Hoyt, of Harriman. Able papers were read on franchise, social purity, and other subjects. "The president's address was full of wise words, coming from the heart of a good woman." I quote from the report of the gentleman above referred to: "The convention was conducted on strict parliamentary rules. No set of men could have done better. . . If you could have heard the talk and prayers of that earnest, consecrated Christian woman, Mrs. S. A. Chace, of Dayton, your hearts could not have helped being touched. . . I wish the address on 'Social Purity,' delivered by Dr. C. G. Kellar, could be printed and placed in the hands of every voter in the land, and that every voter would be guided by it. . . I have hitherto been a hidebound party man, but as a Christian I cannot and will not cast a vote hereafter for any party or man who favors the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors, for I am now fully enlisted in this cause, and I am a white ribbon man."

Another successful convention was recently held under the auspices of Mrs. Martha M. Allen, a grand woman and a faithful white-ribboner, at Obion, I think, in West Tennessee, of which I have had no direct report. Which goes to show that our women are at work, though they do neglect to send their faithful scribbler a report of what they are doing for THE UNION SIGNAL. "Making bricks without straw" is uphill work, dearly beloved. Do send in reports of the good work you are doing that all the world may know and be uplifted thereby.

DELAWARE COUNTY CONVENTION.

The Delaware county union held its semi-annual convention in Warrensburg. Our state president, Mrs. Monroe, who was in attendance, has written the following delightful description of the headquarters of the Warrensburg union of which they are the owners, and where the convention was held:

"The headquarters are a mile from the town. Some time ago the Warrensburg union bought an old church which had not been used for fifteen years. The roof was gone and little but the shell remained. The repairs cost $140. The building is frame and painted white. The aisles are covered with nice matting, as is also the platform, and the latter had also several very handsome rugs. The pews are painted a lovely shade of blue with brown trimmings. They have a large, handsome stove, hanging lamps, table and very comfortable chairs. They intend soon to buy an organ. The selection of the front doors was assigned to one lady and she had a transom prepared of four panes of glass on which are painted beautifully the letters W. C. T. U., so that it is a continual object lesson to the passer-by.

"Lunch and tea were served by young men and maidens. After lunch two young girls came with waiters filled with corsage bouquets, so that each one was decked with flowers for the afternoon meeting. But the crowning part was that our country's flag was floating over us. The pole was fastened to the front fence, and I shall never forget my sensations which cannot be described as we drove up the hill and our eyes rested on that flag.

"In most of our conventions the flag is used extensively for decoration, but not even the National has had it floating from the outside. The meetings were well attended all day, and at night the church was so full they might have had an overflow meeting if another church had been convenient. Men stood on the doorsteps and at the windows, giving almost breathless attention. Rev. Mr. Crist and wife, the Presbyterian minister from Ostrander, were in attendance throughout, and Mrs. Crist read one of the finest papers it has ever been my privilege to hear in such a meeting. The women of Delaware county are very efficient in all their work."

Y. W. C. T. U.

The Y's of Ohio and consequently the whole W. C. T. U. of our state have sustained a great loss in the death of Miss Lettie Smith, president of Bedford Y's, through whose earnest work that union trebled its membership, opened fine headquarters and a public library. She was thoroughly devoted to Y work and was a talented, capable young woman. We are glad to make public recognition of her faithful work. She has gone to her reward.

Miss Ensign, our state Y secretary, has recently made a pleasant trip in the East. She visited our own Y's at Steubenville, Martin's Ferry and Bridgeport on her way to Pittsburgh, Pa., to attend a Y conference which was a very enjoyable and profitable occasion. From there she went to Baltimore, Md., where the Y's of the state had gathered for their annual conference, and addressed this meeting to its pleasure and help. She next visited several places on the eastern shore of that state, after which she went to Virginia where she filled several appointments. Next she visited Washington, D. C., speaking for the Y's in the Garfield Memorial church. On her return she organized new Y unions at Sandusky, Newton Falls and Garrettsville. Just before this eastern trip she organized Y unions at Celina and West Alexandria, so that we feel that home work is not at all neglected although our secretary has lent a hand to the workers of other states. Miss Ensign also attended the West Virginia state convention, June 6 and 7, and filled a number of engagements in that state.

Marietta Y's have completed a six months' session of a sewing school of eighty pupils. They made one hundred and ten garments which were given the children upon completion. Fifty-two of the class have signed the pledge.

MRS. NICHOLS IN OHIO.

Mrs. Josephine R. Nichols, of Indiana, so well known throughout the National union as an eloquent lecturer as well as for her very efficient services in National and World's expositions, has been filling a series of twenty-one engagements in Ohio, to the delight and profit of the unions visited. The highest commendations and praise have followed her from all points, and many requests for return visits as early as arrangements could be made.

are a success every way. They have twenty-four members in good standing. That must mean that they pay their dues, wear the white ribbon and to their prayers add works of faith.

Marion union has ten members and meets semi-monthly, using the Responsive Readings. They take eight UNION SIGNALS, seven Minnesota White Ribboners, six Young Crusaders and two Young Women, setting a most excellent example in respect to subscriptions, and receiving their reward, of course, in the way of intelligent workers. They supply one depot with our state and National official papers and a temperance scrap-book; another depot is supplied with temperance scrap-books and donated papers. They used the temperance Sunday-school lesson leaflets last quarter, putting a Young Crusader in each family, and giving each person present a Busy Day leaflet. They have also had two public meetings full of interest and helpfulness.

North Mankato union, organized last January, with seven members, has now sixteen active and two honorary members. Among their first work was the decision to take the state paper for the entire membership. The members all wear the white ribbon, a fine of one cent being imposed upon any member found in any public place without the knot of ribbon, which fine goes to the Temple fund. They have superintendents of seven departments, have held two teas, two medal contests, and when last heard from were about to organize an L. T. L.

Amboy union circulated a petition to have the question of license or no-license brought before the people. On election day there was a victory, license being rejected by a majority of one. Supposing one or two voters in that town had said, "I believe in no-license, but you can't carry it, and I'll vote for something practical." But though the women there say, "The Lord gave the victory," they had worked as if it depended upon themselves, distributing leaflets, supplying wall pockets, holding a medal contest, and other public meetings, and conducting a column in the local paper. Both Methodist and Presbyterian pastors offered their churches for public meetings. The banner of the union has been placed in the Presbyterian church for three months, after which it will go to the Methodist for the same length of time, and so on.

Marshall union is not large, but is in healthy working condition, and finds plenty to do. On the last election day they went in a body and worked all day for no-license, but it failed to carry. The saloon element rules and the women are told "nothing can be done about it." But they are trying to educate public sentiment—and the children; have an L. T. L. of about sixty members. During the summer months the Junior Endeavor societies will devote every third Sabbath to temperance. Not long since a union service of the churches was conducted, with papers and an especial musical program. The Presbyterian and Methodist ministers are strong Prohibitionists, and talented men.

Edgerton union is rejoicing in the return of their president, Mrs. L. T. Wilson, who spent the winter in Canada, and "temperance sentiment is surely increasing in our town," another cause for rejoicing. The eighth medal contest was recently held in the Congregational church, which was well filled by an interested audience. Master Ernest Burdette was awarded the medal, which was presented by Mrs. M. A. Crawford, district president. This union entertained the county convention of Pipestone county not long since. Mrs. Crawford was with them and presided. Among other good things on the program were a paper and discussion on tobacco, and a paper on press work. The Temple was brought before the attention of the audience, also our state paper. Mrs. Wilson, of Edgerton, was elected county president.

Ellsworth union is at work practically. While Alex. Cooper, the temperance evangelist, was in the towns near them, the Ellsworth union made several unsuccessful attempts to secure him. Failing in this, they induced six of his many converts in Luverne to come and speak for them. When the day of the meeting arrived, rain and mud prevailed; but the speakers made the trip of twenty miles by team. After listening to short talks from each of the six, interspersed with songs, the pledge was carried through the audience, and eighty-four names secured. A union temperance club was immediately organized and officers chosen, and the W. C. T. U. presented them with badges of blue and white ribbon which are proudly worn. The club, which now numbers one hundred and twenty, was lately entertained by the union. Songs and games were followed by coffee and cake, and a pleasant evening enjoyed.

Wood Lake union entertained the county convention of Yellow Medicine county at its recent session. Papers were read on, "Tobacco Habit," "Mission Work" and "Pressing Needs of our Cause," which brought out warm discussions. Mrs. Lutz lectured on one evening of the convention on "Equal Rights." She is an enthusiastic speaker, and during the convention organized a county association of equal rights, with thirty-three members, seven of them gentlemen. Later, Mrs. Julia B. Nelson, the suffrage state superintendent and president of the state Equal Rights association, lectured in Granite Falls, in the same county, and as my informant writes, "You know that means we had a rousing time on that subject." The union at Granite Falls had a medal contest some time ago, which was the best attended of any temperance entertainment ever given in that town. Medal contests are a success. Chippewa county has held nineteen silver and two gold medal contests. In one country place in that county is a Swedish Baptist church with a seating capacity of two hundred and fifty. Mrs. Ruth M. Barnes, the county president, held a gold medal contest there, "and such a crowd! Early the seats were taken, and all the standing room occupied even outside of the windows, and many went away unable to get a glimpse. A number drove ten miles to attend."

Richland union has ten members, all living on farms and scattered over three or four miles, yet they meet regularly at the different homes of the members and contribute their help in every way. Have sent some money to the state paper, the president's salary and the Temperance Hospital. But they think their best work is in the L. T. L., of which there are forty members, all very much interested. The superintendent, Miss Georgia Beardsley, taught school during the winter, but met the children once in two weeks.

Willmar union keeps the rack at the depot filled with temperance literature. The flower mission of the union did a most graceful thing in presenting the graduates of the high school with a basket of flowers. Mrs. Nelson was in their town lately and lectured on suffrage in the evening, and the union gave a reception to her in the afternoon.

The union at Holding's Ford numbers fifteen regular and three honorary members; they hold weekly meetings and in connection with them do any work they find; they have held four medal contests. They are piecing a quilt at five cents a name, which they recommend as a success. We hope they will tell us what they do with the quilt when it is finished.

Morris union lately held a silver medal contest. Miss Dottie Patterson won the medal, her recitation being "A Plea for the Fatherland."

Wadena union circulated the Polyglot Petition, obtaining over one hundred names. Their superintendents are workers, the one in charge of the press supplying items to the local paper weekly; the superintendent of narcotics distributing literature, and the work among lumbermen has not been neglected.

Argyle, twenty-two members, has several superintendents and a standing mercy committee which works among the needy ones in the vicinity. They have voted to take the White-Ribboner for every member. Space is given once in two weeks in the local paper. A saloon was opened not long ago, and the owner of the building (who is not the proprietor of the saloon) raised the flag in honor of the occasion! The W. C. T. U. protested and sent the protest to the White-Ribboner, at the same time ordering one hundred copies of the paper. Although "no-license" failed to carry, some of the citizens not classed with the temperance workers are awaking to the fact that the saloon is a curse to the community, and they hope another year to drive it out of the town.

Duluth unions, W and Y, have sent such an abundance of good things it is hard to condense. The Central Y union has decided to hold each alternate meeting in the evening, hoping hereby to secure a larger attendance. Mrs. B. L. Scoville, the state secretary of the Y's, whose home is in Duluth, lately occupied the pulpit of Grace M. E. church in that city, on a Sabbath evening and on the following night organized a Y there of twenty-four members. At their first business meeting this new union took up flower mission and railroad work.

The West Duluth W. C. T. U. had some time ago an experience social which was a success financially and socially. A number of those present gave experiences of women in business and as bread-winners for the family, and after this discussion, the members gave their experiences in earning a dollar for the work of the union.

The Central union (W) had a discussion of scientific temperance at one of their meetings. Mrs. Thompson, county president, led, and divided the topic into three parts, "The citizen's duty, parents' responsibility and the teacher's work in school." In closing she gave this thought: "We are citizens on the public school question; we must use our right to vote upon every election, so that the public and the press will see that we intend to educate ourselves for future work. . . . We should not be afraid of the word politics, unless it gets to mean to us what it does to many men at present—partisanship."

REV. E. O. TAYLOR'S WORK

in our state is now completed, and many are the words of appreciation and gladness that he came among us. He spoke for sixty different unions, giving on an average of three lectures in a place. Mrs. Hoover, of Howard, writes: "Mr. Taylor's handling of the three lectures, 'That boy of yours,' 'Some fallacies concerning alcohol,' and 'A glass of beer analyzed,' was simply masterly. Crowded houses greeted the speaker each evening. It was by far the most practical, the most effective of any temperance speaking we have had in this place. Dr. Taylor presents something new, and by his oratory holds an audience well." A worker in Ellsworth writes much the same thing, and indeed, from all over the state comes similar testimony. "Good seed has been sown," say very many, and the harvest will surely appear. Minnesota W. C. T. U. will send a "God-speed" to Dr. Taylor wherever they hear of his being at work.

MAINE.

A VARIETY OF NEWS.

Our county conventions have been unusually successful this year; our faithful state president has, I think, attended them all, bringing the enthusiasm which never seems to fail her. To describe them all would require a supplement, so I will only speak of the most remote—that held at Caribou in our "great northern state of Aroostook."

After devotional exercises, led by Mrs. Briggs, of Caribou, and a greeting from Mrs. Stevens, the county president, Mrs. L. J. Spaulding, delivered a stirring address. The report of the corresponding secretary, Mrs. A. L. Page, of Houlton, showed that the total membership for the year was 625 regular and 100 honorary members, with 320 in the L. T. L. Amount of money raised since last September, $1,233.82, balance in treasury, $187. Mrs. Jennie Seamans, of Amity, gave an interesting account of her work as county missionary, and it is hoped that she may be kept in the field several weeks during the coming year.

The memorial service for nine promoted comrades was conducted by Mrs. F. A. Forbes, of Presque Isle. Three poems, including an original one from the pen of Mrs. Tarbell, the county press superintendent, were read, Scripture text remarks by Mrs. Forbes, and prayers, completed the service.

After devotional exercises on the first evening came words of welcome from Mrs. G. S. Getchell, representing the white-ribboners of Caribou, Rev. Mr. Jenks, representing the religious, and Professor Knowlton, the educational interests of the place. These were responded to by Mrs. Johnston, of Fort Fairfield. The address of the evening was by Mrs. Stevens. Subject, "Woman's Ballot." The next morning a fine paper on "Woman's Suffrage" was read by Mrs. DeWitt, of Presque Isle. One of the most pleasing incidents was the introduction of three little boys who served as messengers. They signed the pledge, were decorated with the white ribbon by the state president, and duly installed as honoraries. One responded by saying, "I mean to grow up a good man. I shall keep my pledge. I am glad I belong." It was his ninth birthday. The good example of these boys in becoming honoraries was followed by ten ministers of the county.

The old county officers were practically reëlected, Mrs. Spaulding receiving a gift of Miss Willard's new book, "A Great Mother," as a token of regard from her co-workers. Work was reported in fourteen departments, the state superintendent of temperance instruction in public schools presenting that line of work. The closing evening was occupied by Mrs. M. E. A. Gleason, who gave an eloquent address upon "The Present Need."

ANOTHER POLICE MATRON.

I feel sure that white-ribboners everywhere will rejoice with us of the Auburn union in the recent appointment of our social purity superintendent as the city police matron. For the past six years the union has been hoping for the creation of this office, and it is with great pleasure that we now see it filled by Mrs. Maria Swett, a woman who combines sympathy and shrewdness to a degree which renders her peculiarly well fitted for such a position. When Mrs. Swett went to the city clerk to take her oath of office, she told him she wished to know exactly what her duties were to be. His reply was, "Keep on just as you have been doing, the only change is that you now have full police authority and a salary." If all her work were of such a nature that it could be made public, it would be a strange story. Her house is often the temporary shelter for those in need. Only last Sunday a poor woman arrested for intoxication was permitted to stay there, instead of in the lockup. She has done a grand work in finding places where girls and women can earn an honest living, as well as in seeing that many poor children are decently clothed and sent regularly to school. People come to her with all kinds of trouble. A day or two ago a mother implored her to find her sixteen-year-old daughter. She had not come home the previous evening and the mother had sat up all night waiting for her, for it was her first absence. Mrs. Swett succeeded in finding the young girl and restoring her to her home apparently in a very penitent state of mind.

NOTES.

Parliamentary usage is interesting Maine women as never before. About ninety, including members of the Lewiston union, attended a drill given by Mrs. Stevens at the hall of the Auburn society. A fortnight later the Lewiston sisters invited the Auburn ladies to a very delightful tea at the home of Mrs. Odlin, their corresponding secretary. Here also Mrs. Stevens was present.

Among the Aroostook county unions, mothers' meetings and Demorest medal contests have aroused much enthusiasm the past year. Fort Fairfield, Limestone, Caribou and Presque Isle have taken up the contest work with good results. At the recent Prohibition state convention held in Camden, the evening was occupied with a contest for the large gold medal, an entertainment which appealed both to the ear and eye. Stereopticon views of a temperance character were shown, accompanied by appropriate songs.

At Auburn the union has found it expedient to utilize special days. Thus dinners were served on Saint Valentine's and on May day. On the latter occasion a children's May day party was held at four o'clock in the afternoon in the city hall, and over thirty-five dollars taken in dimes at the door. A pleasing entertainment was given, including braiding the May-pole and a temperance exercise by the pupils of one of the intermediate schools conducted by their teacher. Then on July 4th a lawn party was held by the union at the court house. Good music was furnished and patriotic speeches made by three of the local clergymen. It is usually found that people are more ready to spend money on public holidays than at any other time, and it is also good policy to identify ourselves with pleasant occasions as well as to provide innocent amusement for the days when many temptations are offered by the enemy.

CONTESTS AND MITE-BOXES.

The W. C. T. U. of Berwick had a silver Demorest medal contest recently. The contestants were two young ladies and four gentlemen; they all did well and the arguments were convincing. Capt. John Pharr announced the program and gave a short and impressive talk at the close. The contestants are the pupils in elocution of Miss Blanche Chapman, the recording secretary of the Berwick W. C. T. U. She deserves the credit of the perfect success of the evening's exercises. Mr. Farley O'Brien, one of the young men of Berwick, was the winner of the medal. To each of the other five Miss Chapman presented as an award of merit a Temple souvenir spoon. At the close of the exercises a little girl came forward and presented Miss Chapman with a beautiful present as a token of love and appreciation. Refreshments and social intercourse closed the evening, and all went home feeling that the Demorest medal contest carried on by the W. C. T. U. was doing more to educate public sentiment than any other one thing.

The L. T. L. of Morgan City has twenty Temple mite-boxes among its members, and the children are trying to see who can fill their box first. Mrs. A. A. Ozenne has four in her family, and the great desire of the children to do something to help Mrs. Carse pay for the Temple and to secure for themselves the souvenir spoon, prompted the mother to give an entertainment to help fill the boxes. The entertainment, Friday, May 11, was a series of object lessons for temperance in the way of recitations, songs and dialogues, each one showing the evil of the liquor traffic in such a simple and plain way that the smallest child present could understand it. Then the little girls and boys of the L. T. L. served ice cream and cake, the children had a pleasant and profitable time, and realized the sum of fourteen dollars. The money will soon be forwarded to Mrs. Carse, which will make her heart glad to know that the children of Louisiana are helping her, and that the mothers of Louisiana are helping the children. We hope that Mrs. Ozenne has opened the way, and that other mothers will follow her example in doing a good work both for the children and for the Temple.

PARLOR MEETING.

The superintendent of railroad and sailor work, and the superintendent of parlor meetings united their efforts to entertain the sailors and railroad men in the W. C. T. U. hall at Morgan City. A number were present and were well entertained with music and talks, a number of the W. C. T. U. women were there to entertain and were active while entertaining in circulating a petition to prevent the repeal of the Sunday law; one man signed the pledge, and put on the white ribbon. Miss Anna Grant of New Iberia, came purposely to sing for the pleasure of the gentlemen, and certainly was convinced by their appreciation of her lovely voice, how much she had done for them; the committee desire to thank her through this medium for the pleasure she gave all present. She is one of the loyal white-ribbon girls of Louisiana and is always glad to use the lovely voice God has given her for the W. C. T. U.

The petition circulated at the parlor meeting was signed by every individual in the house but one. The paper was full before the last person could sign, but as that person is a true member of the W. C. T. U., "it is a foregone conclusion" that it will be there later on. Ice cream and cake served by the committee to all their guests closed the evening.

MRS. J. N. PHARR.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

COMO avenue W. C. T. U., of Minneapolis, Minn., celebrated Jennie Casseday's birthday, June 9, by sending a basket of flowers to St. Barnabas hospital, and by distributing flowers (small bouquets) among sick friends. The flowers were donated by Mrs. Julia A. Ellsworth.

THE fifteenth annual convention of the Washington county W. C. T. U. was held at Sandy Hill, N. Y., June 12 and 13. In the president's absence, Mrs. Mason, of Greenwich, presided. The two days sessions were made memorable by a very entertaining program constructed much as a state convention program.

ON July 1 at Grant, N. Y., in the South Harmony Free Baptist church occurred the ordination of Rev. Carrie Hemminway, well known in her community for Christian eloquence and common sense piety. "Of course," says our informant, "there were some of the sterner sex who opposed because she is a woman, but she is ordained just the same, and we expect great things of her."

THE following item comes from Grove City, Pa.: "We, the W. C. T. U., the president of the United Presbyterian and Methodist Episcopal Ladies' Missionary Societies of this town resolve that we most heartily approve the actions of the women of our land in their just indignation against the injustice of ostracising their own sex when the man who is equally guilty is admitted into the best society. We would also adopt the standard which has been chosen by so many, a 'White life for two.'"

THE many friends of Miss Jennie Smith will be pained to learn that her long time companion and faithful co-worker, Miss Addie Sherman, can be her helper in the flesh no more. She passed quietly away the last hour of June, 1894. The end came after an illness of six weeks. A beautiful lot in the Mountain Lake Park, Md., cemetery was selected where she now sleeps, and where, when Sister Jennie's life work is also done, she will be placed by her side and one monument be over their dust. The memorial exercises on July 3 were very touching from the many testimonies of great strong men all broken down and in tears, telling how she had led them to Christ.

THE Brainerd, Minn., W. C. T. U., requests the publication of these resolutions: "In view of the fact that the white ribbon is the badge of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and has been adopted by more than two hundred thousand women as a token of purity, love and justice, in the peaceful war which we wage for God and Home and Every Land, and also in view of the widespread destitution, the contempt of common law and personal rights, the destruction of property, mob rule, and even the committing of murder, as a sequence of the great railroad strike, we, the members of the Brainerd, Minn., W. C. T. U., do most earnestly inquire, by what right or authority Eugene V. Debs, president of the A. R. U., presumes to adopt the white ribbon as a badge for his order, and the sympathizers thereof.

"Therefore, we most emphatically protest against the use of the white ribbon as a badge for any order with less noble and worthy purpose than our own."

THE following protest was sent for publication: "We, the W. C. T. U. of McComb, Miss., herewith enter our protest against the order of A. R. U. adopting the white ribbon as an emblem of sympathy with their order. It has been the emblem of our (W. C. T. U.) order for many years, and by a prior right we claim it. Our principal reason for entering this protest is, that it conflicts with our work among honorary members very seriously and disastrously."

THE many friends of Mrs. Lucy H. Washington, one of our most efficient organizers and lecturers, will regret to learn of her great grief in the death of her oldest daughter, Mrs. Martha W. Swett, wife of Rev. Swett, of Vineland, N. J. Mrs. Swett was a young married woman of much promise and rare consecration to duty. One of the last public acts of her life was to lead the Christian Endeavor meeting of her church the Sunday before her death. June 27 she passed victoriously away, her last words being, "All is well; give my love to everybody."

"SOME months ago," writes Mrs. M. J. Borden, president of New Mexico W. C. T. U., "I wrote THE UNION SIGNAL in an article from New Mexico that the Catskill W. C. T. U. had taken up for this year the work of 'building a church.' Perhaps the wording was somewhat unfortunate, and for the entire satisfaction of W. C. T. U. sisters and friends, allow me once for all to say that 'the building of that church' does not for a moment mean the building up of an organization, but simply the erection of a building for church purposes, free for the use of all denominations, and to those good women, the people of that little mountain village are indebted for the erection of the only building there for the worship of God."

MRS. J. MARY PEARSON, of Auburn, N. Y., has recently been bereaved in the loss of her mother, Mrs. Charlotte Friese King, who, after a long and patient waiting has been called up higher. Mrs. King possessed qualities of heart and mind which endeared her to every one, and she will be greatly missed. For some years past she has made her home with Mrs. Pearson, who has had the joy of ministering to her in her declining days, and whose heart is sore because of her going away. Although confined to her room for a long time, yet her interest in the temperance cause never grew less, and especially in the work for the children.

MRS. MARY H. HUNT, our National and International superintendent of scientific temperance instruction, was very highly complimented during her attendance at the National Educational Association, at Asbury Park, New Jersey, July 10-13. At the invitation of the presiding officer, Mr. F. Trudeley, of Youngstown, O., Mrs. Hunt addressed both sessions of the elementary department of the association, a department which probably attracts more teachers than any other. After Mrs. Hunt's first address, this department voted to devote one of its sessions next year to the consideration of the best methods of instruction in scientific temperance. To the delight of the great audience of eight thousand people that assembled in the Ocean Grove Auditorium, Mrs. Hunt also made the opening address at the last evening session of the association on "The Perpetuity of American Institutions."

A GREAT MOTHER

CHICAGO EVENING JOURNAL, JUNE 16, 1894.

Under the unique title, "A GREAT MOTHER," Miss Frances E. Willard and her kinswoman, Minerva Brace Norton, have issued an interesting and minute biography of the late Mrs, Willard, the mother of the temperance reformer. The book is introduced by a preface from the pen of Lady Henry Somerset, in which she gives it as her deliberate judgment that the book in question will be looked upon in the future as in great part explaining the remarkable influence of the daughter, Frances, upon the women of this generation. There is no questioning the fact that "Madam" Willard, as she was always called in her later years, had admirable views on motherhood. We would that every wife in the land might read them. But it would be a mistake to imagine that it is because of these views that her daughter is the most famous of living American women. The unquenchable ambition and the remarkable intellectual powers of the daughter had far more to do with making her what she is than even the wise and careful training of the mother. It would be invidious to imply that there are not thousands of equally great and good mothers whose children never become famous.

This book will, undoubtedly, be welcomed by the great army of white-ribbon women in this and other countries, for, like Miss Frances, Madam Willard had a remarkable power of winning the worship of all the women who came within her sphere of influence. The book, while given to a superabundance of terms of endearment, is healthy in sentiment and sound in purpose. Mrs. Willard's exaltation of the responsibilities of motherhood is an inspiration. Her rule never to let anything in the world come between her and her children is the secret of a mother's power. Her idea of praising for good deeds rather than of censuring constantly for infringements of a household law, is the true basis for childhood education. And with all this her personality was a powerful one and entirely worthy the post-mortem honor that has been paid to it in this volume.

PACIFIC ENSIGN.
A Great Mother.

This is the title of the long-expected memorial of Madam Willard, and nowhere does it fall below the expectation of its readers.

The sketches of her character by her various most intimate associates are like the photographs of an artist, from every possible point of view, giving, with remarkable realism, the full roundness of a character than which the world has never seen one more admirable, or one that has more successfully carried out its purposes in life. This work is worthy to be a text-book. Its setting forth of lofty ideals is an inspiration, and one cannot read it without aspirations toward these ideals. Perhaps the most suggestive feature of the book to most readers will be its most effective lesson of heredity. With due honor to the great mother whose life and characteristics are so well portrayed, no story was ever told that brought out more clearly the value of paternal influence and responsibility, and the reader is grateful for the acquaintance of the noble father. Not least in value among the lessons this book will teach is the influence it should have upon the lives of young women; its lovely picture of domestic life illustrates so fully that, above all other considerations, moral worth and Christian principle are the basis of all happiness.

Madam Willard's life with her young children is told so tenderly and so sweetly that it will endear the work to every mother. It will recall youth to the aged, and be a guide book to the young. As such it commends itself, and should have its place in the household library.

BIBLE READING FOR JULY.

The Bible Reading for July is by Mrs. Alice J. Harris, the beloved W. C. T. U. songstress. Who that has heard her clarion tones in "Victory" ringing out sweet and clear will fail to read her words upon the foundation text, "Sing forth the honor of His name; make His praise glorious." The practical thought which she presents is "how music may be made a more potent factor in our work." She quotes from many well-known authorities to prove the power of music as a moral agent and draws the conclusion that "it may be used in the temperance reform more largely than we have yet done." "It is impossible to have earnest universal singing without plenty of books," says Mrs. Harris, and this belief we emphasize by suggesting for every public gathering a liberal supply of the White Ribbon Hymnal, compiled by Miss Anna Gordon, which can be had of the W. T. P. A. for 35c. each, $3.50 per dozen.

RESPONSIVE READINGS FOR JULY.

The Responsive Reading for July is by the well-known parliamentarian, Mrs. A. S. Benjamin, whose "dictum" is law at all W. C. T. U. gatherings. The subject, upon which no one can write more suggestively and authoritatively, is "Schools of Methods and Parliamentary Usage." Mrs. Benjamin gets at once at the root of the matter by a confession of ignorance upon the part of a new member. "Madam President, I am so unfortunate as to be ignorant, and may as well confess at first as last; I do not even know what a school of methods is, or what it is for, or who attend it, or how long it lasts, or who conducts it."

New members, and some old ones, will gain much wisdom from this Responsive Reading, which should be in the hands of every white-ribboner.

Mrs. Mary T Lathrap.	"The Daniel Webster of the Temperance Reform," Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap, needs no eulogy. No lips were ever more truly touched with a live coal from God's altar than are hers."
Mrs. Louise S. Rounds.	"Few states are blessed with a leader so strong and brave and earnest, and in her loyal followers she inspires her own lofty courage."
Mrs. Mary T. Burt.	"Queenly in presence, courtly in speech, elegant in manners in private life, as well as dignified and inspiring in public, she is well fitted to lead the more than twenty thousand consecrated women of the Empire State."
Mrs. Susan S. Fessenden	"Mrs. Fessenden is a born leader, queenly, magnetic, with the courage of her convictions, which is sublimely contagious, and a devotion to the cause which knows no discouragement and recognizes no obstacles."

U., which position she held for two years, coming in 1893 to Chicago as editor of Books and Leaflets and contributing editor to THE UNION SIGNAL."
Mrs. Harriet B. Kells.	"Has rare literary ability, and a breadth of mind and courage of convictions which combine to make her influence most far-reaching."
Miss Jennie A. Stewart.	"Is the Associate Editor of THE UNION SIGNAL and the 'Aunt Jane' enshrined in the hearts of the children."
Mrs. Caroline F. Grow.	"Business Manager of the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association. Graduated from Wheaton Female Seminary, Norton, Mass., class of 1855."
Miss Ruby I. Gilbert.	"Among the many jewels grouped in the setting of the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, must be counted Miss Ruby I. Gilbert, whom Miss Willard rightly denominates 'the staunch and true.'"
John G. Woolley.	"The days of miracles are not yet passed, and this man with tongue of fire called of God as truly as was ever prophet of old, is a living proof of the fact. His work is just begun, but its outcome is destined to affect the future as has the work of but few men."

Signal Notes.

In Holland, no newspapers are issued on Sunday.

Postal deliveries in Paris are reduced by one-half on Sunday.

It has been estimated that the land in the United States is worth $12,500,000,000; the cattle, $5,500,000,000; the houses, $14,200,000,000; the furniture, $7,200,000,000; the railroads, $10,000,000,000.

The following statistical fact will encourage all temperance workers: In the United States twenty years ago, there was a liquor dealer to every 192 inhabitants; now there is one to every 272 of the population.

That "there is no great loss without some small gain," has been illustrated the past year of financial stress by the greatly decreased output of tobacco, estimated at $21,000,000. Uncle Sam's revenue thereby is decreased about three million dollars. He ought to be in better business.

At the graduating exercises of the Williamson great trades school in Delaware county, Pa., fifty-nine boys averaging nineteen years of age were given diplomas and honorable mention and represented the following trades: Bricklayers and plasterers, carpenters, machinists and pattern-makers. Forty-eight of the number went forth with a total abstinence pledge.

The St. James Budget of London is authority for the statement that the young men delegates to the recent great jubilee celebration of the Y. M. C. A. drank four hundred dozen bottles of soda; 19,000 bottles of ginger beer, lemonade, etc., and 3,500 large bottles of Apollinaris. They were thirsty but non-alcoholic beverages furnished all the cheer they wanted.

The last official census of Great Britain returns 857,000 paupers. France and Italy each have 270,000 and Germany, 325,000. No reliable statistics can be given at this time of the United States, as no census has been compiled since the great distress of the past nine months, which has doubtless doubled the number of those dependent upon charity for the means of subsistence.

Rev. Robert Dawson, of Great Britain's Congregational Total Abstinence Association, has recently donated to the London missionary society the sum of one thousand pounds, the "result of forty years' practice of total abstinence." Some of the temperance papers of England are finding fault with the disposition of the gift, thinking it should have gone to the treasury of a temperance society.

The London Medical Record reports that during the year 1893 in England alone, one hundred and nine persons sustained serious injuries from football, twenty-three of these dying. Of the lesser injuries and the deaths resulting indirectly from this game no record was kept. Comment seems unnecessary. It is difficult to understand why it should be necessary to invoke law to prevent people engaging in a sport which involves imminent danger to life and limb.

Independence Day was most enthusiastically celebrated by the New York state Prohibitionists in a "grand ratification of the Syracuse convention," at Prohibition Park, Staten Island. There were fireworks, speeches and banquets, but the most notable exercise was the address of Dr. Louis Albert Banks, late candidate for governor of Massachusetts. It was a masterpiece on the "Patriotic Duty of the Hour," and should be leafleted as a campaign document.

Traffickers in Japanese women are finding it far more difficult to practice their nefarious calling. Recently four young Japanese girls were enticed from home to the British steamer, Tacoma, and packed in trunks, which were intended to be unlocked when the vessel sailed. The cries of one of the unfortunates were heard, led to the release of all four and the punishment of the vile procurers. The price that was to be obtained for the girls, their captors announced to be five hundred dollars in gold.

So great is their faith in its wonderful curative powers, the Kola Importing Co., 1164 Broadway, New York, are sending out large trial cases of the Kola Compound free to all sufferers from Asthma. SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

The repair shops at Pullman were started August 2, with no active opposition on the part of the strikers.

The Pullman company announces that it will not employ workmen who belong to the American Railway Union.

Ex-Premier Gladstone has declined the invitation to visit America, assigning as the reason ill health and old age.

Two great fires in the lumber districts of Chicago last week created a loss of two million dollars and three human lives.

Marked improvement in the condition of national banks is reported from Washington as a sign of returning prosperity.

The Columbia Salvage Company has served the World's Fair city a bill of $236,000 loss sustained by fire at the time of the railroad strikes.

Claims against the city of Chicago for damages during the recent riot, aggregating nearly three hundred thousand dollars, have been filed.

It is estimated that a million dollars worth of spurious treasury notes have been put into circulation by a gang of counterfeiters, who have at last been detected.

Reports last week announced the loss of the Chicago Herald arctic ship, May 24, under command of Walter Wellman. The entire crew escaped with their supplies and pushed onward.

The trial of Cesario Santo, the assassin of President Carnot, was begun at Lyons, France, August 2, and the next day the jury returned a verdict of "guilty without extenuating circumstances."

No agreement was reached last week by the tariff conferees, although a few important concessions were made by the Senate committee. It is confidently expected that the bill will be passed this week.

Japan has apologized to England for sinking the Chinese ship Kow Shing, while she was flying the British flag, in the naval engagement of July 25. England awaits the statement of the captain before replying to the apology.

Formal declaration of war between China and Japan on Corean soil has been received by the foreign ministers at Washington. Two severe engagements have resulted in temporary victory for Japan. The United States remains neutral.

The annual conference of Christian workers began at Northfield, Mass., August 1. The acoustic properties of the new auditorium are pronounced perfect. Rev. F. B. Meyer, a noted English evangelist, will take a prominent part in the meetings.

DURING Miss Willard's two months in the Catskills she will employ two stenographers in taking dictation for her "Handbook of History and Methods," her booklet of "How I Learned to Ride the Bicycle, with Reflections by the Way," and besides preparing her annual address she will send out articles to the press and contribute at least one editorial a week to THE UNION SIGNAL.

WOMEN should feel especial interest in Embury M. E. church, Brooklyn, whose pastor, Rev. Dr. Bowdish, invited Mrs. General Fisk to participate in the laying of the corner-stone, and has asked our President to have a part in the dedication exercises which are to occur a few months hence. To one who thinks about the matter from a philosophic point of view there could be nothing more appropriate than for women to be associated with men in those solemn services that set their church home apart for the worship of God and the solace of man.

"WHY do not people go to church?" is the question answered in these columns by many whose opinion the world will value. In the reasons given it is pleasant to note—besides a tolerant exposé of hindrances—a spirit of reverence, of gentle human sympathy, of genuine devotion to the church and of universal faith in its divine institution and final triumph. The objections stated should have the consideration of all who truly love the church.

FEW subjects discussed in THE UNION SIGNAL have aroused such universal response as the farm question as represented in our annual Fair Number, to be issued this year August 30. Hamlin Garland, who has nobly devoted his literary genius to exposing the wrongs and disabilities of the agricultural classes, will contribute an article, and others equally worthy to speak will have a word in this issue. If anybody has a special interest of the farmers to set before the public let us have it at once, or not later than August 15.

IT is refreshing to see the large place that the W. C. T. U. occupies at Chautauqua. Mrs. Emily Huntington Miller, the president of the Woman's Club, is a prominent white-ribboner, having been one of the original Ohio Crusaders; Miss Mary Mather, known and loved by all the Y's, is the leader of the Girls' Outlook Club. Among the lecturers we often notice the names of leading W. C. T. U. women. On July 26 Mrs. Margaret A. Watts, of Kentucky, superintendent of our police matron department, delivered an admirable lecture on our union, in which she gave a valuable table of the organization of temperance societies in the United States. Our readers will be glad to preserve it: Union Society of Morean, 1808; Massachusetts Society for Promotion of Temperance, 1813; American Society, 1826; American Congressional Society, 1833; American Temperance Union, 1836; Washingtonian, 1840; Sons of Temperance, 1842; Temple of Honor, 1845; Cadets of Temperance, 1846; Good Samaritans, 1847; Good Templars, 1851; National Temperance Society, 1865; Catholic Total Abstinence Union, 1872; Woman's Christian Temperance Union, 1874.

AUGUST 13 is the anniversary of the birthday of the late Lucy Stone, and will be commemorated in Chicago by a joint memorial in Willard Hall, the Temple, at three p. m., the local Equal Suffrage Associations and W. C. T. U. franchise departments of Cook county taking part. As most of the West Side societies have been using the Lucy Stone mite-box it was thought advisable to issue a general invitation to the admirers of this great woman, to honor her memory in the manner most acceptable to her, i. e., by helping the suffrage cause where help is most needed, and just now Kansas is the "hub" of the suffrage universe. We temperance workers know that in the ballot lies our only prompt and permanent means of securing temperance legislation, therefore, let us help Kansas now in her struggle, and thus brighten the labor and hasten the day of a constitutional convention in Illinois. Any one desiring to give financial aid to the Kansas campaign can either send or give the same to Mrs. Minnie Barker Horning, Room 1116, The Temple, or at the services on August 13, at 3 p. m. All money received will (unless otherwise designated) be sent, one-half in the name of the local franchise departments of the Illinois W. C. T. U. and the other half in the name of the Illinois Equal Suffrage Association. There will be a good program. Prof. Rena Michaels Atchison, Senator Castle, of Sandwich, Mrs. Helen M. Barker, National Treasurer of the W. C. T. U., and others will speak. We trust every Chicago temperance and suffrage worker will attend, and those who cannot be present will at least contribute their mite toward the Kansas campaign, in the name of that great and saintly woman whose last words were: "Make the world better."

B. O. FLOWER, editor of the Arena, has contributed to this issue a thoughtful article on present conditions in our country, which should appeal to the unimpassioned judgment of our readers. It is not given as stating our own or anybody's else views besides the author's. But in this universally acknowledged crisis in public affairs, every patriot—whom we take to be every American citizen—owes it to himself and his country to give an unprejudiced examination, as never before, to the principles on which our government is founded.

MRS. HOFFMAN'S splendid work in Colorado is creating a profound impression on thinking minds. She has repeatedly expressed her willingness to debate the prohibition question with any speaker, and numerous Prohibition leagues throughout the state have challenged Mrs. J. Ellen Foster, who is speaking for the Republican party in the state, to joint debate with Mrs. Hoffman. This has been promptly declined by Mrs. Foster. On one of these occasions Mrs. Hoffman took for her text the Jewish government when it assumed the political position advocated by her Republican opponent, to wit., "It is not the province of political parties to cover the domain of morals. In individual matters you may follow your own conscientious convictions, but in political matters you must secure results." A friend writes that the opera house could not begin to hold the people, and that nothing else was talked about the next day.

THE annual convention of the National Catholic Total Abstinence Union was held in St. Paul, August 2, 3 and 4. The attendance and enthusiasm were greater than ever before known, the key-note having been set by the recent rulings against saloon-keepers in Catholic societies by Mgr. Satolli and Archbishop Watterson. Mrs. Annie R. Groat, president of the Woodbridge union, and Mrs. W. W. Nichols, president of the Willard union, both in St. Paul, presented fraternal greetings from the National W. C. T. U. in these words: "From our peerless, intrepid, inspiring leader, Frances E. Willard, to the newest recruit to our ranks, we greet you with heart and voice and with our hands extended to you in fraternal fellowship. We rejoice in the evidence of God's uplifting hand in this cause, as shown by the rising tide of temperance thought, crystallizing into serried ranks in organized societies, among the foremost of which stands the Catholic Total Abstainers. We congratulate you on the possession of such leaders as Archbishops Satolli, Ireland and Bishop Watterson. We are made thrice glad in your principles, your rapidly increasing numbers and the advance steps taken in your church societies to make the drink traffic odious." Among other strong resolutions is this one: "Give no support to Catholic papers which allow liquor dealers to advertise in their columns; Catholic papers must be an auxiliary to the pulpit." Archbishop Ireland spoke unqualifiedly against the saloon, declaring: "The church demands that its members be temperate. America has set her face against the saloon, the den of corrupt politics, and any church which will not come out for temperance is an odious excrescence of evil. I appeal to you in the name of the country, of God and of the church to lead all Catholics to be true Catholics and servants of the church. Have your festivities, but let not the tables bear the weight of alcoholic spirits. The greatest self-denial to-day is in the pledge. I believe we shall not succeed with the poor man until we have club rooms and coffee houses for him, for the saloon is now his club room. We must have all Catholics in office arraigned against the saloon and its interests. Political slavery is hideous, and especially so when it brings slavery to alcohol. I beg the clergy to enlist in this grand cause." It is a matter of keen regret that the convention failed to indorse our Polyglot Petition, which is wholly unsectarian and non-political.

WOMAN'S WORK.

BY L. A. BURKHALTER.

Once upon an island,
  Which steamships never found,
There lived a race of people
  Who each wore one foot bound.

It happened to their ancestor,
  (The story I'll rehearse)—
An old witch came along his way
  And said o'er him a curse.

For he had kicked the king's best dog—
  A cruel thing to do;
And he and his, because of that,
  Had one leg—'stead of two.

And after 'while it came about
  That folks began to say,
What is the use of our odd leg?
  It's only in the way.

And here and there a man was found
  Who overstepped their rules—
Yes, stepped with both feet on the ground,
  And called the others fools.

Now is all this so very queer,
  Or is it simply human?
The Chinese dwarf their little feet,
  The world still dwarfs the woman.

"Not good for man to be alone,"
  God said in the beginning;
Works, miners' camps and politics,
  They each have had their inning.

And "man alone" has come to grief,
  His one-half of God's image
Can't cope with all the world's great work—
  He's worsted in the scrimmage.

Once learning was for man alone,
  And ignorance far-reaching
With slavish chain bound all the poor,
  Till women did the teaching.

Once women did not speak in church;
  But heavenly intuition
Now sends her forth with gospel news
  On home and foreign mission.

Saloons have been for "man alone"—
  Now women take a hand,
And Women's Temperance Unions work
  To wipe them from the land.

And women's eyes have seen the rents
  So sadly needing mending
Which in our government are found,—
  That liquor question pending.

And woman's voice must soon be heard,
  Must not "keep silence"—shall it?
Is it found "good for man alone"
  To cast the nation's ballot?

The nation needs a mother, for
  The children take their "tone"
Far off from God's first heavenly note,
  Brought up by "man alone."

"What is," you ask me, "woman's work?"
  I answer, what is man's?
For every work is woman's work
  That takes, you see, both hands.

Cedar Rapids, Ia.

THE MEMBER-AT-LARGE.

The Town Kindergarten Association.

BY HELEN CAMPBELL.

"Go away!" said the member-at-large decisively. 'Can't you see that there is no subject under heaven in which I have the slightest interest? when the mercury has danced between eighty and ninety for nearly a week, a rational person ceases to think, and simply exists. Even the summer novel is too much for her, for the summer novel to-day is one with a purpose, and its problems must be wrestled with. I have fallen back on Anthony Trollope, whose tale winds along as peacefully as a canal through a pretty country. Leave me in peace, me and my 'Barchester Towers.' Leave me."

"You have been left too long already," returned the serious-eyed friend, to whom life was so weighty a business that trifling and light-mindedness appeared pure waste of a force that ought to spend itself in instantly doing something. On this point the member-at-large who believed in much laughing, finding in that exercise part of the stimulus necessary to get through the world at all, took issue, seeking to add to the creed of "never stop a minute," that of "Hasten slowly and take a look at things in general as you go." She struggled up now, for it was a hammock that held her, and considered the countenance looking down upon her.

"More papers," she said. "I see it in your eye. I have vowed off. Till fall comes and the wind blows away these mists, I make no more papers nor will I hear one. Let them be read to the fishes if they must be read. Why not? Saint Francis preached to them and I saw a string of catfish this morning with such out and out wickedness in their bulging eyes, that I am certain they need conversion."

"Are you through with the necessary effervescence?" said the friend severely, "because when you are I will proceed to tell you that there are a lot of people who think it is great nonsense for us in this little city to try to have a kindergarten association, and that it is just putting on airs and trying to imitate New York. Now the president says that you are just fresh from San Francisco and the work there, and if that is told about it may change their minds. Of course you will come and tell, and on the whole I believe you are going to read a paper before October."

The member-at-large looked at her abstractedly.

"Go away," she said, "I am thinking what to say," and lay back in the hammock.

Naturally, three days later at the hour appointed for the meeting, she appeared, bearing a paper as composedly as if in the making thereof no vow had been broken, and this is what she read:

"In the beginning of every movement for the betterment of society, its strongest opponents are often, quite unconsciously to themselves, its most efficient helpers. Whether opposition be passive or negative, it is in the nature of objection, and if a thing is true, there is nothing under heaven that will turn to its advantage more thoroughly than objection and opposition. Both of these states of mind compel the holder of a truth to minute search after every shred of demonstration that can be found as to the righteousness of his position. Every fact, every illustration, historical, political, economic; the personal experience and its summary, whether that of opponent or advocate; each and all count as arguments for the thing to be done. And thus the social reformer who finds himself facing people who like the good old ways and practise them in such delightful fashion that the innovator only says, 'Keep the old for we cannot do without it, but add, I pray you, the new,' has only to continue, 'and remember that for the children of earth all that is good in the old, all that is perfect and lovely and to be desired in the new are alike their inheritance."

"It is not details of how to manage or build up a kindergarten that I am to give you to-day. There are plenty of experts among us who know it all beautifully well, and can be called on at any minute. Nor do I believe that there is one here who really needs to be convinced as to the desirability of extending the kindergarten system. It is plain to most intelligent people, that at the most susceptible age—when the child is absorbing impressions of the new and wonderful world in which he finds himself, and asks questions that not the wisest philosopher that ever lived has power to answer in full—that, at this time at least, the best possible answers shall be given, since on the replies made depends much of the child's development, and most of his future power and value as a citizen of the state.

"This being settled, what we want now is facts, and for these facts we have only to turn to the history of kindergartens in this country. The best presentation of these is found in the thirteenth annual report of the Golden Gate Kindergarten Association, which means all the work done on the Pacific Coast. It is a significant fact that in that section should be found the most perfect system in existence. I speak advisedly. A German gave us the kindergarten, but while the common facts of human nature make it easy to adopt it in the large, in detail each nation must make its own modifications suited to its own individual temperament and needs.

"This is a process that requires much sifting and weighing, and naturally, for this country, a woman accustomed to ruling a house and to all these small processes that go toward the making of a loaf good for food, took the matter in hand and elaborated the first kindergarten work for America. We do not need to say that Elizabeth Peabody was her name, and we join with it that of a man at whom his own generation laughed, but whom this present generation loves to honor—Amos Bronson Alcott, the father of 'little women.' He used her system in his own school, one of the most extraordinary the sun ever shone on, since when things went wrong the children punished the schoolmaster, and at all times they called work play and play work.

"Here and there, chiefly in towns influenced by Boston, their methods were followed, but New York waited, till out of the West came a wise German, who had joined, in St. Louis, the band of German educators and thinkers, to whom we owe many things. To them we owe industrial training for that city, developed by Dr. Woodward long before the rest of the country thought it worth while to follow their example, and who gave us, also, our first philosophical review since the days of Benjamin Franklin. There in New York in the Workman's School, which all may see, Felix Adler began the work that has grown beyond all bounds, and that now bears fruit in the New York Kindergarten Association. Chicago had her own system, but long before New York opened her eyes to such need the Pacific Coast had elaborated the methods that set it above and apart from all else that has been accomplished.

"A woman began it for the East. Another woman transplanted it to that far West, with such modifications as its new surroundings required, and thus Elizabeth Peabody, who, sixty years ago sowed in doubt and discouragement the tiny seed, finds in Sarah B. Cooper, in San Francisco, a successor, whose inspired work passes steadily from glory to glory. It is impossible to exaggerate what she and her corps of splendidly trained workers have already done, and no less impossible to predict what reconstruction of life and thought on that coast will be the fruit of the work.

"You all know what San Francisco represents. A splendid, sumptuous, reckless, almost lawless conglomeration; the sum and substance of that early craze for gold, and of a colony founded, not on any political or religious principle, but purely and only for gold. Ten Sodoms could hardly have produced more rampant and shameless vice, and yet by the side of every vice walked its counterpart—a positive virtue, open-handedness, and generosity, warm-heartedness and all frontier humanities joining themselves together and tossing gold into the laps of those who asked for it. They knew that they were wicked, and let the vigilance committee work its will. They know that they are still wicked, but that their women who submitted long—for that is the manner of women—have gradually opened their eyes and unstopped their ears, and hear and see the abominations that good women mean to put away.

"The generation now walking San Francisco streets means in large degree the culmination of that thirst for gold. Huge fortunes are in the hands of men and women who know small use for them save in maddest luxury and show, while the city itself is headquarters for one of the most enormous and most conscienceless corporations the world has ever seen (the soul of capital is hard to save), the enemy and destroyer of progress at every point, and yet even now at its most insolent height of power, doomed to die. Stretching its length along the beautiful coast, little branches on every side, it is like an enormous scorpion, its fangs sunk deep in the unhappy land. But the day nears when the clutch will loose, and the brains that already plan and work for deliverance are those of men who have been schooled, some of them, by the woman whose name will stand forever as the synonym for light and liberty for that coast."

It was at this critical point that a stout old lady in a back seat, who had at first listened attentively, then yielded to the heat and slumbered peacefully, suddenly fell from her seat and was led out, painfully red and insisting upon stopping to apologize, by a sympathetic neighbor, the member-at-large pausing till the episode had ended.

THE GOVERNMENT, THE RAILROAD AND THE STRIKES.

BY B. O. FLOWER.

There are several things connected with the recent strike which it seems to me deserve the thoughtful consideration of every patriotic citizen of America who desires to see the republic maintained. Chief among these is the attitude of the government, and so serious do I regard the evil wrought by the administration, that I write to say a word upon a subject of paramount importance, if industry is to be saved from serfdom.

I regard the action of the government, from first to last, as exceedingly unfortunate; in fact, I cannot conceive of anything better calculated to undermine that love of law and order, which can only exist in the minds of the people so long as they feel that the government is impartial and the courts are unbiased by capital. The action of the attorney-general in passing over the parties with whom the government had contracts for the carrying of mails, and enjoining the strikers, was so clearly unjust and indefensible, from either a business or an ethical point of view, that, in my judgment, it has done more to undermine respect for law and order than any single act which the government has been guilty of in recent years.

Let us look at this question from a common sense, business point of view: We will suppose that the reader has a contract with the writer of this article for the publication of a book, which is to be illustrated in black and white, and that the contract compels me to bring the book out within a certain time, and we will suppose that the reader has several agents engaged to commence canvassing for the book at the time specified for its appearance. Now, we will further suppose that I am publishing a book gotten up in colors, and before the completion of the work in black and white the manufacturers of the colors used in my establishment, a great millionaire concern, cut down the wages of the men engaged in making the colored inks to the starvation limit; we will suppose that the workmen in this factory, in common with my workmen, belong to a certain brotherhood banded together for mutual aid; we will further suppose that the color makers ask that their grievance be arbitrated, but the millionaire manufacturers will hear nothing of the kind, even refusing to permit an impartial and uninterested committee to go over the case to see if there is anything to be arbitrated, after which the color workmen strike, and my workmen refuse to continue work on the books requiring colors so long as I still procure my colors from the millionaire manufacturer in question; they, however, are perfectly willing to do the black and white work; but I say, "No, unless you will do the color work I will close my factory."

Now, to whom would the reader look for the fulfillment of his contract with me? Would he expect to force the workmen to go back to my employ, or would he commence action to compel me to carry out the provisions of his contract with me? On this point, there can be no question, he would most certainly proceed against me in the matter; he would say, "I have nothing to do with your workmen and their grievance does not concern me, but I must insist upon the fulfillment of my contract with you."

And, aside from my legal rights he would urge: "You have no ethical claim, inasmuch as your workmen offer to do my work, provided they are not compelled to also work with colors manufactured by the firm which they believe to be unjust in their treatment of the members of their organization."

Now, the position of the government was substantially similar to the position of the reader in the imaginary case I have cited, with this important difference,—the great railway corporations in most instances have derived immense benefits through gifts and grants from the government; they are occupying without price the great highways of the country, and are exercising an almost autocratic power in levying tariffs from the wealth producers and consumers of the land as well as the traveling public, hence, their obligations to the government and to the public are ethically greater than the obligations in the imaginary case cited. It was clearly the duty of the government to first commence action by compelling the railroads to fulfill their contracts with the government by carrying the United States mail "with or without the Pullman cars." The government had nothing to do one way or the other with any arrangements the roads might have with the great sleeping car monopoly of America, and her duty was perfectly clear,—she should have compelled the roads to carry the United States mail "with or without the Pullman cars." The strikers in no case refused to carry the government mail on trains bearing passenger coaches to which no Pullmans were attached. In Los Angeles, California, after it was found that the injunctions against the strikers failed to prevent the United States mail from being delayed, the courts did proceed against the roads in precisely this way, with the result that the mail was moving from Los Angeles twenty-four hours later. The action pursued by the government in all cases, excepting in that of Los Angeles, was exactly the action which the railroad corporations would have pursued provided they owned the administration. In the nature of the case this action could not fail to exasperate the strikers, because it convinced them that the government had become an active sympathizer with corporate greed against the industrial millions.

A wise government will always act with the greatest deliberation when dealing with a subject which affects the happiness and welfare of millions, and no step will be taken until the government can go before the contending parties and show her course to be eminently just, show that she has proceeded with absolute impartiality, and that the line of her action has been based upon the great fundamental law of the highest ethics, the Golden Rule.

It is a well-known fact that in no administration since the second adminstration of President Grant, in which the exposure of the Whisky Ring occurred, has the government maintained such relations with corporate greed as in the administration of President Cleveland; the greater number of the members of his Cabinet were directors in banks or great corporations when called to their present positions, and the attorney-general selected by Mr. Cleveland was a well-known railroad lawyer and the attorney for the notorious whisky trust, and in this latter capacity he had filed in Boston nine demurrers setting forth that the anti-trust law, which the Democratic party in its platform had pledged to vigorously enforce, was "unconstitutional and void," and it is further known that this gentleman remains a director in at least one railway, although he might be compelled at any time to prosecute his road for violating the Interstate Commerce Act.

With a Cabinet so strongly bound to corporate interests, so tainted with the suspicion of being the tools and henchmen of wealth acquired through monopoly and special privileges, it was exceedingly important that Mr. Cleveland, provided he desired to maintain peace and avoid the sacrifice of human life and wanton loss of property, proceed in such a manner as to avoid exasperating the industrial millions.

Furthermore, on the very heels of this unparalleled and fully indefensible conduct, the President, without pausing to inquire from the properly elected authorities as to whether the condition in the social storm center warranted the presence of soldiers, or without even communicating with the governor of the state of Illinois to suggest that the federal troops would be ready to act in case the state troops were unable to preserve peace, forced the federal troops into the very social storm center; this unprecedented action following the unjust and essentially inflammatory course which the government had just pursued was, in my judgment, a distinct bid for violence, and in its effect was essentially anarchistic, because anything which tends to destroy the confidence of the people in the justice and impartiality of the government is anarchical in influence. I do not believe that there would have been any destruction of property to speak of, or that human lives would have been sacrificed, had the course of the government been the course which would have unquestionably been followed by a Jefferson or a Lincoln. There is absolutely no danger of anarchy in this country, provided the government is just and the lawlessness of capital is held in check by the firm and impartial hand of law.

It is safe to say that no Republican president would have dared to follow the arbitrary and thoroughly Hamiltonian course which was pursued by Mr. Cleveland in carrying out a policy which was precisely the policy which corporate greed would have carried out if it had been the absolute dictator, because in such a case the entire Democratic press of the country would have indignantly protested against a course which the Democratic party has heretofore opposed, and the protest of Democracy joined with the indignant protest of the industrial millions would have created a sentiment so powerful against any Republican president that the party would have been overwhelmingly defeated in succeeding elections. The Republican press of the country has, on the whole, applauded the President, because he has given their party a long desired precedent, which it will not be slow to utilize, if the party of centralization ever again comes into power.

That the result will in the long run be beneficial, I doubt not, as it has proved to millions of people the fact which thousands who have carefully followed the great parties during recent years have been constrained to believe, namely, that the great trusts and corporate interests of this country, which are preying upon the wealth produced by industry, and the great gambling commonwealth of Wall street completely control the two great parties; and it merely gives additional emphasis to an observation recently made by Mr. Havermeyer in the United States Senate, when, with a frankness which the manipulators of the great parties must have regarded as brutal, he coolly stated that the sugar trust contributed to the Republican party in Republican states and to the Democratic party in Democratic states, thereby showing that this great octopus was in effect buying the favor of both parties.

The result of the strike will also awaken hundreds of thousands of people to the fact that in an independent ballot rather than in their unions lies the real safety of the industrial millions; not but what the unions accomplish, in many cases, great good, but so long as the members of the unions refrain from casting a solid ballot in the interest of industrial emancipation they will continue to be the prey of the money power operating through skillful demagogues for the destruction of the happiness, prosperity and freedom of the wealth producers of the land.

Had Mr. Pullman chosen to have submitted his case to arbitration the slaughter of numbers of human lives and the loss of millions of dollars through the strike would have been averted; but his scornful refusal to even allow an impartial committee, composed of two representatives of his own company, two judges and a fifth man selected by these four, to canvass the question and see whether there was anything to be arbitrated, form a striking and suggestive lesson of the essentially anarchistic and brutal spirit of triumphant plutocracy.

If the great strike has served the purpose of awaking conscientious and sincere patriots to the menace of plutocracy, and if it has taught the industrial millions that their only hope lies in uniting at the ballot-box against capitalism for the inauguration of juster conditions, it will not have been in vain, as the republic will have been saved from the supreme peril which now confronts her.

WHY DO NOT PEOPLE GO TO CHURCH?

REACTION SETS IN.

Business men stay at home from the inevitable reaction that comes with a day of rest. They cannot drive all the time. Six days of work leaves them limp on Sunday. I am often gravely troubled and discouraged that I find it impossible to get up steam enough to go regularly to church, and long for enough time on Saturday to prepare for Sunday. BUSINESS MAN.

GOSPEL NOT PREACHED WITH SIMPLICITY.

In my opinion, when people do not go to church regularly it is because the gospel is not preached with simplicity and earnestness, and applied to the practical problems of daily life. I think the scholasticism that so often stiffens and petrifies our modern sermons is more responsible for the emptiness of the pews than anything else. I believe, however, that the church-going population is constantly increasing, and I am not at all pessimistic on the subject. AMOS R. WELLS,

WONDER WHY THEY DO.

Why do I not go to church? Because I can't. I'm so busy preaching to others that I, myself, am in danger of being——! But to speak soberly I often wonder why so many persons do go to church, hearing preaching often times on uninteresting subjects, little practical or present. Many go to church from habit—feel condemned if they stay at home; but where Jesus Christ is strongly and truly preached, wherever His principles of life are applied in subjects germain to occasion, the people flock to hear.

LACK OF HABIT AND CONVICTION.

It seems to me that "the reasons why" are as various as the churches, or perhaps as the people, and impossible to be stated in ten, or even in thirty lines: Lack of habit; lack of early training, by which the habit of church-going is created; lack of conviction, as to its being a duty to sustain public worship; lack of interest in service and sermons; lack of religious principle; and last but not least, weariness, laziness and lack of inclination.

If you ask the cause of all these "lacks" that produce the lack of attendance, we have another and a more important question. MARY LOWE DICKINSON.

New York City.

BECAUSE THEY ARE NOT INTERESTED.

"Why people do not go to church," is a comparatively brief interrogation but the answer is long and complicated. There are almost as many reasons as there are people. It will not do to say it is because they do not love God, or because they are not religious, for very many of them are God-loving and religious, only in a different way from the church-going way. We have too many proofs of this fact to doubt it, and I'm sorry to say, we have also too many proofs that church-going does not make people God-loving and religious—(I use religion in its best sense, including morality). The whole object or objects of church-going need to be discussed in any adequate answer to this question. I think the general proposition that people would go to church if they were interested in church is true, but why they are not interested is another story, as our friend Kipling would say.

SARAH HACKETT STEVENSON,

Ex-President Chicago Woman's Club.

BECAUSE THEY DO NOT WANT TO.

People do not go to church chiefly because they do not want to. To be more specific, however, some people are too tired, others too lazy, others too much absorbed in the Sunday newspaper, others because they are morally on the down grade and do not want to hear any exhortations to repentance and holiness, others because they have become skeptical of the Christian religion, others because they have become skeptical of Christians and feel that the church is a selfish institution. People who want to go to church easily find some place of worship where they feel at home and where they are spiritually fed.

It is the duty of the church of Christ to-day to be hospitable, attractive, democratic. While there are churches and halls in Chicago suited to every taste, adapted to every grade and shade of belief, still there are many who do not care for religious truth however presented in the churches. It is the duty and privilege of Christians to carry the gospel to those unwilling to come and hear it.

TOO ONE-SIDED.

I do not constantly attend church because I get so tired of having propositions and statements flung at me broadcast, with never a chance to question or answer. It is too one-sided. YOUNG LADY CHURCHMEMBER.

CAN'T PAY FOR A SEAT.

I would go to church if I were able to rent a seat. My self-respect does not permit me to accept the charity of the church more readily than I would the gift of the passer on the street. Hundreds of young men stay away for the same cause. CLERK IN AN OFFICE.

NOT SPIRITUALLY ATTRACTIVE.

You ask me why, in my view, people do not attend church now as in former times. It may be because the church is not spiritually attractive as it used to be. Men hunger to know the truth. The church used to say, "This is eternal life to know God; and he who wills to do the will of God may know." But the intelligence of the time has outgrown ecclesiasticism and contradictory formulas. It knows that that is not the "law of the Spirit of life"; that scientific speculation is not, nor making the church a cheap club-house. The parable of the Good Samaritan condemns the church of the day. Men ask only one question: How may the soul know God and serve men? The answer comes as it were from Babel, and leaves the soul dissatisfied. A church of simple gospel truth, whose witness should be the experience of the Holy Spirit, would have power again as in the days of the Latin fathers, the Wesleys and the New England revivals. The world is sick of the contradictions of theologies—it thirsts for spiritual life. The soul must have the Light of Life to meet its needs, and the church of the Holy Spirit that Christ promised as the leader "unto all truth" is yet to come. It is the inward and not the outward world that is to be the interpreter, and any one who simply preaches that one may give up sin and self and know God, and illustrates the truth in his own experience, may find eager assemblies today and always. May he not?

CHURCH SLOW TO YIELD TO THE NEW ORDER.

Why do not people go to church? Because the life of man in this world (of which the life of every human being is an epitome) is now entering the manhood stage, in which truth must be received rationally; and the church is slow to yield to the new order of things and put away the traditions of the fathers as expressed in creeds and theological standards. The rational mind, with a need of a heart-staying religion, finds in the Lord Jesus Christ and His word a satisfying basis for religion. but is aware that it is a great error to call theology religion—as much so as to call religion theology—and men are therefore impatient of it.

The Teacher and His word go before, and are forever leading us higher, but the interpreters of and talkers about Jesus Christ are lingering behind in groups to explain the Great Teacher, or to dispute over His words. The Teacher, Himself, says His words are "spirit and life," and that is what makes religion. When the spirit and life of Christianity are not only taught but lived by Christians, every place where there is such teaching and such living will be a magnet to the multitude, and the common people will throng there.

At every mention of the name of Jesus Christ in an assembly of socialists there are signs of reverent approval, but at every mention of the church there are definite signs of disapproval. The years of entrance upon adult life are years of restlessness in the individual, and so are they in the great composite individual we call the race, and the Lord alone can lead us through that period. That days of peace shall come, that in "returning and rest" we shall "be saved," there is no doubt, but in the meantime, "spirit and life" must be our meat and drink, if we grow up into the likeness of our Lord.

New York City. MARY A. LATHBURY.

TOO LOW A PLANE.

Why people do not go to church? I would say that many are on too low a plane, living a life of animalism and indifference; many others live in the sphere of worldly ambition and self-will; a large number have, with great effort, emancipated themselves from the superstitions of orthodoxy and have not yet found anything that satisfies their reason; and a few have risen above the church by realizing the true spirit of Jesus which they cannot find embodied in any church.

If the church would conquer the world it must be above the world, as Jesus and His apostles were above it. But while it continues everywhere on the same moral plane as the average respectable humanity of the century, and far behind the best men who would reform all abuses, averse to advancing science, and averse to infant reforms which are not yet popular, lukewarm or cold in its love of truth, intolerant of free discussion, it must continue a stagnating instead of a progressive influence.

The industrial classes, who need but do not receive its active sympathy, the energetic reformers and the inspired genius who would uplift humanity do not find themselves in unison with the church and do not seek it.

When the church ceases to be a sectarian combination in dogmatism, and makes an effort to approximate the character of the founder of true Christianity, all men will be drawn into its lovely sphere. But the entire human race is on too low a plane at present to permit such a church to be possible except in very small groups, and the churches of Christendom will continue to exist on that low plane—which is in harmony with international war and all the social evils with which our country is now engaged in a death struggle for national salvation.

The time may come when the church will be more attractive—when it will lose faith in its creeds and return to the spirit of Jesus; and unless it does it will go down under the destructive effects of modern scientific skepticism, which has not only withdrawn attendance but is penetrating the church itself and chilling its life.

JOSEPH RODES BUCHANAN, M. D.

San Francisco, Cal.

MORALLY DEPOLARIZED.

In my opinion the following seven causes account for people not going to church: 1. Many do not regard church going as a duty but as a privilege. They honestly believe they can worship God just as well and stay at home. 2. The Sunday newspaper, the theatre, business competition and other incentives to intellectual activity stimulate and engross the mind so much that the ordinary church service is insipid in comparison. 3. Late hours and dissipation Saturday night, "because to-morrow is a day of rest," make many physically disinclined to go to church. Physical as well as mental overwork must be mentioned as a cause. There are many persons in such a morbid state physically that to sit still, through a church service is real torture to them. 4. "Nothing to wear" is a common and genuine excuse with many. I think it was Emerson who said that good clothes give a sense of ease and comfort to the wearer second only to the consolations of religion. To most persons it is very uncomfortable to be surrounded by those better dressed than themselves. The habit of wearing our best clothes to church is a pernicious one. I am so thoroughly convinced of this evil that I no longer wear my best to church. 5. Quite a number of persons do not go to church because they are morally depolarized. They look into the wrong end of their moral spy-glasses. They have got into that deplorable morbid state in which they can see only the evil that church goers do. There is no denying the fact that many professed Christians are not what they should be, and their inconsistent conduct is indeed a stumbling block. 6. Many persons do not go to church because they do not hear anything new or interesting there. We have sat for four hours on a hard bench at a surgical clinic and never lost a word of the speaker. We have gone to church the next Sunday and fallen asleep within twenty minutes, or became so restless as to be obliged to leave before the services were over. Many sermons, though truthful, are dry and uninteresting. The best and most nutritious food may lose all its flavor and all its virtue by poor cooking. 7. Ill health and other domestic duties keep many from church. As for myself, I do attend church when not physically engaged or too tired, notwithstanding the sad fact, nine-tenths of all the unkindnesses I have ever received personally have been from professed Christians. I believe in going to church. Were I a skeptic and an atheist, with no hope of heaven nor fear of hades, I should go to church for the good it does me. An eloquent, devoted, Christian speaker evokes my clearest thoughts and noblest emotions, drawing me out of the narrow, dissatisfied selfishness into which we are all prone to fall.

RAILROAD TIES.

BY JOHN G. WOOLLEY.

There is no longer a "woman question"—there was, but that is antediluvian. Every school-boy knows that the hypotenuse is the shortest distance between three points. In a figure of which God is the altitude and mankind the base, woman is the hypotenuse,—that is, the demonstration. The rest of the business is to "work out" the geometry of it in feet and inches, and the logarithm for that has no gender. So that, a society with a sex limit is as insufficient as a "dumpy level" is to build a railroad.

The sober third thought of the Crusade ought to be to strike out the first word of the corporate name and take us all in to the "Christian Temperance Union" on the ground floor . . what God has joined together let no woman put asunder. . . Then there will be some sense in Katharine Lente Stevenson's song, "We All Belong," which is now a metrical taunt at the "employés."

. . . . . .

There are many reasons to fortify my proposition. The society wants money. Very well, we have it, ready to plank down, but not on any honorary-bric-a-brac basis. Millions for dues but not a cent for tribute.

. . . . . .

Take us in and the local unions will see a revival—we will be workers instead of visitors, and the Y. W. C. T. U. would multiply its influence and its inspiration a hundred-fold, at once.

. . . . . .

As an educational measure it would be a great stroke; . . . all active members of live temperance societies tend to become Prohibitionists. . . . You would make votes at an unprecedented rate, and together we would force the fighting for equal suffrage—and win it.

. . . . . .

"But," says some nervous woman, "men might capture the society."

Mercy! Think of the feelings of a lot of men who had captured Frances Willard and two hundred and fifty thousand unanimous women who will neither trim, lie, or keep a secret—or even "keep silence in the churches."

. . . . . .

What the country needs now is a great, broad, united society of men and women in honest, equal working fellowship. Of such a society timid preachers would read the notices from their pulpits, and all the work of the church and Sunday-school would feel the power.

. . . . . .

Then, I think, the society ought to go in for some real pledge work and a social "lodge night" every week or so, with recitations, readings, songs, debates and the like. It would be a great boon to rural communities especially, but to all as well.

The Demorest medal contests would be multiplied in usefulness and communities permeated with prohibition truth and total abstinence habits.

Lecture tours could be arranged for our young men and women, and a lot of unused talent utilized, and much that is now hidden for lack of opportunity brought to light, encouraged and developed. I know dozens of splendid young people who could do glorious work lecturing among these lodges—or unions. The circulation of THE UNION SIGNAL could be greatly increased and in many ways the work advanced.

. . . . . .

I respectfully, but firmly, give notice that if this suggestion is overlooked at the next National Convention there are many of us who will—"hang around" hereafter as heretofore and await the pleasure of the ladies—for there is none of us but would scorn to form a man's temperance union.

Do let us in.

Union Pacific R. R.

LETTER FROM ENGLAND.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—You will, I am sure, be interested in the most recent new departure in connection with the National British Women's Temperance Association. A short time ago, under the title of "What Next?" Lady Henry Somerset issued to her supporters an urgent appeal that they should vigorously take up the question of woman's suffrage, based on the ground that the future of the temperance cause depends, in her belief, on an immediate rally of the women. The occasion for the issue of this appeal was a crisis in the history of temperance legislation in this country, arising from the fact that it had become evident that however good the intentions of the government, there was practically no chance of the direct veto bill, for which the united temperance forces have worked so long and hard, finding a place amongst the legislative results of our parliamentary session.

In her circular, Lady Henry pointed out that "government is engaged in the gigantic enterprise of recruiting an army even while it is contending in a terrific battle," and that the added forces, urgently needed, can only be secured through the adoption of the new registration bill still before Parliament, and to which it is intended to move amendments in support of the women's vote.

All this involves the very important lesson that the temperance constituency, however strong, is not yet able actually to command the first place in parliamentary affairs, and further, that the most effective way to remedy this defect would be to increase the volume of the temperance vote. The most obvious, as well as the most righteous increase, is to be obtained by giving the parliamentary franchise to the women who already possess the local and municipal vote, and the certain effectiveness of such an increase is proved by the hostility of the liquor trade to women's suffrage, not only in this country but in New Zealand—where the women have triumphed over their foes.

The immediate response to the urgent appeal of their president on the part of the branches of the association, was of a most cheering and satisfactory kind. Large numbers of resolutions were passed and sent to the authorities, together with petitions to Parliament and letters to the members and the government. But an even more striking evidence of the important part temperance women are destined to play now that they have taken a definite stand on this important question, was afforded by two great meetings held within ten days in the height of summer, organized within only twice that period, and held in the two largest halls in London. The women's suffrage movement in England never before commanded such a volume of influential support, and there is no question that this marked accession of numbers and influence was due largely to the bringing in of the temperance women's forces. Lady Henry Somerset presided over the first meeting, and the Countess of Carlisle over the second, and both meetings gave an emphatic and unequivocal affirmative answer to the question, "Shall women have the vote?"

I have called this women's suffrage action a new departure. In one very important sense it is not that, for it is only the logical corollary of action taken during past years. One of the professed reasons for the severance from the association of some of its former members, who formed a new society, was the alleged bringing in of women's suffrage by Lady Henry Somerset. It is interesting, in the light of that fact, to know that some of the women who have most persistently made that assertion themselves assisted to formulate a demand, on the part of the association, some years ago, for women's suffrage. The eleventh annual report of the association (for 1886-7) states that a paper was read at the annual conference on "The Women's Franchise Bill: What effect will its passing have upon the Temperance Movement?" after which it was resolved by a large majority:

"That this conference of the B. W. T. A. considers that justice requires the admission of duly qualified women to the electorate, and believes that it will place in their hands a powerful instrument for good to the cause of temperance."

In 1892 the following resolution was passed:

"That all class legislation is unjust, and that, therefore, responsible women should participate in framing the laws by which they are governed. We hold that the spiritual and moral forces of women must be brought to bear directly upon the ballot-box; that in view of the great moral gain that has been realized by granting the municipal and other votes to women, and holding that their vote will always be the enacting clause to all temperance legislation, we ask that the preliminary vote should be extended to them."

At the council meeting on May last the following was carried with very few dissenting votes:

"That this council regrets that the 'Period of Qualification and Elections Bill,' now before the House of Commons, makes non-provision for the parliamentary enfranchisement of duly qualified women, and strongly urges the government to insert the amendment necessary to secure an extension of the parliamentary franchise to all women who possess the qualifications that entitle men to vote."

Thus the temperance women in their new departure are only giving practical form to the resolution previously passed.

It is possible that the new registration bill may not be passed this session; but in that case a still stronger effort will be made early next year.

W. C. T. U. PARLIAMENT AT HOT SPRINGS CHAUTAUQUA.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—On July 5 the fifth annual Chautauqua Assembly of the Black Hills convened at Hot Springs, So. Dak. One hour daily was given to the W. C. T. U. parliament, Mrs. Isabel T. Irish, of Fort Meade, director and instructor. This hour was one of the special interests of the assembly. The consecration service was impressive, followed by organization. The local unions of the Hills were well represented. Mrs. Gossage, of Rapid City, represented "Jail and Prison Work." Miss Brierly, of Sturgis, read a paper on "Evangelistic Work." The paper on "Juvenile Work" was read by the secretary. July 12 Mrs. Scroggs read a paper on "How to Distribute Temperance Literature." The papers were followed by practical discussion on methods of carrying on work, and were valuable and helpful.

A large share of the allotted time of the parliament was devoted to parliamentary drill, under the leader, Mrs. Irish. The exercises were exceedingly interesting; no culture could be chosen more needful than this. The instruction fell on harrowed ground. Mrs. Irish is a parliamentary tactician, a lucid teacher and an enthusiastic temperance worker. All were charmed with her grace and imbued with her spirit, and there was a hearty welcome among the members for the work and an unbroken cooperation throughout the session.

The parliament petitioned the management of the Black Hills Chautauqua Assembly to continue the temperance work next year, and to give to the parliament one hour in the afternoon daily session. We feel that a permanent good has gone out from the united efforts of the leader and pupils in the W. C. T. U. parliament, and that the cooperation and earnestness manifested during the session will be a nucleus around which much growth shall cluster.

Hot Springs is one of the favored spots of the earth. It is an ideal place for the assembly. People gather there for both pleasure and health. The beauties of nature adorn her approaches. The handwriting of God speaks from the everlasting hills and the rocks that surround become familiar friends. The waters of her brooks do not fail and the sweet harmony of nature sings in her groves and caves and temples. Here in this place, under the widespread branches of brotherly love, grow together the C. L. S. C. Assembly and the W. C. T. U. Parliament.

Surely our work has not been in vain. "We look out, not in, look up not down, and lend a hand."

JOSEPHINE SCROGGS,
Secretary of the W. C. T. U. Parliament,
Hot Springs, S. Dak.

A NEW DEPARTURE.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—I have had it in mind—and Mrs. Andrew favors it—to suggest a scheme for doubling up the ranks of the World's W. C. T. U. workers. Mrs. Andrew and I (as probably do Mrs. Leavitt and Miss Ackermann) get dozens of letters from women in every part of the world on all possible questions, submitting every sort of case to our judgment and making all manner of requests. We are written to because personally known to these far-away workers. But traveling about as we do, we cannot answer promptly, and sometimes cannot give the needed help. Now we wish that every union in a distant country might have its fellow in either "Mother" England or "Mother" America and thus the world march onward double instead of single file. There are, we will say as a guess, five thousand unions scattered throughout the world outside of England, Canada and the United States (this is a mere guess) and twenty thousand unions, we will guess, in these three latter strong countries. Now let five thousand of these twenty thousand mother unions who have been long in the work each take under its special charge for help and counsel a union in India, China, Japan, Australia, wherever it may be. Let a "fellowship secretary" be appointed to do especially the following things:

1. To exchange letters with a distant union for mutual information as to each other's work.

2. To represent the distant union in THE UNION SIGNAL or Lady Henry Somerset's paper, and to see to the publication of manuscript sent to the SIGNAL from distant parts. It is a very frequent thing that important documents are lost that are sent home for publication, and if there were some one at home really interested in the matter the missing manuscript could be traced.

3. We should like it if each of these five thousand "home" unions would undertake to supply the "distant" union with at least one copy of THE UNION SIGNAL.

4. Let the "fellowship secretary" of the home union advise with the distant union as to suitable literature for pushing the work, and constitute herself a sort of "purchasing agent" to select what is suitable in filling orders from the distant field.

There are other ways in which the cause could be advanced, we feel, by such a "double file" organization. Intelligence would be constantly spreading at home as to the work in distant fields, and the women would become more interested in the world at large. At our National conventions there could be held side meetings representing various parts of the world; say, for instance, that at the next National convention a dozen or two women who represent unions having "fellows" in New Zealand should propose to hold a meeting to celebrate the gaining of woman's suffrage in that country, what an enthusiasm they could arouse after having had a year's close correspondence with New Zealand W. C. T. U. women on the subject! They could make New Zealand as near to us as Idaho!

Another time a calamity like the recent Queensland flood, which washed away the homes of dozens of our white-ribboners, would mean more to us than a mere telegraphic dispatch in the newspaper. We would find a channel already open for the expression of sympathy, and lending of help to our own disabled ranks. I believe Miss Willard's wonderful faculty for organization will take hold of and elaborate the thought of this onward march, double file, of the World's W. C. T. U., if it seems to her to be a valuable thought. When working at home in the near future we will push the matter as much as possible if she and Lady Henry will undertake to inaugurate it.

We would think it wise to avoid talking of "home" and "foreign" work, but rather call it "home" and "distant," for nothing is "foreign" to the World's W. C. T. U. We would further think it wise to avoid anything that seemed like a proposal to patronize and give charity to these distant unions. For it is only fair when we have the publication house right at hand, and THE UNION SIGNAL, etc., for us to try to make them just as cheap and accessible to the distant unions. KATE C. BUSHNELL, M. D.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

Elias was a man subject to like passions as we are, and he prayed earnestly that it might not rain, and it rained not on the earth by the space of three years and six months, and he prayed again, and the heaven gave rain and the earth brought forth her fruit.—James 5:17, 18.

Mr. Henry H. Faxon, of Boston, or more properly of Quincy, Mass. (as his beautiful old home is situated in that historic town), has again shown his liberality and love for the temperance cause by a gift of $1,000 to the Temple. This makes $2,000 he has given toward our "House Beautiful." Another of Boston's liberal sons, Mr. W. A. Grover, has given $2,000. These gifts were secured by the writer when she was in Boston a few weeks ago. Mr. Grover would have been glad to subscribe a much larger sum, but the dreadful exigency in the money market prevented; he hopes when business improves to greatly increase his munificent gift. He is at present in very delicate health; let the prayers of all white-ribboners who read of his generosity to the Temple ascend for this gentle, great-hearted man's restoration to strength. Some other large gifts are expected from Boston, but the time is not yet ripe. In fact, business just now is too paralyzed to ask for large subscriptions, and with the exception of a few cases no attempt has been made in this direction, as the Temple trustees think it best to desist for the present from asking outsiders, feeling that we must content ourselves until brighter times with small gifts from our own true and tried white-ribboners, to each of whom we appeal to stand by until the financial storm has passed away. The Temple trustees also wish to say, the money for the interest on the July Temple Trust Bonds, on account of the strike in Chicago and detention of all business, did not reach our New York bank until a few days after the first of the month. Those of our Eastern bondholders who applied on the first two or three days of July were disappointed in getting their money. This the trustees deeply regret but all should have long before this secured payment on their July coupons.

Mrs. Vie H. Campbell, who was again elected president of the Wisconsin W. C. T. U. at the annual convention last month, has kindly sent us a copy of the July Motor, containing the report of the convention and the resolutions passed. We are pleased to note the following which was adopted without a dissenting voice:

WHEREAS, We believe the Temperance Temple, as National Headquarters, and as a source of revenue to both the National and state unions, is an enterprise worthy of our great society; and the questions in regard to its management and its ultimate ownership by the National have been satisfactorily answered.

Resolved, That this convention express its hearty indorsement of the undertaking, and if we cannot pledge our active coöperation, we will, at least, endeavor not to hinder its progress.

The same paper contained the resolutions passed at Taylor county, Wisconsin, W. C. T. U. convention. Among them we find the following:

Resolved, That, as a county W. C. T. U., we express our loyalty to the Temperance Temple; and we will do what we can by our money, our influence and our prayers to forward this enterprise and hasten to completion of our "House Beautiful."

The annual convention of the Texas W. C. T. U. occurred the middle of June. Miss Hattie Henderson, state corresponding secretary, writes for the convention a beautiful letter of confidence in and sympathy for the Temple and says, "As in former years the Temple and Mrs. Carse were strongly indorsed by the convention. I enclose you an extract from our president's annual address." The excerpt from Mrs. Stoddard's address is as follows: "Persecution has ever been the way of establishing the truth upon sure foundations. Our 'House Beautiful' in Chicago should be, by this standard, based upon foundations sure and forever. The result of the evil report sent up has been but to increase subscriptions and multiply friends. The past year Texas has more than doubled her donations over any previous year." We assure our dear white-ribbon sisters that all these kindly words of confidence and sympathy give new courage and strength at a time when courage and faith need to stand unswerving in the face of the Red Sea of financial difficulties which now confronts every moneyed enterprise.

Miss M. C. Young, Ocean Grove, N. J., sends $20 on the union's pledge; this makes $64.50 paid. In the Temple column of June 21, $6 credited to Huron county W. C. T. U. on its $100 pledge, should have read Union county, N. J., from Plainfield Veteran Band. Estella J. Purdum, treasurer Ohio W. C. T. U., sends $50 from Delevan county W. C. T. U. Mrs. Mattie A. Le Greene, superintendent Temple work for Rhode Island, sends $34 as first payment on the $100 pledge of the Richmond and Hopkinton W. C. T. U. of Hope Valley, R. I. The Kokomo, Ind., W. C. T. U. sends $25, through its treasurer, Mrs. Rebecca Trueblood; it is hoped this union will continue to fill its mite-boxes until $100 is secured, and the name of each union placed on the Indiana tablet in Willard Hall.

All persons sending $1 to the Temple will receive the beautiful Columbian souvenir. Any individual who fills a mite-box during 1894 will receive a solid silver Temple souvenir teaspoon. This, however, does not apply to persons filling boxes for unions; they receive the Columbian souvenir. All money orders and checks should be made out in the name of William D. Preston, and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara G. Johnson, the Temple, Chicago, Ill.

TO THE CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR ARMY.

[Read at Christian Endeavor Convention, July 11, 1894.]

BY LYDIA HOYT FARMER.

Behold, the King of Glory comes; lift up your heads, ye hills;
Hark! God's great trump is sounding clear, above man's sins and ills!
Glad tidings of Immanuel, Prince, through earth and heaven thrills;
The King of Kings is marching on!

What though the hosts of Satan's bands stand forth in proud array;
The King of Kings and Lord of Lords now comes to hold the sway;
Nor from the Lion of Judah shall the scepter pass away,
The King of Kings is marching on!

Above the raging tumults and the clashing din of war,
Above sin's clang and clangor and hatred's horrid roar,
God's mighty trump is heralding the news from shore to shore,
The King of Kings is marching on.

Behold, ye soldiers of our King, the glory of your Lord!
Triumphant 'midst the foes of truth flashes His mighty sword;
His white horse leads victorious hosts 'gainst Satan's strongest horde.
The King of Kings is marching on!

Haste! while God's trump is sounding forth! Quick! rally all ye bands;
Our King's victorious army is marching through all lands,
Unfurl His royal banner and fight with hearts and hands.
The King of Kings is marching on!

Omnipotence is leading on. Omniscience knows the way.
Almighty God enlists us so we cannot lose the day;
Our enemies are doomed to fail in spite of proud array.
The King of Kings is marching on.

Let your triumphant watchwords ring, "Christ! Church!" o'er land and sea;
'Fidelity and fellowship!" your steadfast mottoes be,
Conquer the world through Christ who comes to set men free
The King of Kings is marching on!

HOW THEY HELPED THE FAIR.

BY EVA JONES.

"I don't think I shall ever want to go to the fair again, this year or any other," declared Mrs. Hepburn to her husband, "and I wish you would not coax me. If you think it is a good place to take Jennie and Tom, I'll not stand in the way of anything you wish to do; but for myself—just to think of the drinking and swearing, the wheel of fortune and other contrivances to persuade people to gamble, and the horse-racing and betting and all, is enough. I tell you the saloons of Clayton are glad enough to have fair time come, for numbers of men and boys just turn themselves loose for a jollification, and before they know it they have slipped into drinking. The sights I saw of that kind last year are grieving me yet."

"Now, mother, you are not worrying a little bit about me, I trust," said Farmer Hepburn, with a teasing glance out of the corner of his eye.

"You dear goose! I guess that a man who has kept sober for fifty-seven years, and voted for prohibition ever since he knew of the ticket, won't need to be kept at home from the fair for his own sake. And I know—I feel sure—our Tom would never so disgrace us and break our hearts. I can trust his good principles, though it makes me shiver to remember how sly are some of the temptations that beset fifteen-year-old boys, and I sometimes fear he will be drawn into some evil before he knows it."

"But, mother, now talk a little about the good that compensates for all this, the better and brighter side to the fair."

"Oh, yes, I always do enjoy the visits with old friends and neighbors, some of them I seldom meet any other way. And the ten miles' ride with you and the children would be a rest and pleasure any time. And I suppose I could get a prize or two for butter or fruit as well as I have before. Tom has done splendidly with the garden this year, and his vegetables will make a nice showing if he chooses to take them, and so will some of your stock. That part of the question is always attractive enough. But you remember how our best hand went off on a spree last fair time, and worried and tired you out for need of his help. It's just that side of it, John, that has worn me out."

This was about six weeks before the date for the fair, and on that same afternoon the Clayton W. C. T. U. was also discussing the coming fair.

"I suppose it will fill the town full of drunken folks and make a harvest for the saloons," said Mrs. Billings. "I wish there would not be any fairs until prohibition carries in our town. They are more harm than good the way they are run now."

"Couldn't we put an influence in this one to help bring prohibition?" asked Grandma Sickles. "There will be lots of folks there, if we could only set them at our kind of thinking, and farmers are more willing than most folks are to think right. We could try and do a little, even if there are but six of us."

And then followed a long, earnest discussion, and a careful laying of plans. Six determined and courageous women are a host any time to do wonders, and the result may be partly guessed from the chatter of Jennie and Tom the day after they visited the fair, for Mrs. Hepburn had stayed at home, though she urged the others to go, since she saw the children so much cared about it, and she knew they would have the best of fatherly care.

"It was too bad you were not there this year, mother, of all the years, just to have seen the difference. It seems a petition had been prepared and signed by most everybody asking the fair directors not to allow liquor drinking or gambling on the grounds. In return the W. C. T. U. agreed to furnish barrels of free ice water, and a pleasant sort of parlor or resting place for tired people, and to help decorate the grounds and make the fair as nice as they could, and you never saw it look so gay and pretty."

"Yes," interrupted Tom, "there were lots of things there not shown for premiums; and I would like to know where they found their parrots and squirrels and stuffed birds and curiosities,—a long ways nicer to look at than their old trick gambling games."

"And the W. C. T. U. parlor, mother, was a tent with plenty of easy chairs, and all sorts of temperance papers there on a long table draped with a big flag, and a kind, jolly woman giving them away to everybody. Pa subscribed for this one, THE UNION SIGNAL, for he knew you would like it, and you could have that much good of the fair, anyway."

"Mother, you'd like to join that W. C. T. U., I know," said Mr. Hepburn. "The woman at that paper table told me about it when I told her why you had not come. She said for both of us to come and join them, and help make the fair and the rest of the world better. Anyway, I gave her two dollars, one for your dues and one for mine, for I am sure the improvement in the fair was worth that much to us."

"And then to cap off with," said Tom, "the W. C. T. U. had got a lecturer that did just give us a rousing, rattling speech; told us a lot of sure enough things about drinking and so on, and all touched up with the drollest stories to show off the points he made. He was just a brick—better than a horse-race any day. A fellow could just strut by the saloons and be proud he belonged to the temperance side after that fellow had had his say to the crowd."

"I'm very glad," said Mrs. Hepburn, "and I shall certainly want to go next year. But how do you suppose they got money for all this? Is the W. C. T. U. a large, wealthy society?"

"I asked one of them," her husband replied, "and this was all done by a band of six women. But they asked others to help and to give this or that, as they needed, and they gathered a special fund to buy literature and pay for their speaker, and I don't know how much they made from their ice cream and lemonade. I know it was proper good."

And six tired, happy women at their next union meeting counted sixteen new members gained, with hopes of many more, a treasury a little richer than before and a host of friends, who said: "That was splendid work your union did. Be sure to 'chip in' again with us next year."

COMMITTED TO A GREAT CAUSE.

BY MRS. FRANCIS SEABURY.

There are many causes called great. Among them are the church, the missionary society, the Sunday-school, the Epworth League and Christian Endeavor, and the temperance work; each has for its greatest aim the uplifting of humanity and the conversion of souls. As Christians we are all committed to our own church with its auxiliaries, for through the church we become Christians, and the better Christians we are the larger hearts we have to go forth as workers against vice of all kinds.

Twenty-one years ago the temperance women, knowing that in "union there is strength," and being convinced of the great need of strength, listened to their convictions and organized the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, the aim of which would be to work against legalized vice especially the liquor traffic. This organization was born of the Holy Spirit and is held together by the same.

Our churches need revivals now and then, and it is not strange that our unions need the same; and the question that comes to us is, How can we most effectively commit ourselves to this work?

After giving it our best thought we shall find it is on par with our conferences, it is on par with our churches, it is on par with the highest morality of our country; but it is not on par with our politics, for it is weakest politically, and it is this in the face of the fact that we live in a country where the Christian voter has an opportunity to make the laws, and by his vote he can say what shall be done for our country as regards this most important question; so it seems to me that in some way we must reach the consciences of the voters, and that some of our women must commit themselves to this phase of the work.

In a certain city a few members of the W. C. T. U. went to the newly elected mayor (who had promised much for temperance if he were elected) and asked him to close the saloons on Sunday. His reply was:

"I cannot close the saloons on Sunday because the voters do not want them closed."

"Oh, yes, the most of them do," persisted the women.

The mayor said: "The Prohibitionists only cast one hundred votes when I was elected, and those one hundred votes show how many are opposed to open saloons on Sunday; if the other voters had wanted the saloons closed they would have voted for the Prohibition candidate. You understand, ladies, that I serve the voters who elected me, and I was not elected by those one hundred votes."

So, you see that we must have our voters think alike and right before we can expect results.

Somewhere I have read this incident: "When the Federal and Confederate armies were encamped on opposite sides of the Rappahannock, a brass band on one side of the river struck up the 'Star Spangled Banner.' Almost at once a band on the opposite side began 'My Maryland.' Other bands joined in with other tunes, each playing the airs which represented its section, North or South—and striving to drown the others. But a lone bugler close to the river sent up, clear and sweet, the notes of a tune which belongs to no section, and which every band could play. The melody of the tune changed the feeling of the contending bands, and one after another came into harmony until the whole valley rang again with the notes of 'Home, Sweet Home.'"

"Home, Sweet Home" is the watchword of the W. C. T. U., and the watchword of all the friends of prohibition, and to that strain we must all rally; and we must not only rally to this strain, but we must so inspire the friends of prohibition who are still in the old parties that they cannot help coming to the rescue of "Home."

We respect the old men who will mourn to leave the old parties as Samuel mourned for Saul, even after the Lord had departed from him, but it is our duty to try and show to others that the old parties have never done anything for temperance—except when a third party was threatened or begun, or else in states where one party had so large a majority that it could expel its saloon members without danger of defeat, as was the case in Georgia and Iowa. So in order to help our cause where it is weakest we must be fishers of men—especially young men whose faces are set toward the future "to follow a rising and not a setting sun."

Again we can commit ourselves to our great cause in enlisting the sympathies of our friends by talking with them on the subject of temperance and the work of the W. C. T. U., and by trying to organize unions where there are none. We can stand by our cause and see that it never goes begging for recognition; we can try to give it a place in the church and Sunday-school; we may fail or be repulsed or voted down (some of us have been).

We can make it popular with Christians by talking with them on the subject; it ought to be made an important branch of church work. We can plan for it either in the use of old methods or by inventing new ones. We can use our own forces; this will be good for both our cause and our workers. If we encourage those in our locals to get information in regard to the needs of the people about them by helping them we may draw them to our union, and in this way we might not only help on the temperance work but might aid our pastor in winning souls for Christ.

The local unions can help our cause by standing by their officers, especially their president. If she does not know all about the work, help her to know more, make kind suggestions and offer little services rather than go about grumbling because you have not her predecessor, whom you lost no opportunity to criticise when she was with you. Do not say your president was very anxious for the office, when you had no other person who would take it, and the incumbent took it to keep the union from going down. Instead, let her know you appreciate her.

We may help the cause of temperance by taking care of and teaching our own children. Take them to the temperance meeting with you if it is in the day-time and they have no other duties to interfere, but don't go and leave them to play with anybody they can pick up; above all, train your children to go with you to your church and not to go with some intimate friend to his or her church. Mothers sometimes say they let their children go where they please for fear if they insist on their going with them it will set them against the church and religion. There will be no such trouble if mothers begin right. No wonder so many sing "Where is my wandering boy to-night?" when fathers and mothers teach their children to go and do as they please, and the children live up to their privileges; however enthusiastic we are in any good cause, let us not foster evil by leaving our own children to run at large.

The majority of us have but one talent; it may be taking care of our own; it may be talking with others; it may be simply standing by ready with a kind word; but whatever it is let us use it for the best interests of our cause and the glory of God.

BE OF GOOD COURAGE.

BY R. C.

Here's a hand to the boy who has courage
To do what he knows to be right!
When he falls in the way of temptation
He has a hard battle to fight.
Who strives against self and his comrades
Will find a most powerful foe;
All honor to him if he conquers,
A cheer for the boy who says "No!"

There's many a battle fought daily
The world knows nothing about;
There's many a brave little soldier
Whose strength puts a legion to rout.
And he who fights sin single-handed
Is more of a hero, I say,
Than he who leads soldiers to battle
And conquers by arms in the fray.

Be steadfast, my boy, when you're tempted,
And do what you know to be right;
Stand firm by the colors of manhood,
And you'll overcome in the fight.
"The Right," be your battle-cry ever
In waging the warfare of life;
And God, who knows who are the heroes,
Will give you the strength for the strife.

OUR CHIEF COOK.

BY CLARA DOTY BATES.

He's in his kitchen, our small chef,
What will he cook to-day?
The tide is out, and all about,
The sands are soft and gray.
He has a little red tin pail,
And his wooden shovel too;
See with what care he will prepare
His favorite menu.

Nothing so commonplace as soup,
So very plain as fish,
Nor does he boast of broil or roast;
There's still a choicer dish.
He does not need a fine gas range,
The wet beach suits him well;
One little hand is full of sand,
The other holds a shell.

A clam shell for a mold, filled full,
'Tis just the proper size!
Each one just so, all in a row,
He turns his pretty pies,
Long lines of them laid out to bake,
In the hot morning sun!
The tide, alack, when it turns back,
Will eat them every one.

THE LAL FITA FAUJ.

(Concluded.)

As our little boy wrapped his blanket around himself that eve and lay down on the floor—which constituted his bed—instead of saying his prayers to the heathen gods, as formerly, he tried to pray to "the Jesus God," and this is the prayer he offered: "O Jesus, please cause my father to let me join this new society that Scott Sahib told us about."

During the night he dreamed that he saw a great army of boys, who marched before him, wearing long red ribbons around their heads and shoulders, as the girls wear their chuddahs.

At half-past five the next morning Juman was starting for school. Had he been an American boy it would have been necessary for him to dress, wash, comb and eat his breakfast before he would have been ready for school, but with our little Hindoo no dressing was necessary, as he slept in his little coat (his only article of clothing), and his head, being shaven, required no combing. His breakfast consisted of a small chhappatti (unleavened pancake), and was eaten on the road to school.

The summer days in India are so intensely warm that the schools usually begin at six o'clock, sometimes earlier, and close at noon each day. The school building to which our baba repaired was simply four walls of mud, with neither roof, floor nor platform.

The boys attending this school were all poor boys and belonged to the lower castes, yet the school-house was as good as many that could be found among the high caste people. Not having floors, carpets, chairs or tables in their own homes, the pupils do not expect to find them in the school-room. The smooth mud floors were what they were accustomed to sit upon at home, consequently they were perfectly comfortable sitting upon them at the makan.

School being called by the native teacher in charge, the boys were soon busily engaged studying aloud. About seven o'clock Juman's father came in and soon after Dr. Scott, the missionary. He spoke so pleasantly to Masih Charan and praised Juman so highly as to quite win the heart of his father.

Presently, however, he turned to the pupils and inquired, "How many of you spoke to your parents regarding the Lal Fita Fauj, and how many can join?" Many hands were raised but Juman's was not among the number.

Turning to Masih Charan, Dr. Scott said, "And doesn't your little boy wish to become a member too?"

"Yes," replied his father, "but I want to know more about it before I let him join."

He was ashamed to admit that he had refused to allow him to do so.

Then the missionary kindly explained to him the meaning of the pledge and added: "Do you not wish to join our band and allow your son to do so also?"

"No," answered he, "but Juman may put his name down if he chooses."

With a smiling countenance Juman stepped forward and signed the pledge. When Dr. Scott left he kindly asked Masih Charan to call upon him at the bungalow (house) and invited him to attend church also; both of which he promised to do.

But upon thinking of his promise afterward he became so angry with himself for having been led to make it, that he vented his wrath upon the head of poor Juman as though he had been to blame for it. The next Sunday, however, he went to church and came home very indignant because the preacher had said there was but one true God—for the Hindoos worship many. He declared that he would never attend that church again.

But one day, not many weeks thence, Juman told him that all the members of the Lal Fita Fauj were to hold their annual fête in the church and asked him to go.

This he promised to do and allow Juman to accompany him. Hundreds of boys and girls from the villages and mohullahs near by marched through the streets to the church, and many were the banners they carried, "Down with King Alcohol," was one. "Away with tobacco," was another. "Strong drink is raging," proclaimed a third.

Reaching the church, Masih Chadan found that an interesting program had been prepared. He listened intently to the prayers which were offered up, the songs which were sung, and especially to the addresses delivered and papers read, all bearing upon the subject of total abstinence.

He felt very proud of his son when his name was called and he arose and spoke the piece so familiar to our American school-boys:

"I will not use tobacco! no!"

which has been translated into the beautiful language of Hindustan.

At the close of the services, when Dr. Scott read the pledge and asked for signers, Masih Chadan was the first to step forward and sign his name. After placing his signature upon the clean, white pledge he turned to the minister present and said:

"I have a confession to make; when I first heard of this society I was bitterly opposed to it, but I have changed since then, and I now am in hearty sympathy with the movement, and will do all in my power to help it along.

"More than that, I desire that one of you missionaries shall go to my house and help me to destroy our idols, for from henceforth I desire to be a Christian. I am convinced that the Christian religion is a better religion to live by than the Hindu beliefs, and I know that it will be a safer religion to die by."

As he sat down the "sweet songster," as Dr. Butcher was called, started the grand old doxology, "Praise God, from whom all blessings flow."

Rifle, Col.

"HONOR BRIGHT."

"I don't know whether you'll be able to do much with him," said a father to the principal of a school to whom he brought his son as a pupil; "he's full of mischief, and loves to break over rules and bounds."

"Does he tell the truth?" asked the principal.

"Oh, yes," said the father, "he's honest; he'll tell the truth every time, even when it's against him. You can depend on that," and he brought his fist down on the table with a big thump.

"Then it's all right," said the principal; "we can manage him," and he did, for he was "honor bright."

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—They were a very happy party of young people, going out from the great city, one hot August morning, for a picnic in the woods. There was Harry with his stout hammock and ropes; George had a big, square box which was heavier than it looked, and when he was asked what was in it he would only give a knowing smile. Walter and Alfred, the twins, had a big bag apiece and Oliver helped with the big basket which his mother had packed with all sorts of good things. Then she had joined the party herself to see that her boys behaved and to help "the teacher" care for them. Just as they were ready to take the electric car, off in the distance they could see a black figure running very fast, and soon Will appeared with a bag of fruit nearly as big as himself. "Came near getting left, didn't I, teacher?" he gasped, as they sped along the rails in their choice seats right behind the motorman, for the hour's ride into the suburbs. "It was all on account of that fruit," he explained when he could get his breath, and they all said they were glad that he wasn't left behind with his fruit.

An hour later, on the bluff overlooking the broad, blue lake, the hammock was swung in the shade; and the six boys were down in a trice to the sandy beach and laughing waters, where soon they were bathing, wading, splashing, screaming and laughing in delight. Mother and "teacher" looking down from their high perch watched the sport for some time, then knowing what the result would be after the bathers came out high and dry, they prepared the good lunch—which was everything a picnic lunch ought to be—biscuits and salad, lemonade, pickles, gingerbread, cakes, cookies, peanuts, bananas, oranges, and lastly, the contents of George's box—a delicious big chocolate cake. A cool east wind came from the lake as they were lunching; the birds sang in the trees, and the sun shone brightly from the clear sky. "Couldn't have had a better day!" they said.

After lunch, teacher read a story, while mother napped in the hammock. Then followed a game of "Pussy wants a corner," among the trees. Another visit was made to the beach, where marvelous sand houses were reared, only to be washed away by the first venturesome wave.

The call, "Get ready for home," came all too soon, and yet none too soon, for they were a tired and happy set of boys who reached their homes at sundown, ready for a good night's rest, and voting a day in the woods near the lake the best kind of time.

Can you guess who the "teacher" was?

We always take THE UNION SIGNAL and I like the Cozy Corner, so please let me in. I have a real Aunt Jane (Aunt Jennie, we call her) teaching the heathen in Mersine, Asia Minor, near where Paul was born. Who can tell his native city? Your nephew, MORRIS EDGAR.

Sterling, Kan. (Aged 12 years.)

Who will be the first to answer Morris' question? You were "in" before you knew it, Morris, and we hope you'll come soon again with some story of Aunt Jennie's about the children in Asia.

Teach me Thy way, O Lord; I will walk in Thy truth: unite my heart to fear Thy name.—Ps. 86:11.

NO COMPROMISE.

We are glad to learn from our British exchanges that the Scandinavian method of handling the liquor traffic finds no quarter from the leadership of the temperance hosts across the water. The same is true in this country and will be, we believe, until the end. Our temperance experts are too way-wise to turn aside from the well-beaten path that they have walked so long. It is for beginners to tread the dangerous pathways of "high license," "tax" and "mulct law."

We veterans have learned too much by the things we have suffered to follow their unwise example, no matter how well meant. We do not impute wrong motives to them—or we ought not so to do—for they have not studied the subject year in and year out as we have done. We would not even say that good may not result from their explorations and discoveries.

It is a long, slow march out of the wilderness of the legalized liquor traffic and we must be content to learn by the logic of defeat where the best road is not as well as by the logic of success where it is located. For it is often as important to know what not to do as to learn what should be done. But for the "Old Guard" there is one course open and one only. "The Old Guard may die, but it never surrenders." For it has learned that every reform, like every crystal, must have a nucleus and that the nucleus is the most solid part and grows more solid with time, and it believes that the veteran temperance worker who temporizes, who halts between two opinions, who expects half a loaf, has done a distinct damage to the cause that counts on him "never to retreat one inch," but to stand like a sentinel on the picket line of duty and "having done all to stand."

It is thus that he can most signally serve the cause, for if he accepts that which is expedient rather than that which is right, on whom can we then count to hold the banner high and give a clear keynote? It is a natural and supernatural law that the fittest survives by seeking that which is most fit. He cannot in the nature of the case choose the less fit, and the true, steady-hearted reformer will not adopt half-way measures, no matter though the crowd at his heels cry out, "crazy fanatic" and "impracticable crank." He knows that it is right that the liquor traffic should have stripped from it the guarantees and safeguards of the law. He knows that we must imperil the investment in poisonous beverages, and that only by so doing will capital be diverted into less dangerous channels. He knows that PROHIBITION is the true and reasonable way out of the wilderness, and so he "keeps in the middle of the road" and marches straight onward, sending back to those who fling their harmless spears at him the ringing challenge:

Falter who must—follow who dare.

THE WORLD'S PRAYER CIRCLE.

In these days when there seems to be a drawing together between races and religions, we hear much about some practical attempt toward Christian unity. All agree that it is most desirable but no one of the one hundred and forty-two sects in this country alone is willing to relinquish those characteristic features that separate it from the others, and as a result we have a deadlock at the very outset of the movement.

But everybody knows that no solvent has ever been discovered that is equal to the solvent of prayer. It is also the strongest disinfectant of which we have knowledge and if driven home to the core of motive will cleanse that which had been mixed and murky.

In the spiritual chemistry, which is doubtless just as scientific as that which we study in laboratories, there is no other force so pervasive and transforming as prayer. We do not mean perfunctory prayer, printed in books or addressed to audiences, but that true aspiration of the soul which can be engaged in by a sincere heart as readily on the street or in a railway train as anywhere, since nothing in it is more real when it occurs "far from the madding crowd" than when its uplift comes to us in the turmoil and contradiction of society. That this is true, the universal heart confesses in its best mood and every form of faith holds in common this one tenet:

"Prayer is the soul's sincere desire
Uttered or unexpressed,
The motion of a hidden fire
That trembles in the breast."

The Woman's Crusade of twenty years ago was as surely a Pentecost of God as any divine visitation that has ever fallen on the human spirit in any age. Nothing that was said concerning that unparalleled uprising, whether by saint or sinner, man of the church or man of the world, theologian or journalist, furnished testimony so concurrent as that borne by them all to the "sense of something divine" that seemed to brood in the very atmosphere, when for fifty days the "praying bands," often several hundred strong, marched in silence through the streets or knelt within the dramshops or on the sidewalks at their doors. It was the most natural thing in the world that when these crusading women met a few months later to organize for steady, systematic work, the prayer hour should have been among the first suggestions of the committee that they appointed on a "Plan of Work."

The hour first chosen—twilight—was afterward changed at the suggestion of the white-ribbon women of New Jersey to the noon hour, and for well-nigh twenty years this has been observed among white-ribbon women, and has gone with that society into all countries, so that it has become domesticated in tens of thousands of the most earnest and devoted Christian homes of the world. This hour was chosen for the reason that it is one in which we are, perhaps, most likely to wander farthest from the sense of spiritual things, because the din of the life that now is then becomes loudest, and the still, small voice of the spirit is most apt to be obscured.

The Salvation Army has fixed a space for united prayer between twelve and one o'clock daily, and it seems to us that if the Evangelical Alliance, the Christian Endeavor societies and the Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Associations should make a similar agreement it would not be long before the churches would set their seal to the noon hour of prayer, whereupon it would become well-nigh universal.

We who have not learned to handle the finer forces of nature, indeed, hardly to apprehend them at all, may find it difficult to realize that in such a continued concert of prayer, involving forces so much more ethereal than any that the senses recognize, there would be a power greater than any ever before invoked by humanity in its long, slow progress toward the higher life—the life of reverent love to God and helpful love toward men. For, just as the Japanese current setting toward our Pacific shores makes the climate warm and genial, so the current of prayer, involving the ardent desire for universal brotherhood and the enthronement of the Prince of Peace in social customs and governmental law, could be counted upon to melt away the barriers that hold classes from each other and keep denominations within the fortresses of immemorial usage.

We believe that this habit of unitedly lifting up our hearts, wherever we may be, in the street or in the house, on the land or on the sea, whether for one single breath or for the entire busy hour of noon, would help to lay those strong foundations deep in the recesses of regenerate human nature, on which, in a more enlightened and happy age, might be reared the superstructure of Christian unity. And for this reason we ask all who read these lines to call in the forces of that wonderful prisoner, the human spirit, and concentrate them for a moment on the concept of such a unified, enkindling and transforming power as this world's prayer would be. Behind every thing there is a thought, behind every thought a thinker, and if, in one united moment of exaltation there could be a sursum corda binding the whole, great world, who will not admit that from such a reservoir of power might flow those springs of healing for which mankind faints and is weary.

But this is only the earthward side. We believe that, just as Christian parents delight to have their little ones come to them with requests—and most of all with such requests as show their love and loyalty to those who gave them birth—so our Heavenly Father would rejoice in our united prayer for the coming of the kingdom, which prayer His own Son has enjoined upon us all, and He would pour us out a blessing that should melt all hearts and make the whole world over anew.

THE WORST OF CRIMES.

The following paragraph from the anti-dispensary decision of the supreme court of South Carolina has been commended by a liquor paper "to the consideration of those who persist in denouncing the sale of liquor as the worst of crimes":

Liberty is understood in this country to mean not only freedom from actual servitude, but the right to use facilities in all lawful ways, to live, work and earn a livelihood in any lawful calling, and to pursue any lawful trade. There is no more sacred right than this, and the traffic in intoxicating liquors is a lawful subject of commerce. Numerous cases support this view. The whole course of federal and state legislation is to the effect that the sale of intoxicants is a legitimate subject of trade. Before the sale of intoxicants can be declared unlawful there must be a valid statute declaring it to be so, and the court fails to find any such statute.

There is no need to remind Prohibitionists that liquor selling is a "lawful business" and that the saloon-keeper's occupation is a legitimate one; no need to remind them that the "whole course of federal and state legislation is to the effect that the sale of intoxicants is a legitimate subject of trade." They know only too well that the law protects the dramshop, and that for any citizen or class of citizens (outside prohibition localities) to destroy the destroyer of American homes is under the statutes a lawless act.

Even in Iowa, where there does exist a "valid statute declaring the sale of intoxicants to be unlawful," is found another statute—whether valid or not is an open question—which protects the liquor seller and secures for him immunity from the penalties attending the violation of constitutional law.

Prohibitionists denounce as the crime of crimes, not the sale of liquor, but the legalizing of such sale. They declare the national sin to be, not drunkenness nor even drunkard making as such, but government sanction and protection of the drunkard makers. They "persist in denouncing" as the supreme shame and disgrace to this nation, not the saloon, but the partnership of the people in and consequent legalization of this universally acknowledged agency for the production of a vast criminal and pauper population.

Prohibitionists do not need to be reminded that under our present system any man has "liberty" to sell intoxicating liquor; has "liberty" under the civil law to "earn a livelihood" by destroying the bodies and souls of men—to live by dealing out death to his neighbor and conditions far worse than death to his neighbor's wife and children; has "liberty" to build up his own fortunes at the expense of the nation's prosperity and honor! Those who do need reminding of these things are the good "temperance people" who vote with the liquor parties.

Old party Prohibitionists are the people who apparently regard the act of selling liquor as a more heinous crime than the act of legalizing such sale; for while vehemently denouncing the business they persist in supporting political parties which are controlled by the (according to their view) worst of criminals, the liquor sellers. To these people, then, we Prohibitionists heartily join with the liquor editor in commending this paragraph from the anti-dispensary decision. They are to be found, we regret to say, mostly in our churches and in the "moral element" of society.

There are certain fraternities which admit no liquor seller to membership, and clubs whose doors are closed to the man who stands behind the bar, while at the same time among their most honored members are men who are helping to build up the business they thus ostracise and condemn—to build it up, if not by direct and personal patronage, by a way equally effective at the ballot-box.

We do not wish to be understood as opposing the action of fraternities, religious or secular, in thus adding to the disrepute of the liquor business. We regard it as a decided victory for temperance principles when any organization ostracises the man who stands nearest to the public as representative of the drink traffic. Every loyal Prohibitionist who "belonged" would, if opportunity offered, vote out the saloon-keeper; but while so doing he is not so inconsistent as to vote in legal protection to the very industry he thus denounces. Any organization which shuts out the drink-seller shows by this action that it looks upon the sale of liquor as a crime against the moral if not the civil law, and in recognizing the business as an evil every man who votes with a liquor party incriminates himself.

We thank God and take courage that Christian voters and friends of humanity generally are coming to see the inconsistency of making legally right that which they acknowledge is morally wrong. Events such as have transpired, and are transpiring in South Carolina and in Iowa and other prohibition localities, are serving in a most potent manner to facilitate the great awakening, and to hasten the day when the protection of the liquor traffic by civil law shall be recognized by an overwhelming majority of American citizens as a greater crime against God and man than the traffic itself.

A TESTLESS TEST."

It is being industriously said, not "by them of old time," but by those of new interpretations, that "an added test" is now applied to members in the National W. C. T. U. For this statement there is no foundation, but its frequent reiteration by some of those who are unfriendly to the Temple enterprise makes it proper for us to call attention to the fact that total abstinence as a personal practice and ten cents a year per member constitute the only "tests" imposed by the National W. C. T. U.

In her last annual address our President (having learned that some of the officers of the society had given the public reason to believe that they were unfriendly to the Temple enterprise, which is an affiliated interest of the National W. C. T. U.) made the following statement:

At the distance from which I send this address I have been unable adequately to hear both sides, and it is far from my intention to impute bad motives to good people. This much, however, may be said, and I think it ought to be said by the President of the National W. C. T. U., namely, that while it is true that in so great an undertaking as the building of a Temple like ours, there is room for two opinions, nay, for many—and the widest latitude should be allowed to personal conviction—the fact remains that if any of the officers elected by the National society (who in the intervals of the annual meetings stand as our representatives) are, or have been, unfriendly to the Temple, or to any other of our affiliated interests, they have owed it to themselves, and owe it now, as well as to the convention, frankly to say so before allowing their names to be used as candidates for reëlection. A house divided against itself cannot stand in philanthropy any more than in politics. The leaders of a movement must agree about the interests concerning which the convention has pronounced its judgment, and if they cannot accept that judgment, it is not for the interest of the association to place them in positions where their very inertia—to say nothing of their momentum—will block the wheels and dissipate the power.

No fair-minded person will fail to see that this position is perfectly just and that no society can succeed that continues in office those who are opposed to enterprises that it has officially indorsed, and it was the plain but unpleasant duty of the President to call attention to this fact. This duty she reluctantly performed but every intelligent and candid person knows that "tests of membership" can only be embodied in the constitution and by-laws of a society under which membership is alone possible, and these tests are as they have been from the first, total abstinence in the individual and a small fixed tax annually to help the parent society to carry on its work.

Let it, then, be clearly understood that no "test" of membership was imposed (as the annual address of the President is but the expression of her individual opinion), and that what she said related only to the general officers and involved no new principle but one as old as the history of associated efforts, viz., that those who permit themselves officially to represent an organization must not take a position antagonistic to the declared will of that organization, and if candidates for reëlection must frankly state beforehand wherein they cannot conscientiously represent the action of those on whose votes their reëlection depends.

A MODERN INSTANCE.

The following recital was recently made to us by a stalwart temperance man:

"I had been a drinking man for twenty years, had ruined my chances in life and made my family wretched. I did not believe in God or humanity. A whisky-soaked brain is not adapted to any noble form of faith, either for this world or that which is to come. One day about seventeen years ago, when I returned from the shop to my little home, which was bare of almost every comfort, to say nothing of luxuries, my wife told me that a lady had been to see us, and left an orange apiece for the three children and some pretty cards, with a 'Merry Christmas' for us all. Nobody ever came to our house those days, and I was surprised, for this lady was the wife of one of the trustees in the great university, a business man who stood very high, and she had plenty of money, position, education and occupation. Indeed, she had everything that we had not. So I sat myself down to try to reason out some bad motive for her coming, as it was my custom then to look for bad motives in people rather than good ones. But as her husband was not in politics and could not desire my vote, and as he was not in any business where I could by any means be of service to him, and as neither he nor she could gain anything from us, although I racked my brain to find something that they could gain, I was obliged to say to myself, 'It must have been what Christians call the "Love of God"!' and when I had come to this conclusion my heart melted a little, and I said to myself, 'If it is true that there is such a thing as the love of God I shall reform,' and from that day I have never tasted intoxicating liquors."

"WHAT do you think of the World's W. C. T. U. work?" we asked Mrs. Andrew and Dr. Bushnell during their brief call recently. "Our work has been so different this past year from the years before," they replied. "It has been almost entirely in mission fields, where the temperance leaders are greatly overtaxed in other directions, yet we found excellent workers. India is looking up; Miss Ruth Ranney, in Burmah, is most earnest and active, and there is a splendid band in Singapore. In China we have six strong unions, Shanghai having three, one of English speaking people and two for the native women. Japan seemed to realize that dear Miss West was overtaxed in their field and treated us most considerately. Mrs. Yajima, the president, is most faithful; and Miss Denton, of Kyoto, and Miss Daughaday, of Totori, are leading American workers. At Kobe, Nagasaki and Tokyo excellent work is being accomplished. Mr. Sho Nemoto was very kind and helpful to us, as he has been to all of our organizers and lecturers. We wish to correct the impression that some of the California papers gave that we left Japan because of the plague. There is no plague as yet in Japan, but it is feared, and all outgoing and incoming vessels were being strictly watched, and a quarantine was so imminent that we thought it best to come home a little earlier than we had planned, and realize now that, as we were all along impressed, it was the Lord's leading. Even the next boat would not have brought us home soon enough to catch the steamer for England in time for the important federation meetings." The period of their work in England is very indefinite, but it will probably not extend beyond October. The report of the royal commission has just come before Parliament, and later the anti-opium crusade will begin.

REV. DR. FRANCIS BOTTOME, the well-known writer of hymns, and for many years pastor of important Methodist churches in New York city and vicinity, died recently while on a visit to his son in England. Dr. Bottome was the husband of Mrs. Margaret Bottome, president of the order of the King's Daughters. Both husband and wife were of English parentage and birth. The tender sympathy of a great many groups of Christian workers goes forth to Mrs. Bottome in this sudden bereavement. It is well known that she has been for years a white ribbon woman, and her bright presence lent an added charm to several of our National Conventions. At the recent welcome given our President in New York city, Mrs. Bottome made one of the most hearty and effective addresses. She is now with friends at Newport, R. I., where we hope she may recruit from the labors that organizations necessarily demand of those who represent them, and where we know that the renewing of the Spirit will descend upon her in abundant measure, soothing the wound that time, reflection and the uplift of the soul toward God shall ultimately heal.

IN this country we are better prepared to do what John Burns, the great labor leader in England, declares to be their method, namely: To revolutionize by reform rather than to reform by revolution. It is said that Carlyle "believed in a God who lived until the death of Oliver Cromwell"; we must believe in a God who, while He is not as Napoleon declared, "always on the side of the strongest battalions" is Himself not only the battalion but the Old Guard, which not only never dies but never surrenders.

In this hot month of August no drink is so refreshing and wholesome as cold lemonade. A person who is inclined to be bilious can safely use three or four lemons a day. Those who are accustomed to lemonade as it is ordinarily prepared know nothing of the delicious taste of the "perfection method" which On Duty can personally recommend. It is made in this way: For a quart take the juice of three lemons, using the rind of one of them. Carefully peel the rind very thin, getting just the yellow outside; cut this into small pieces and put with the juice and four tablespoons granulated sugar into a jug or jar with a cover. When the water is just at the boiling point, pour it over the lemon and sugar, cover at once and let it get cold; add ice just before using.

A coarse fellow recently laughed uproariously in derision when he saw a young woman riding a bicycle in Lincoln Park, Chicago, but his arrest was speedily caused by the plucky damsel whom he had offended, and the spirit of chivalry in the breasts of American men was illustrated by the fine of twenty-five dollars promptly imposed by a Chicago magistrate. It is the fashion to speak lightly of the great progressive city by the lake, but we think this simple incident shows a forward movement toward the higher civilization with which few European cities could compete.

Phillips Brooks' fund of humor used to "crop out" in verse occasionally, but it was always noticeable that the grave quickly followed the gay, for the earnest purpose of his life could not be long concealed. Here is a good example, written on viewing a caricature of himself, soon after he was made bishop:

"And is this, then, the way he looks,
This tiresome creature, Phillips Brooks?
No wonder, if 'tis thus he looks,
The church has doubts of Phillips Brooks.
Well, if he knows himself, he'll try
To give these doubtful looks the lie.
He dares not promise, but will seek
Even as a Bishop to be meek;
To walk the way he shall be shown
To trust a strength that's not his own,
To fill the years with honest work,
To serve his day and not to shirk;
To quite forget what folks have said,
To keep his heart and keep his head;
Until men, laying him to rest,
Shall say, 'At least, he did his best.'"

A happy expedient was devised by Mrs. Hobbs, vice-president of the National Temperance Hospital, at the time of the strike, for, as she was a staunch white-ribboner, she was unwilling to take off her badge, and so she wore it with a small American flag pinned by its side. There could have been no doubt as to the sentiments held by one who thus claimed the national colors as part and parcel of the white flag of peace and purity which forms the insignia of the W. C. T. U.

A bill for the personal surveillance of women on the streets of Cambridge, Eng., has passed the House of Commons in face of the protest of the British Women's Temperance Association. It is evident that in order to establish in law an equal standard of purity and decency of conduct for men and women the votes of both will be required so that two great reforms wait for the reinforcement of the women's ballot.

Dr. J. W. Bashford, president of the Ohio Wesleyan University, at Delaware, Ohio, writes thus to a friend in regard to the degree recently conferred on Miss Frances E. Willard: "I feel prouder over this degree than over any other which this university has ever bestowed. I believe that everybody is proud of our action, and I like to hear them use the word 'our' in speaking of it. This degree would have been conferred upon Miss Willard at least fifteen or twenty years ago had she been a man. Why should we wait until she is in her grave before we try to show our appreciation! She has earned the honor, nobly earned it over and over again by her prophetic foresight, the breadth of her statesmanship, her unfailing charity, her power to inspire multitudes, and above all, by her unselfish devotion for the highest good of others. I feel that she honors the university in adding this title to her name far more than we have honored her in conferring it."

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

TEXAS.

TWELFTH ANNUAL CONVENTION.

Our convention met in Taylor June 15. Many of the delegates arrived on the 14th, and the evening was devoted to a gold medal contest. Nine contestants, wearing the Demorest silver medal and coming from all parts of the state, were greeted by a good audience. All spoke well. We were proud of them. The judges awarded the medal to Miss Nellie Brown, of Taylor, who recited "The Voice from the Poor-house."

The convention met in the Christian church, the largest in the city, handsome and well adapted to our needs. It was beautifully decorated with potted plants, cut flowers, gray moss, United States flags, and banners from unions and L. T. L's from all over the state.

Mrs. Helen M. Stoddard, state president, presided with her usual dignity and ease. All the officers were present except Mrs. Jennie Dixon, recording secretary. Mrs. Cornelia Keith Carter was elected to fill her place during the convention.

The first day was devoted to the usual routine work of appointing committees and hearing reports from various superintendents. Quite a number of the superintendents were absent, and sent written reports.

Friday evening was set apart for addresses of welcome and the response. The first address was delivered by Mr. W. F. Robeson, a young lawyer, the "substituted mayor," as the mayor was really ill. The welcome was very cordial.

Then followed addresses by Rev. J. B. Sweeney, of the Christian church, Rev. E. A. Smith, of the Methodist, and Rev. Mr. Whipky, of the Baptist. After hearing them no one could doubt that we had the hearty indorsement and Godspeed of those ministers, and my experience is that we have it of the majority of Texas preachers.

Mr. P. O. Wilson spoke in behalf of the press. We were told that he said he had not tried to speak in public since he was fourteen, but with the peculiar ease with which Americans assume the role of orator, he threw wide the columns of the press in general and of his own paper in particular.

Mrs. H. T. McLain, in a few choice sentences, welcomed us in the name of the local W. C. T. U.

Then followed Mr. U. S. G. Plank for the Y. M. C. A. In introducing him, Mrs. Stoddard said she supposed his initials stood for United States Government, and after his speech said she wished we could have a whole platform of that kind of planks.

Then the children of the Taylor L. T. L. welcomed us in a beautifully rendered concert selection.

The response to the addresses of welcome was delivered by Mrs. Rebecca R. Calhoun, of Fort Worth. It scintillated with wit and humor.

Saturday morning was taken up largely in the reading of reports as no verbal ones were allowed.

Several visitors were presented, among others, Miss Ogden, a former missionary of the M. E. church in Chili and Mexico.

By vote, the constitution was changed so that instead of five division presidents we now have fifteen district secretaries. Another change was making the officers of the local unions members of the convention. This was done that we might secure reduced rates on the railroad, the long, expensive journey keeping many delegates at home.

Saturday afternoon was the election of officers. Mrs. Stoddard was elected president with but two dissenting votes. She was greeted with the Chautauqua salute and "Praise God from whom all blessings flow." Miss Hattie Henderson and Mrs. J. A. S. Curtis, our faithful corresponding secretary and treasurer, were reëlected by large majorities. Miss Mitchell, of Austin, was elected recording secretary and accepted the honor in a modest little speech.

Saturday evening was consumed in the reading of the president's annual address, Mrs. Carter in the chair. The address reviewed the work of the year and made us all feel that a great deal had been accomplished. It was lightened by many bright touches that a sympathetic audience appreciated. In referring to the time-honored figure of the oak and the vine, she told us of a remarkable instance that had come under her own observation in Florida. A strong vine twined around an oak until it reached the top, then leaped across to a taller magnolia tree, whose flowers so pure and white always reminded the beholder of angels. "Woodman, spare that tree," was said in vain and the ax was laid to the roots of the oak. The woodman sprang away to escape the falling tree. Imagine his surprise to see it lifted high in the air in an inverted position close to the top of the magnolia, drawn there by the clinging vine. So it is that woman clings to the man, that she may draw him to the angels. This "brought down the house."

At the close of the address Mrs. Stoddard was presented with "A Great Mother" in the name of the convention, by Mrs. Carter, who said, "As you have a great mother and your son has a great mother, we do not know of any one to whom it could be more appropriately presented."

Sunday was the great day of the feast. We had the honor to have with us Mrs. Clara C. Hoffman. She had made many useful suggestions, and conducted our devotional services several times during the convention. At eleven o'clock the church was full, and men were standing in a row all around the wall. Mrs. Hoffman's text was, "The iniquities of the fathers shall be visited upon the children unto the third and fourth generations of them that hate me." It was a terrible arraignment of the parents who by drunkenness and uncleanness bring not only poverty and disgrace but idiocy and insanity upon their innocent children. I was sitting where I could look at the speaker and a long line of men as they leaned against the wall, and I've rarely seen anything more interesting than the play of expression on their faces, as they absorbed every word she uttered. One man came to Mrs. Stoddard afterward, and said: "The church that would shut the mouth of a woman who can speak like that will be cursed of God."

Sunday afternoon memorial services were conducted by the president for Mrs. Sherrard and Mrs. Harrison, and the mother of Mrs. Lizzie Johnston, whose name I cannot recall.

From the Christian church we went to the Baptist, where the largest L. T. L. in the state holds its meetings. They have over three hundred members; there were present more than one hundred and fifty. It was inspiring to see them—just like a large Sunday-school. It was a goodly sight to notice three gentlemen teaching classes. Miss Maggie Angus, the embodiment of energy, is the superintendent. Mrs. Yates, of Corsicana, gave the children a most interesting account of the L. T. L. in the State Orphans' Home, where one hundred and fifty children wear the white ribbon. Miss Fanny Armstrong, in her characteristic way, made them a little talk on unfermented wine.

Sunday night Mrs. Hoffman spoke again in the Christian church. The building was packed. It was estimated that there were five hundred men standing on the pavement outside the windows. Her subject was "Woman in the Bible." I shall not attempt even a word of praise. All our strong adjectives have been misused until they mean nothing. The men testified their appreciation by giving $150 to the general work, when Mrs. Curtis appealed to them. One man handed in ten dollars through the window. Altogether Taylor gave us $250 during the convention. This lovely little city, with its hospitable people, will long be associated in our minds with the memory of the best convention ever held in Texas.

The children added greatly to our pleasure. When business became a little monotonous, Miss Angus would march her L. T. L. in, and give us a song or recitation. One day the L. T. L. from Hutto, a neighboring town, came in one hundred strong and sang "Saloons must go," then marched out to a picnic dinner at the pavilion. The convention was invited to join them, and many did so.

Your reporter missed the faces of our evangelists, Mrs. Haughton and Mrs. Sweeney, and Mrs. Canfield, the recording secretary, and Mrs. Barnum, the sweet singer, who led our music last year.

There were a number of invitations for the convention next year, but the executive committee decided to go to Hillsboro, as it has such a fine union, and is near the center of the state.

VERMONT.

ANNUAL GROVE MEETING.

The W. C. T. U. of our state is to hold a grove meeting, commencing August 7, and closing the 17th. A meeting similar to this was held one year ago in the same place. It is hoped that all of those who attended last year will come again, and bring their friends with them.

This lovely place, called Spring Grove, on account of its never-failing spring of ice-cold water, is situated in the town of New Haven, midway between Burlington and Rutland, on the Central Vermont Railroad. Cottages can be obtained at reasonable rates, and good meals at a convenient boarding house. Ample provision will be made for all that desire to attend.

It is a quiet, restful place for the women who wear the white ribbon to go. Situated as it is among our grand old mountains, amid the rich verdure of the rolling meadows, with the bracing air fresh from the hills, what more desirable place could be selected?

A fine program will be carried out. One day will be given to home missions and one day to foreign missions. The state Sabbath-school association will be given one day, and rescue work will be given a place. Mrs. Whittemore, of New York city, will speak August 15, assisted by other able speakers.

Dr. W. N. Brodbeck will speak August 14, also Miss Cummings, missionary from Africa. It is expected that Mrs. Esther T. Housh, Vermont's honorary president, will be present at this meeting. Other temperance workers have been invited to be present. With so many efficient speakers the meeting cannot be other than successful. Any information will be gladly given by our state president, Mrs. Ida H. Read, Shelburne.

CONVENTIONS.

Caledonia county held its annual spring convention, closing with a Demorest medal contest.

Orleans county convention was held in Irasburg in May. This town is so situated that almost every union could reach it by a lovely carriage drive. One of the best things of the convention was an original poem by Rev. F. B. Phelps, entitled, "The Second Deluge." The greatest increase in membership was in Irasburg union so they were awarded the county banner. Mrs. Read and Miss Leavitt added great interest by their encouraging and helpful addresses.

Addison county held its annual convention in Middleburg, June 6 and 7. Through the untiring exertions of the county president, it was a success from first to last. The remarks by Mrs. Clinton Smith, of Washington, D. C., on the liquor traffic in that city, were listened to with great attention. The convention closed Wednesday evening with an address by Mrs. J. K. Barney. Special mention is made of the hearty coöperation of Rev. C. F. Noble. His cordial welcome and earnest endeavor to do all in his power helped to make the convention a complete success.

As Mrs. Helen G. Rice closed her address at the Windham county convention, a beautiful white butterfly circled about her face, and as she uttered the last word it settled down restfully upon her head like a benediction upon all she had said. The white knot of ribbon on her bosom, the pure white butterfly on her head, formed a picture emblematic of purity and peace, and almost involuntarily many whispered, "How beautiful!" "What a fitting symbol!" Her words of cheer and blessing could not have had a more lovely seal set upon them than the fruit they may bear in the lives of her hearers.

VARIOUS NOTES.

The Chelsea Y's held their tenth anniversary meeting in May. Two of the charter members were present and one visitor became a member, making three recently added.

Dr. Minnie G. Leavitt has been doing efficient work in organizing in Caledonia and Orleans county.

Miss Alice M. Guernsey, of Rutland, asks the boys and girls of Vermont L. T. L. to contribute to the fund for the room in the Temperance Hospital, Chicago.

A new union has been formed at Westfield, Orleans county.

The union in Topsham reports good work. It is a small town, but the members of the W. C. T. U. have for their motto, "Let your light shine." At a lawn party helpful words were spoken by the pastors, also earnest words of encouragement by Mrs. R. R. Johnston, the first president of the union, and who for several years was president of the state of California. They have raised money to purchase seventy-five volumes of the best reading, thus furnishing the young people mental improvement and literary culture.

At the reception breakfast given to Miss Frances Willard, in Boston, Vermont was well represented, Mrs. Ida H. Read and others being present.

We are cheered and encouraged that Miss Willard has returned to her native home with renewed health and vigor.

The sisters in Vermont send her greeting. For

"We tread one path, know one high aim,
Our hopes, our fears, our toils the same."

RHODE ISLAND.

FLOWER MISSION DAY AND CONVENTIONS.

The observance of flower mission day grows from year to year, and many are set to thinking of those who, for some reason, are put aside from the activities of life.

Phenix and Apponaug, with their friends, about fifty-five in all, visited the town almshouse at Warwick. After a pleasing program a bountiful collation was served, and some useful article presented to each inmate.

Thirty-six from Central Falls visited the Lincoln poor farm, and each member took an offering.

At East Greenwich the union remembered the prisoners with papers and flowers and personal conversation.

With each bouquet was an envelope, inscribed, "With the compliments of the W. C. T. U." containing the leaflet, "The Ministry of Flowers," written for the occasion by Miss Myra Loomis.

Mrs. Wallace spoke to the inmates of the city asylum at Newport on "The Light of the World." Cake and candy were freely distributed, and literature was supplied.

Bristol and other unions observed the day in a similar way. Two of our workers at headquarters went to visit one of our number who has been stricken with illness and partial blindness, carrying a beautiful flowering plant and words of good cheer.

L. T. L. boys and girls carried flowers to the sick in various places, and were made glad in bringing happiness to others.

Three district conventions have recently been held. That of the third district met at Warren. Two of the addresses were by our state officers, one on "Social Purity," by Mrs. Babcock, and one on "Seed Sowing," by Miss Nichols. Mrs. Babcock also gave an interesting account of the International Temperance Congress. Mrs. Chase presented her department of scientific temperance instruction in an able paper. Seven unions were represented, and as the roll was called each responded with a helpful thought. "It was of the best, all of it," was the general verdict.

The Christian Baptist church, of Westerly, opened wide its doors to welcome our convention there. Beautiful flowers in profusion gave their message, and tables laden with good things gave further proof, if that were needed, of Westerly hospitality. A praise service was followed by a testimony meeting. Mrs. J. K. Barney brought her word of cheer. She said that never in her connection with the work had she felt so restful in it as now. Mrs. Collins gave the address of welcome, and later on spoke a few words of farewell, as she leaves soon to make her home in Maine. We are glad for the workers that she will find there, but her Rhode Island friends are more than sorry at the thought of her departure from their midst.

Many bankers in the town came in to listen to the noontide Bible reading by Mrs. Barney. Mrs. Babcock's report of the reception given to Miss Willard in New York was eagerly listened to, as were all the addresses, and Mrs. Barney's lecture in the evening formed a fitting climax to a day well spent.

A convention, with organization of the district, took place at East Greenwich with a pleasing and profitable program, so that now all our districts but one are organized, and we hope that the new plan may result in growing interest and enlarged power.

An occurrence which has created wide remark is best described by a clipping from the Outlook:

"The general assembly of the state of Rhode Island has enacted a law requiring that public schools shall methodically so instruct pupils as to guard them against the perils of alcoholic beverages.

"In the city of Pawtucket, a young man about to graduate from the high school, doubtless influenced by the teachings provided by law, prepared for his graduating oration an essay on 'A Nation's Curse.'

"His topic was selected several months ago, and approved by the teacher in charge, with full knowledge of its intended application, but, a fortnight before graduation, the young orator was notified by authority of the Pawtucket school superintendent that his essay would be suppressed. The reasons of the superintendent are stated in his own words as follows:

"'I take the broad and general ground that at a graduation exercise no essay should be read that reflects upon the life or occupation of the parent of any member of the graduating class. Neither the head of the family nor any other member of it, wife, sister, daughter, mother, brother, son, should be lectured either directly or indirectly on such an occasion when the proprieties of the time and place forbid a reply. The innocent at least should be shielded, and I would say the same if gambling or any other form of vice were the point of attack.'"

It is an encouraging sign that when the young man went forward to receive his diploma, he was greeted with enthusiastic applause, and his essay, through the columns of several papers, has reached a far larger audience than were present at the graduation.

HERE AND THERE.

Portsmouth held a parlor meeting at the home of Mrs. Gardner Sherman. Miss Jessie Allen gave an excellent address. The L. T. L. of that place held a public meeting with an interesting program including a memorial service for their late president, Jennie Tallman, who died last February.

Saunderstown union, organized last October with ten members, now numbers thirty-five.

Rest Cottage was formally dedicated on June 2, when a large number of friends were present, coming by the way of the steamer from Providence and by carriages from the surrounding country. Donations have been most liberal and the house is free from debt. Two circles of King's Daughters have each furnished a room, and two other rooms have been furnished by friends. The house was opened for boarders July 2.

The Providence Y's are active in all departments. The literature committee has enlarged its work by establishing a table for the boys in the waiting room of the postal telegraph and district messenger service, which is highly appreciated. About 4,500 pages of literature have been circulated. The tea room is remarkably prosperous, considering the depressed condition of business.

Woonsocket has had a delightful outdoor meeting with addresses by our president and corresponding secretary. It was held under the spreading branches of a grand old walnut tree, and after the pleasures of the formal hour, strawberries, cake and ice cream lent their aid to make every one social and happy.

Providence union held a memorial service at the Home, with readings and addresses. Mrs. Partington, a member of the I. O. G. T., and a white-ribboner as well, gave touching incidents of the war.

Usquepaugh union celebrated the Fourth by a picnic at Yauzoo Lake.

NEW JERSEY.

SUMMER SCHOOL OF METHODS.

As usual the white-ribboners took the initiative at Ocean Grove this summer. The object of the school is to give and receive practical instructions concerning the best methods for the prosecution of the temperance reform and to educate public opinion to demand legal prohibition of the traffic. The audiences were distinctively cosmopolitan, composed of representatives from all parts of the country, though New York, Philadelphia and various cities of New Jersey were most largely represented. Great unanimity prevailed in all the deliberations. The "school" began on the morning of July 5. Three sessions were held each day, Mrs. Emma Bourne, the efficient state president, presiding. Colonel Hadley, of the Rescue Mission, New York, spoke regarding rescue mission work. Miss Cora L. Peck read a paper on "What can Young People's Church Societies do for Temperance?" This was followed by a discussion which was participated in by a number in the audience. The speakers thought that the Christian Endeavor Societies, with their vigor and enthusiasm along all lines, could be looked to for great help in the temperance cause. Delegates from different counties of New Jersey gave an account of the work that the young people's societies of the various churches of their localities were doing for temperance.

Mrs. M. W. Gwindon, of New York city, who had charge of the music of the meetings, sang, with fine effect, a number of solos.

Mrs. Anna Cairns, state secretary of King's Daughters of New Jersey, and Hudson county superintendent of the W. C. T. U., spoke on what young people can do in the temperance cause.

Mrs. E. Thatcher read a paper on "Finance and the W. C. T. U." Mrs. Thatcher held that state secretaries should receive a salary of fifty dollars per month.

As the clock struck twelve each day the business of the meeting was suspended and the workers bowed their heads in prayer.

Miss B. Cassatt, of Massachusetts, delivered an interesting address on "Physical Culture and the Voice." "Spiritual grace," she said, "would be transmitted into outward grace."

Miss Anna Lutz read a carefully prepared paper on "Wherefore a Y?" Alice Walkins, a little five-year old girl from Philadelphia, gave a recitation, "Down with King Alcohol."

Miss J. Clark read an excellent paper on "What is Our Shibboleth?"

Mrs. T. M. Moore, of Passaic, read an able paper on "Total Abstinence in the Home." She said in part: "The parent's vices as well as his virtues will reappear in his children. The moral character of our children is not likely to be better than our own. Children may learn the theory of virtue from teachers outside of home, but they learn the practice of it best inside the home, from the lives of the father and mother. A parent should not make the mistake of thinking that, if his example is only moderately bad, it will not injure his children. It is the moderately bad example that is apt to prove a snare and a deception, while the very bad example would have no influence.

"A parent's minor vices do not appear to his children to be vices at all, and so are likely to be imitated; on the other hand, a very bad example shows for itself the penalty that belongs to it and so is not likely to be followed. A mother may be able to warn her children with great effect against the habit of the father when he has become a slave to his appetite for drink, for he has become an object of disgust, but, if he drinks but moderately how can she, in the face of his example, admonish them with any good effect?"

Mrs. H. B. Anderson presented "Total Abstinence in the Sunday-School"; Mrs. C. E. Moorhead spoke on "Total Abstinence in Society." She said that women only can make wine drinking unfashionable, and urged them, as a sacred duty, to use their influence against the social wine cup which had been the ruin of so many.

Mrs. Matthews, of London, organizer of the British Women's Temperance Association, delivered the closing address of the afternoon. She spoke especially in regard to the wonderful effect of personal influence in the temperance work.

Governor Hughes, of Arizona, was introduced and was greeted with the Chautauqua salute, the audience rising and waving handkerchiefs. The governor made a brief but very interesting address.

Dr. E. H. Stokes, president of the Ocean Grove camp-meeting association, gave the W. C. T. U. a cordial welcome, and strongly advocated woman's suffrage, which the good doctor believes will be a great help to the prohibition cause.

Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, of Boston, delivered one of her characteristically interesting addresses on her work for scientific temperance instruction in the public schools.

One of the interesting features of the morning was the free parliament and the discussion on "How to Extend State Work." Among the speakers were Mrs. Parsons and Mrs. Patterson.

Mrs. M. E. Thornley, of Ontario, gave an instructive talk on "Gleanings from Canadian Fields."

Mrs. I. H. Demarest spoke on the "Relation of Local to State Woman's Christian Temperance Unions."

A discussion on "What Next, and How Shall We Do It?" was participated in by Mrs. C. E. Moorhead, Mrs. Forest, of Philadelphia, and Dr. Dorman, of Connecticut.

A large audience assembled in the Temple Friday evening for the closing session of the school. After devotions, Mrs. Bourne, the presiding officer, introduced Mr. I. C. Martin, of New York city, who made a few remarks. Following this, Mayor Hilton, from Washington, was introduced and spoke on the "Evils of High License."

Miss L. E. Holmes gave a recitation, "The Two Stars," (Wyoming and Colorado.)

Dr. Anna Shaw was expected to deliver the closing address, but was unable to be present, so Mrs. Matthews, of London, kindly spoke in her place.

DELAWARE.

TWO COUNTY CONVENTIONS.

A conference of the Kent workers met at Clayton, and the Sussex county convention was held at Seaford. About forty delegates were in attendance at Seaford, and all the unions of Kent county were represented but one. Both meetings were held in the M. E. church. The pastors, Rev. Mr. Turner, then of Clayton, and Rev. C. W. Prettyman, of Seaford, extended greetings. There were seven ministers present at Clayton; two presiding elders—Rev. Mr. Smith and Rev. Mr. Adams. An excellent address was given by Rev. Mr. Smith, and words of Godspeed from the Rev. J. S. Wickline and other ministers at the Sussex convention were much appreciated.

Mrs. Sallie Hoffecker gave the address of welcome at Clayton, and Mrs. Imogene Clifton the response. At Seaford greetings were given by Mother Jefferson, and the response by our state recording secretary, Mrs. Marguerite H. Green. Mrs. M. S. Cranston was in attendance at both conventions, and ready to champion her department, franchise.

Mrs. Abbie L. Fisher, president of Sussex county, was unable to attend the convention but sent her annual address which was read and accepted. Miss Margaret S. Hilles, our state president, presided in her place, and made an appeal for the Girls' Industrial Home. The Clayton conference was also favored with the presence of Miss Hilles, who contributed to the interest of the meeting. Mrs. Kate E. Smithers, president of Kent county, presided.

The officers of each county were reëlected. The reports of unions showed persistency in the different lines of work. Juvenile work was reported by Miss Ara Hynson, one of the superintendents of the Smyrna L. T. L. Clayton union reported an increase in membership of eleven since last October, the largest gain in the county. An encouraging report was given of Little Creek, a new union. They have added to their number twelve honorary members and an L. T. L. The fractional license law was freely discussed and scientific temperance instruction was also presented.

Young woman's work was reported by Miss Margaret Hammond, of Camden. The church choirs kindly furnished music for the different meetings. Rev. Henrietta G. Moore was in attendance and rendered efficient service in the business meetings and addressed large and attentive audiences in the evening. Miss Moore made a general tour of the state last autumn and in the spring and did much good work. Her return is always a pleasant anticipation.

The Bible lessons given at these conventions by our state superintendent of evangelistic work, Mrs. R. H. Matlack, were full of deep, spiritual convictions.

MARYLAND.

CONFERENCES AND CITIZENSHIP.

Maryland notes have been long in materializing, but Maryland work has gone steadily forward.

Among the events of much interest since my last letter was the conference of the young women's unions held in Baltimore, and ably presided over by Miss Anne R. Stewart, state secretary of this branch of the work. Miss Frances Ensign, of Ohio, was with the conference throughout the session and gave invaluable aid in a parliamentary drill and in various other ways.

Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, of New York, was present also, during part of the session, conducting a question-box and inspiring the girls through a Bible reading and in other ways to further and nobler efforts for Christ.

One point of much interest dwelt upon by Miss Ensign in an evening address here, was the difference between the "good old times" of the past, when employers were expected to treat their employés to liquor, and the present time, when a premium is put upon total abstainers by business men, and this is insisted upon by the railroad companies in their selection of employés.

The reports of work throughout the state were most encouraging. An informal reception was among the many pleasing features of this successful conference. Miss Stewart was reëlected unanimously as secretary and organizer.

Miss Ensign spoke subsequently at several places in the state, some of which have been reported, namely, Chestertown, Winchester, Fords and Ridgely, and again in Baltimore, making everywhere a favorable impression and doing good service.

Another event of much interest in this time was the visit to Baltimore of Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, of Boston. Mrs. Hunt's fine personality and choice diction never appeared to better advantage here than on this occasion. Mrs. Hunt spoke at Mount Vernon M. E. Church, at the Associate Reformed church, and at a meeting in Levering Hall, of the Johns Hopkins University. The last address was to the educators of Baltimore, personal invitations having been sent to each by the Baltimore city union. Among those on the platform at this meeting were Rev. Dr. J. F. Goucher, of the Woman's College, Baltimore, Mr. John T. Morris, president of the school board, Dr. J. Carey Thomas and Mr. H. A. Wise, superintendent of the public schools. The success of these meetings was due mainly to the excellent management and labors of Mrs. G. P. Everhart and Mrs. E. A. Robinson, both indefatigable workers for the cause. The daily press was most kind and responsive.

The annual meetings of county unions have been led off by the union of Kent county, and, as usual with this union, most successfully. An unusual feature of this convention was the award of prizes to school children for essays in the department of scientific temperance instruction. For the first class prize, ten dollars, there were nine contestants, for the second, eight dollars, there were nine, and for the third, five dollars, there were eight contestants. The winner in each class was a girl, though a young man came within a small fraction of being the winner in the first class, and received accordingly honorable mention.

The admirable address of the many-times elected president, Mrs. L. M. Corey, was prefaced with these remarks: "I am liable to be accused in what I say of repeating the same or similar ideas only in different form. I am reminded in this of a preacher of whom I read, who preached his first sermon at a new appointment and gave great satisfaction. After repeating this sermon, however, for several successive Sabbaths, he was questioned in regard to it. 'I will preach another,' was his reply, 'when they have practiced all of that.'"

And undoubtedly this is a difficulty that meets all who serve for several terms in the same office, the difficulty of saying to much the same people anything new in regard to the work when for many reasons the hearers have not practiced all that has been said before.

Favorable reports of work have been received recently from Baltimore, Caroline, Cecil, Harford, Talbot, Queen Anne's and Worcester counties, from Hurlock union, Dorchester county, and from Baltimore city.

A special election to decide between high license and prohibition, held in Cambridge, Dorchester county, since my last letter resulted in 343 votes for prohibition out of the 550 polled.

A definition of the word "citizen" reached and acted upon by the Maryland Historical Society recently, is of much interest, as the membership of the society is of fine material. A committee was appointed by the society to consider the question of admitting women to membership, and in its report said among other pertinent things, "The constitution of this organization, which was compiled in 1844, provided that all eligible members must be citizens. It was for us to reach the true interpretation of the word 'citizen' before we could delve deeper in the matter." . . . The committee took, therefore, the broad, not the popular idea of the interpretation of the word "citizen" and reached the conclusion that it means women as well as men. For this reason we make it known that from this time and henceforth lady citizens are eligible as members of the Maryland Historical society." The report was received with great applause and was unanimously adopted.

The last movement on the part of the state union has been to take upon itself again the publication of a state paper—The White Ribbon Herald, which for lack of an editor, mainly, the union was obliged to relinquish some time ago. But the need of a paper was felt so keenly, after having experienced the benefit of a publication of the kind, that the state executive committee exerted itself to find an editor and to start the paper.

And, as the law of evolution is nowhere manifested more fully and frequently than among the members of the W. C. T. U., the once shy superintendent of different departments, too timid at first to read her own papers, the braver state corresponding secretary and the long-time writer for THE UNION SIGNAL from Maryland finds herself blazoned in her little world as editor of this paper.

Surely there is no agency on earth that leads women to dare so much as does the W. C. T. U. And surely in no organization are there so many women who must look at themselves mentally, many a time in wonderment at their seeming presumption, and somewhat as the old woman, the victim of the wag on the king's highway, looked at herself, questioning, "Can this be I?" The old rhyme of our childhood days, "Try, try again," with its "You shall conquer, never fear," seems to have been incorporated into our being and to be the basis on which we so persistently build.

The union has just learned with sorrow of the death on July 16 of Mrs. Emily F. Blake, corresponding secretary of the Cecil county union, and one of the brightest and most promising of the state workers. The response made by Mrs. Blake to the addresses of welcome given the union at its last annual meeting in the state capital was one of the most able and brilliant papers ever brought before the union. DEPARTMENT OF MERCY.

PRIZE ESSAYS.

The gold medal to be given by the National department of mercy for best essay on kindness is now being made, and will be very handsome. It will be of medium size, solid fourteen carat gold and of the following design: on the face is a dove with extended wings in white enamel, encircling it is a serpent of iridescent hues, and around the edge, in blue enamel, is the motto: "In Wisdom Harmless." The reverse of the medal will have engraved on it the words, "Prize Essay, Department of Mercy, National W. C. T. U." Those competing will please remember that the limit of time is August 15, and that all essays are to be sent to Mrs. Emanuel Friend, 574 Jackson street, Milwaukee, Wis., as heretofore stated in many W. C. T. U. papers.

Cor. Secy's Notes.

We deeply regret that many interesting items that have cheered and comforted us must be laid aside unprinted owing to the three weeks' suspension of the column, but we confidently hope, if health is spared, henceforth such will be published and all may share in the benefits.

The Central Y. W. C. T. U., of Chicago, is a busy company of girls deeply interested in flower mission work, who by their sweet and earnest persuasiveness have made friends of mammon in the right sense. As a result of this, there were brought to their room from one garden, in one day last week, between twenty and thirty thousand stems of sweet peas, tied in clusters of twenty-five each. These were again tied with white ribbon by which was attached a card bearing a comforting text of Scripture, and were carried to the hospitals for distribution. Touching experiences attended the work. One little fellow having hip disease, lying upon the upper part of his back, with his feet strapped high above it, looking upon the flowers, his face radiant with joy, exclaimed with delight, "Flowers, oh! flowers, flowers." "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these, ye have done it unto me," and "of such is the kingdom of heaven."

Mrs. Margaret T. W. Merrill, superintendent of the department for securing homes for homeless children, writes: "It was a great happiness to meet Miss Willard at a Sunday afternoon hour of prayer and song, at the temporary home for women, at Portland, Maine. Seeing her in her improved condition, and hearing her tender implorations for our erring young sisters of the Home, I gratefully 'thanked the Lord and took courage.' Miss Gordon assisted most acceptably at the piano, and with her voice. I believe the impressions of the hour will be of lasting benefit to all who were present."

Miss Lucia E. F. Kimball, superintendent for the department of Sunday-school work in World's W. C. T. U., has just returned from a month's work in New Hampshire, during which she has spoken more than thirty-six times in the interest of the department of which Mrs. Merrill is superintendent.

Our sympathy is extended to our sister, Mrs. Narcissa White Kinney, president of the W. C. T. U. of Oregon, and wife of the "salmon millionaire" (as her husband is called), in the destruction by fire of his canning factory, the largest in the world. Though partially covered by insurance, the loss is large, but Mr. Kinney's business grit and gumption have led him to be "up and at it" again without delay.

The following is received from Mrs. Louise C. Purington, M. D., superintendent of the W. C. T. U. department of franchise: "Mrs. Helen C. Harford, of Newberg, Ore., has been added to the lecturers' list of the National W. C. T. U. franchise department. Mrs. Harford is most active and earnest in this work. She plans to organize the state for suffrage, and the National superintendent bespeaks for her a hearty sympathy and coöperation."

Our congratulations are extended to our sister, Mrs. Mary C. Upham, of Marshfield, Wis., the efficient and untiring superintendent of the department of work among lumbermen, whose husband has been nominated by the Republicans for governor. Educated at West Point, a soldier who well merited his promotion to major, a business man of rare ability and a model husband, we wish his name stood at the head of the prohibition ticket, where the W. C. T. U. could in accordance with their principles and promise bring their influence to bear for him, as the man at the head of an army which would best protect our homes.

WORDS OF GREAT MEN ON PARTY SLAVERY.

"Fellow-citizens, you may, and probably do, think me a fanatic; till you judge men and things on different principles I do not care much what you think me; I have outgrown that interesting anxiety; but I tell you this, if I see the commonwealth upside down I mean to keep my neck free enough from collars to say so."

The above words of Wendell Phillips should inspire the men of to-day to shake off the party collar and risk the cry of "fanaticism" when patriotism calls to action.

CHARLES SUMNER'S PROPHECY.

"No longer will banks and tariffs occupy the foremost place, and, sounding always with the chink of dollars and cents, give their tone to the policy of the country. Henceforward, protection to man will be the true American system."

MARY A. WOODBRIDGE.

Treasurer's Corner.

I am sure all will be glad to read the list printed below for it shows that hard times and strikes, hot weather and storms do not make the faithful white-ribboners forget their own. Miss Willard was cheered by reading several of the letters accompanying these gifts when in the office a few days since:

Dorchester, Mass., W. C. T. U. quarterly collection of a church, $5.45; Mrs. T. M. Maberly, Ellsworth, Kansas, 30 cents; Mrs. M. C. Acker, Lee's Summit, Mo., 50 cents; Miss D. B. Ingraham, Pawtucket, R. I., $1; N. E. Baltimore union, Md., per Fanny A. Cathcart, $3.25; Western Springs, Ill., 70 cents; Sunderland, Mass., W. C. T. U., per Abby F. Montague, $1.10; Columbus and South Edmeston, N. Y. union, $1.73; Rev. Wm. Nicholl, Millerboro, Neb., $1; Sarah M. Stevens, Lafayette, Ind., 60 cents; Troy, Ohio W. C. T. U., per Mary E. Daugherty, 50; Six members Washington, Kan., W. C. T. U., per Mrs. Merrick, 60 cents. All of these (and a few single dimes) except the first, are on the ten cent fund. Besides these we have just received from Pretoria, South Africa, per S. Collins, ten shillings — "ten cents from each member of our union in response to Miss Willard's appeal." That makes us feel that this world is not so large after all.

Dues have come in from Massachusetts, Indiana, Ohio, Texas, Virginia, Florida, Alabama, Iowa, New York, Illinois, Vermont and Indian Territory.

One very encouraging thing that cheers us is the fact that two or three states have already sent in more dues than last year. If all states could do this what a financial victory we would have. We trust each state will be able to do as well.

NATIONAL TEMPERANCE HOSPITAL.

Conditions of membership in the Hospital Association Signing of the temperance pledge, payment of $5 membership fee, and $1 annually thereafter.

Needs of the Hospital: Members in its Association; Endowment of beds, contributions of money, blankets, towels, etc. (As quilts cannot be used to good advantage on hospital beds, it is better to sell them at home and to send the money thus received.) Acquaintance with its principles and purposes. Urgent invitation is extended to all interested, and especially to all physicians, to visit the institution and make full inquiries in regard to its workings.

Mrs. M. E. Kline, president of the Board of Trustees of the National Temperance Hospital, asks for the republication from THE UNION SIGNAL of August 14, 1890, of the following:

CURE FOR SNAKE BITE.

We are receiving our usual midsummer installment of inquiries for non-alcoholic remedies for snake bite. We give here a number whose efficiency is vouched for by reliable persons. A lady from Nebraska writes of permanganate of potash kept always in the house for the purpose. It comes in dark crystals, somewhat resembling rusty iron in color, but brighter. In the case given, a child was bitten by a rattlesnake: the wound was probed with one of the crystals which was left in, and with others bound on with a cloth. A complete cure was effected. The prescription was given by Dr. Stimpson, of Plum Creek, Nebraska, who tested its virtues thoroughly.

Soft soap and lime mixed in equal parts and applied to the bite is recommended by those who have found it an antidote. A Pennsylvania friend recommends holding the bitten part in running water, or pouring water over it continuously for several hours, till the inflammation subsides. Another has tried sweet oil successfully: a tablespoonful taken internally and the wound bathed in it. For a horse, use eight times the dose for a man. Killing the snake and applying the warm flesh to the bite is an old remedy, well vouched for; killing a chicken and enveloping the wounded part in its warm body is also a well-known prescription; in both cases the flesh applied soon turns green with the extracted poison and must be replaced by fresh. A hunter recommends turning on the wound immediately a thimbleful of gunpowder and igniting it: the pain is slight and the cure certain.

The wife of a physician who has practiced nine years in Texas where never a summer passes without his treating cases of snake bite, writes that the remedy used by him and which has never failed is compound tincture of iodine; for an adult give four drops in a tablespoonful of sweet milk once an hour as long as necessary. Dr. Hiatt has used this remedy for the most venomous copperhead bite and found it always effected a cure and without the bad after effect resulting from alcohol treatment.

Common salt mixed with the white of an egg to the consistency of paste and spread on the wound, renewed frequently, is a household remedy always at hand and recommended by those who have tried it for snake bite. We can vouch for its efficacy in bee stings.

Equal parts of powdered charcoal and fresh lard is another household remedy recommended by a correspondent. Other remedies have been given before in THE UNION SIGNAL, prominent among them aqua ammonia, a bottle of which should always be kept in the house, as it has so many uses.

The household remedy which seems to have the weight of authority on its side is common indigo powdered, moistened and applied to the wound: it soon turns green with the poison it draws out and must be renewed. This is vouched for by a number of correspondents in different parts of the country who write us they have tested it. It is also recommended by the "Medical and Surgical Reporter."

For snake bite the remedy must be applied immediately and hence should be one always at hand and easily applied without waiting to send for a physician or to a drug store. The remedies here given, with possibly one exception, are of this character, are found, or can easily be kept in every household. If every family living in a snake infested district would take as much pains to keep one of them within reach as some do to have whisky "handy" for snake bite, they would find it quite as efficacious and much safer.

Miss Alice M. Guernsey, in charge of L. T. L. hospital work, writes: "I have received money from the temperance committee of an Illinois Christian Endeavor Society, and from a New York Junior Endeavor Society for the L. T. L. room." It will certainly be encouraging to the Loyal Temperance Legion to learn of this. The amount contributed has enabled the management to receive little Clara from the Baby Sanitarium, and minister to her comfort for a few days, until it was proved that the case was incurable. Physicians and nurses did all possible for her comfort. More of this work will be done in future if the following letter is an indication of what the L. T. L. will do. How many will agree to do the same?

NATIONAL TEMPERANCE HOSPITAL:—

I am a little girl nine years old, and I saw in The Midget a call for help to the "Time of Need" fund for the Loyal Temperance Legion room in the National Temperance Hospital, so I am going to earn ten cents a year for five years, and I will send it to you every year. Your friend,

GRACE SEAMAN.

The disturbed condition of the country and interference with mails and freight traffic may have prevented responses to the call for special help last month. It is not yet too late to send the articles there enumerated. The matron desires it understood, also, that she has on hand a large number of empty cans, which she will be glad to send to any one who will agree to refill and return. Those who have an abundance of fruit can thus render valuable service. Potatoes, apples, and similar supplies will also be very welcome. All such supplies should be addressed to Mrs. Sarah Hornby, matron, 1619 Diversey Avenue, Chicago, Ill. Correspondence regarding hospital matters should be addressed to one of the following officers:

Mrs. M. E. Kline, president, 62 E. Forty-third street, Chicago.

Mrs. J. B. Hobbs, vice-president, 343 La Salle avenue, Chicago.

Mrs. Watson Thatcher, recording secretary, 787 Walnut street, Chicago.

Mrs. Ralph S. Greenlee, corresponding secretary, 385 Ashland boulevard, Chicago.

Mrs. Calista E. Bigelow, treasurer, 539 West Adams street, Chicago.

Money should always be sent to the treasurer.

Do not address the house physician, as changes in this office are frequent. Dr. Charles G. Davis and Dr. Ousley are no longer on the staff of the hospital.

PRESS COMMITTEE.

Our Library Table.

JESUS THE NAZARENE, by Rev. C. J. Kephart, A. M., is a publication that will receive a welcome from Bible students. It is the story of the Lord's life arranged in chronological order. By means of a marginal arrangement on each page the reader can follow the gospel harmony. The author has omitted everything from his narration of the "old, old story," that could in the least encumber it or detract from the force of the simple facts. With the aid of this book one can, Bible in hand, study that great life, through its months and years, with consecutive clearness and satisfaction. W. J. Shuey, publisher, Dayton, Ohio. Price 50 cents.

THE EVIDENCE OF SALVATION. Rev. Everett S. Stackpole, D. D. This little work is characterized by a simple and unaffected, yet most forceful and earnest style. Dr. Stackpole writes with the eloquence of one appreciating the value of the truths he would impart. He is convinced that certainty of salvation is definitely promised by the Holy Scriptures, and therefore it must be possible to a fully awakened soul.

TALKS ABOUT THE WEATHER. TALKS ABOUT THE SOIL. TALKS ABOUT USEFUL PLANTS. This series of three books is from the pen of Charles Barnard, and were originally prepared for the use of the students of the Chautauqua Town and Country Club at Houghton Farm, Mountainville, New York. Each of the series is thoroughly readable and especially to be commended for the perusal of young people. They are written in a simple, yet attractive fashion, and from first to last tend to encourage personal observation of the phenomena of nature which abound on every hand and which carry within them funds of rich information. Such books as these are excellent for use as supplementary reading in the public schools.

Funk & Wagnalls Company, 18-20 Astor Place, New York City.

BEAUTIFUL OFFERINGS OF SACRED SONG. Edited by John B. Shaw and C. A. Shaw. This fresh candidate for the favor of the singing public enters the campaign with every condition of success. In over one hundred pages are comprised one hundred and thirty hymns with music for each one. The selections have been made after careful study of the needs in religious gatherings and it may be safely said that not one piece in the book lacks the inherent qualities demanded. Such well-known hymn-writers as E. A. Hoffman, J. R. Sweney, W. J. Kirkpatrick, W. A. Ogden, have contributed some of their latest productions. The book certainly excels in the variety and uniform merit of its contents.

Published by Shaw Bros., 13 S. Peoria street, Chicago. Price per hundred, paper covers, $12. Board covers, $15.

DOES GOD SEND TROUBLE? By Charles Cuthbert Hall, D. D. The author states on the title page of this work that it is "an earnest effort to discern between Christian tradition and Christian truth," and the earnest effort has for its result a book that many will read and afterward count the day of reading as a red-letter day in their memories. The author is minister of the First Presbyterian church of Brooklyn, N. Y., and his book is free from all sectional features. It is a reasonable and thoroughly acceptable exposition of the Word of God. Starting out by considering "The Problem of Consolation" the author shows why divine consolations are often "too small" (Job 15: 11, Rev. Ver.) for suffering souls. He says, "There is a kind of religious phraseology prevalent in our time which would seek to persuade us that it is God who has done these atrocities, that it is God who has wrecked this fortune; God who has made the strong man a consumptive; God who has seized that beauteous child, whose every motion was grace, whose every glance was ecstasy, and has tortured it deliberately to death." Out of this belief, or as he well terms it, "tradition" grows hardness of heart terminating in unbelief, since it is hard to pray to one who tortures, love one who lacks mercy, trust one who smites as though in revenge. The writer's expositions cannot be outlined in a brief review, but it may be said that the book in question holds comfort for those perplexed yet faithful souls who try to "kiss the rod," even while reason strives with faith. The outlines of the five chapters comprising the volume are, "The Relation of God to Natural Law, to Chastisement and to Discipline," "The Historic Atonement and the Punishment of Sin," "The Will of God and the Tendency of Nature," "The Duty, the Comfort, and the Power of Prayer."

Publisher's Notes.

A GREAT MOTHER

THE VOICE, JUNE 21.

Napoleon Bonaparte once said, "What France needs most is good mothers." This was true, and what was true then of France is true to-day of America and the world.

The far-reaching, uplifting influence which good mothers may have is shown with delicate skill and reverent filial touches in a volume entitled "A GREAT MOTHER," being sketches of Madam Willard, by her daughter, Frances E. Willard, and her kinswoman, Minerva Brace Norton, which has just been issued by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, of Chicago. It is handsomely bound in ornamental cloth, and the introduction is by Lady Henry Somerset.

Madam Willard was great in herself, and, like the "mother of the Wesleys," in her children. All the sturdy qualities of character which belonged to the stern but kindly old New England stock were hers in a remarkable degree. But she was preëminently "a great mother." Upon her children the utmost devotion of her nature was lavished. "Her talent for motherhood," says her daughter Frances in this work, "in the estimation of her children amounted to positive genius. . . . Yet none saw more clearly the truth that the best service a mother can do her children is to maintain the standard of her own life at its highest, to be always in advance of them, able to

"'Allure to brighter worlds and lead the way.'"

Madam Willard was well fitted "to lead the way" "to brighter worlds," and many times when her great-souled daughter, to whom the world owes so much, became a little discouraged at the tremendous opposition which confronted her, it was her mother's voice that urged her on to still greater triumphs. This book will prove an inspiration to many mothers in their great task of rearing worthy men and women.

The new book "A GREAT MOTHER" is dedicated to the white ribbon women of the world, their husbands and children. It is finely illustrated with portraits of Madam Willard, her husband and family, including those temperance workers who formed a part of her household at Rest Cottage, also views of her several homes as well as of dear friends, including Lady Henry Somerset, who delivered her memorial address at the Denver convention.

This true story of a great, good and pure life glorifies motherhood and will prove an inspiration and help to other mothers. No more delightful and valuable gift could be chosen for the young mother needing help and encouragement, or the dear old mother whose "children rise up and call her blessed." —Our Home Guards.

BIBLE READING FOR JULY.

The Bible Reading for July is by Mrs. Alice J. Harris, the beloved W. C. T. U. songstress. Who that has heard her clarion tones in "Victory" ringing out sweet and clear will fail to read her words upon the foundation text, "Sing forth the honor of His name; make His praise glorious." The practical thought which she presents is "how music may be made a more potent factor in our work." She quotes from many well-known authorities to prove the power of music as a moral agent and draws the conclusion that "it may be used in the temperance reform more largely than we have yet done." "It is impossible to have earnest universal singing without plenty of books," says Mrs. Harris, and this belief we emphasize by suggesting for every public gathering a liberal supply of the White Ribbon Hymnal, compiled by Miss Anna Gordon, which can be had of the W. T. P. A. for 35c. each, $3.50 per dozen.

THE total value of property in France is $40,000,000,000.

A RAILROAD running from Yverden to Saint Croix, Switzerland, ceases all traffic on Sunday.

THERE is a law in Germany, dating from 1829, which if enforced, would close all shops on Sunday. A German mercantile house recently was fined $300 for making its clerks work too long on Sunday.

UTAH is the forty-fifth state in the Union, leaving only Arizona, New Mexico, Indian Territory and Alaska under the territorial form of government. Only a few more stars can be added to the United States flag.

DURING the Australasian triennial W. C. T. U. convention, Miss Harris, of Victoria, read a paper, stating that out of a million population in the colony, there are 114,229 women wage-earners, of whom 30,924 were under twenty years.

THE English Royal Labor Commission in its recent report declared that "it is unwise to institute, by law, any system of industrial tribunals to compulsorily arbitrate disputes between employer and employed." It says that non-union men should receive protection.

IT is said that a young man is asking for admission to Vassar College, which is refused him. Now that the men's colleges are opening to women, the vice versa must soon be the result. A "Matthew Annex" would not be such a bad idea at Poughkeepsie.

THE growth of Christianity in Oriental lands, twenty-three per cent, is nearly three times as great as the Hindu increase and more than twice that of the population. There is cause for rejoicing and not for discouragement on the part of Christians at the cessation of opposition and the kindly reception of our faith among the peoples of the East.

THE Bureau of Labor at Washington issues some valuable statistics regarding the work of 17,427 girls engaged in 343 different industries in twenty-two cities. The average age for beginning work was fifteen years and four months, and the average wage five dollars; 9,813 not only work but also assist in the housework at home; 6,614 do their own sewing, and present a respectable appearance.

CATHOLIC prelates are laying aside conservatism on the liquor question and coming out boldly for temperance. The recent utterance of Bishop Watterson, of Ohio, supported by the papal delegate, Mgr. Satolli, is further seconded by the circulars of Bishop Keane. "Surely it is time," he pointedly says, "for them (the conservative prelates) to notice that the bar tender is but a panderer to vice, and the saloon the gate to every species of depravity and crime."

DR. BARNARDO, in his annual report of the English homes for waifs and strays, said that since the foundation of the Barnardo Homes, 24,000 children had been trained in industrial pursuits. During the year 2,421 young people were started in life, of whom 834 were sent to Canada. Nearly 5,000 children are maintained at present in fifty-one separate establishments, or boarded out in rural districts. During the past year the contributions reached the unprecedented total of £134,054.

DR. JAMES L. MAXWELL, of London, honorable secretary of the Christian Union, has made an unequivocal denial of the statement that the Anti-opium Society did not want a royal commission of inquiry, the result of whose labors justifies such objection to their appointment, deeming it unnecessary in the face of the known evil to expend fruitless effort in this direction. He criticises very strongly the dual policy of the government in permitting the sale of a poison in India which it is making more and more difficult in England, and asks for the abolition of a forced traffic upon a nation which the nation itself does not want.

SELF-DENIAL WEEK.

September 22–28 has been fixed upon as Self-Denial Week. It begins on the birthday of our First Round-the-World Missionary, and ends on that of our World's W. C. T. U. President. During that time each person (man, woman and child) who believes in the white-ribbon cause—a pure life, a protected home, a regenerated Republic—is asked to do without something that costs money in order to save and give that money to the World's and National W. C. T. U. in equal parts, to help on their work. The exact use to be made of the amount sent can be indicated if any so desire. Local unions will be furnished with Self-Denial envelopes at five cents a dozen or twenty-five cents a hundred on application to Mrs. Helen M. Barker, National Treasurer, The Temple, Chicago.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

The tariff bill has passed.

The government's gold reserve has been considerably increased the past week.

Italy has announced that she will remain neutral in the war between China and Japan.

Maryland Prohibitionists met in Glyndon Park, August 9, and nominated Congressional candidates.

A bill to prevent lobbying, and with heavy penalties, has been introduced into the United States Senate.

Mr. George M. Pullman arrived in Chicago the 10th inst, having been absent during the strike of his employés.

Two ships have been ordered to China to protect American interests at that port during the naval disturbances.

By a special imperial edict Chinese are permitted to remain in Japan so long as they engage in peaceful pursuits.

United States Consul Wright has started a vessel from Norway to the far North to meet explorer Wellman and party.

The mother of the assassin of President Carnot of France has importuned Madame Carnot to intercede for the life of her son.

Work was successfully inaugurated last week in all but two departments of the Pullman car factory, by the starting of the great Corliss engine.

President Cleveland has extended, through Secretary Gresham, a formal recognition of the new Republic of Hawaii on the part of the United States.

Chairman Dickie, of the National Prohibition committee, preached at Lake Bluff last Sunday, the occasion being an important prohibition conference.

The Michigan Prohibition convention was held in Kalamazoo, August 8, with five hundred delegates. Prof. Samuel Dickie was nominated for United States senator, and Albert M. Todd for governor.

The conferrees on the sundry civil bill have killed the seventy thousand dollar appropriation for the payment of French exhibitors whose goods were damaged by fire in the World's Fair buildings last January.

Richard T. Ely, professor of economics and political economy in the University of Wisconsin, has been cited to appear before the board of regents, August 20, to defend himself against the charges of socialism, preferred by O. E. Wells, state superintendent of public instruction.

On August 8 Misses Willard and Gordon left Twilight Park to attend the W. C. T. U. camp-meeting of Vermont, near Rutland. This is the only engagement they have made before the autumn conventions of Iowa, Ohio and Pennsylvania, and possibly others. The unveiling of the Chautauqua and Children's fountains is fixed for September 28, when the Chicago welcome will be given to our President in Willard Hall.

On August 4, in the steamship Paris, of the American line, Lady Henry Somerset, her son, Mr. Henry Somers Somerset, Arthur Hungerford Pollen, Esq. (a young barrister of London and the traveling companion of Mr. Somerset), sailed from Southampton, and landed at New York August 11. Lady Henry Somerset comes at the close of a year of arduous philanthropic and reform work, and will go for rest to Twilight Park in the Catskill mountains, where Miss Willard has a summer home. Captain Randle, of the Paris, holds it as a cardinal doctrine that no man who handles a ship should use intoxicants. Temperance people should make a note of this.

THE outcome of the great coal strike in England, which was based on the demand for a living wage, is most gratifying to the friends of labor reform. The standard or minimum wage of the miners is now fixed at thirty per cent above the standard of 1888. The principle involved and rendered triumphant by this decision is that before the selling price of a ton of coal is fixed, the living wage for the miner shall be estimated, namely a wage sufficient to yield to him and his family what are commonly known as the "comforts of life." This is the most notable victory yet secured over the law of "demand and supply," supposed to be as fixed as the laws of the Medes and Persians.

THE attitude of that good man, the Christian voter, has been not inaptly illustrated by the experience of a colored brother who was given to saying at the church prayer-meeting, "Sambo waitin' impatient for de Angel Gabriel to come and take him to his heavenly home"—but meanwhile his daily walk and conversation did not altogether correspond with these celestial claims. For this reason several young fellows of the baser sort, resolving to test the old man's sincerity, sought his lonely cabin by night and rapping on the door called out with due solemnity, "De Angel Gabriel am come to carry Sambo to his heavenly home." No answer. They pounded away again and repeated their declaration in tones of impressive authority—no answer; a third time they called out, "De Angel Gabriel am come to take Sambo to his heavenly home," when behold, from the most distant corner of the cabin came a scared and muffled voice: "Sambo not here. Sambo gone away for six months." Alas! it is that Christian voter who prayed against the dramshop but when voting time came had gone away into the peaceful fold of a high license party, that discredits the Christian church and leaves the nation in the thralldom of the rum power.

WE desire to call careful attention to the important statement of the Hyde Park Protective Association, found on page 5 of this paper. This association has been in existence four years, and has accomplished truly remarkable results in keeping the local option district of Hyde Park free from saloons and hotel bars. During the World's Fair their work was almost incessant, as the temptations for selling liquor were well-nigh irresistible. One thousand three hundred and eighty warrants have been issued by the association, and almost all of them have resulted in fines or sentences. The law covers a territory of forty-four square miles, and affects indirectly a territory of one hundred square miles. The homes of this immense community have been safe-guarded by this one small protective association, whose officers have received no salary whatever; on the contrary, they have put much of their private means into the prosecution of these cases. The gratitude and the money of temperance people should pour into the treasury of this dauntless society, and we wish particularly to urge the white-ribboners in the Hyde Park and neighboring districts to interest themselves in this brave work, and aside from contributing financial aid, agitate the subject in their families and among their friends, and thus keep alive the sentiment which has influenced the courts to render such telling verdicts.

THE recent local option election in Hinds county, which makes the capital of Mississippi "dry," leaves but five counties in the state which have not yet abolished the saloon. These are in the "black belt," where the colored population largely outnumbers the white. On the Illinois Central Railroad there is a continuous territory from the Louisiana line to Tennessee, four hundred miles, along which not one drop of liquor can be openly bought. The same condition exists on the entire eastern boundary of the state on the Mobile and Ohio road. There is now more contiguous territory in Mississippi under the direct action of local option than has ever before existed in the United States. The temperance people and the liquor traffic view the situation with equal interest, for this nearly ideal test will settle the value of local option as a temperance measure.

"HAVING once notified you of the fact that I do not want your paper in my house, I consider it a gross insult, of which no one should be guilty, to still keep on sending your paper. I wish to state once more, and with emphasis, that I have nothing in common with prohibition, and God grant that I never may have." There are simply no words with which to answer this letter, received recently by us. A new vocabulary must come into being before one can hope to treat of a Christian minister who prays he may "have nothing in common with prohibition." We doubt not his prayer will be answered. It is not of Ephraim alone that the voice of Eternal Justice has declared: "He is joined to his idols; let him alone." Our brother will doubtless continue to have "nothing in common with prohibition" (as he has nothing in company with politeness) so far as sympathy and help are concerned, but he will surely some day awaken to the knowledge that prohibition has something in common with him when, with white, avenging face it shall denounce him before God as one who barred the way for the incoming of Christ's reign of righteousness. Our sympathy goes out to the brother or sister who, in true missionary spirit, must have subscribed for this paper for the minister's perusal. Let him or her not despair, but remember that, while some seed must, from the very nature of the case, fall on "stony ground," there is other soil where it shall bring forth fruit an hundred-fold.

IF we have not called attention to all the "red-letter days" officially fixed upon by the W. C. T. U. it is not from inconsiderate intention. They will grow gradually into our memories and afford rallying points for special "arousements," and diversification of effort in the local unions. For every ingenious president knows that to keep the local work alive and vigorous, she must often set some new and definite purpose before her coadjutors, some result not too far off upon which they can concentrate for "a pull altogether." At the World's W. C. T. U. last autumn, the birthday of Lady Henry Somerset (August 3) was officially chosen as "Fresh Air Mission Day," with the thought that it was an appropriate time, so far as weather signals go, and because Lady Henry has done so much by means of "outings" for those who would not otherwise have had a breath of country oxygen, to make the Fresh Air Mission a feature of applied Christianity in her own land. September 22, Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt's birthday, comes next, and should be appropriately and gratefully observed by our unions. This is the beginning of Self-Denial week, which ends with Miss Willard's birthday, September 28. This latter date has been decided upon as the one to be specially observed for securing new members, and henceforward, September 28 will be known as membership day in place of Crusade Day, December 23. The change has been made because Crusade Day is so near Christmas that it is practically impossible to make a systematic canvass for members, every one's time being otherwise employed.

WELCOME HOME.—FROM THE PACIFIC COAST.

To Frances E. Willard.

BY HARRIET FRANCENE CROCKER.

Welcome home, loved Chieftain, welcome home again!
Hearts by the thousands are thrilled at thy return;
Glad are thy followers, for thee the hearth-fires burn
In homes of loving women and good, true-hearted men.

Safe across the ocean the brave ship bore thee on
To waiting friends upon our shore, whose love is warm and true;
'Tis welcome home! 'tis welcome to rest and labor too,
For oh, the work is not all done, the vict'ry not yet won.

Thanks be to Him whose loving care has guarded thee so well!
Thanks for the failing strength renewed, the spirit full of zeal!
With loyal hearts and faithfulness, with loving look and tone,
Dear Chieftain, 'tis our happiness to bid thee welcome home!

THE MEMBER-AT-LARGE.

The Town Kindergarten Association. VII.

BY HELEN CAMPBELL.

"Thirteen years ago," the member-at-large continued, 'in the very heart of the sin and the shame of the beautiful city—the Five Points of San Francisco—known as the 'Barbary coast,' Sarah B. Cooper, whose Bible class supported her in the work, opened the second free kindergarten west of the Rocky Mountains. When they rented their building but $7.50 a month was pledged to their support. With a capital of only faith and power to work they began. At the end of the first year they had two kindergartens, and had received $1,805.70. The second year doubled schools and receipts. The sixth year quadrupled them. The thirteenth saw thirty-five kindergartens, with an attendance of 3,107 children and $48,731.99 receipts.

"During this thirteen years over fourteen thousand children have been trained in these kindergartens. The children were of all ages, the youngest one ever admitted being but sixteen months old. She was motherless, and brought to the kindergarten, where she remained four years, a gentle and refining influence for the whole school. She demonstrated what this training does for a child by stepping right over the first grade in entering the public school and taking high rank in the next grade to which she was assigned.

"Among the children in the first one was Jimmy, known as the 'King of the Hoodlums' among the smaller 'street Arabs' of his thoroughfare. He was born a natural leader and commander, and to quote from Mrs. Cooper's own description: 'He was bound to be a power for good or for evil. He swayed his comrades as the wind sways the trees. Scarcely five years old, he had the brain of a child eight or ten. He had his spells. He could be very good, and he could be very bad. He could disorganize the school in five minutes when he set himself resolutely about it. He was apt to set himself about it all too often. He was lovable; he was terrible. He was all sunshine or storm. He was all that is comprehended in the word smart. He made excitement. He pervaded the room as soon as he entered it. He talked of jumping off the dock to swim with all the nonchalance of a veteran swimmer, and what is more he actually did it.'

"What sort of outlook was this for a child scarcely five years old? Such a child, so gifted, must be either blessing or curse to the world. At the end of the first year the question was partly answered. Jimmy graduated into an advanced class and almost daily on the close of his school, he made his prompt appearance at the kindergarten, and insisted upon washing all the slates and stacking them away nicely in the closet. For he said, 'This is my kindergarten, and I like to come round and see the folks.'

"Jimmy has 'seen the folks' to some purpose. He graduated with the highest honors from the public school, and is now in a lawyer's office, a trusted and valuable help, and bidding fair to become a good, intelligent and honorable man.

"Days might pass in giving you the stories of these children, but Jimmy's is enough. For each and all of the fourteen thousand, industrial training should have gone side by side with the public school course, and the boy's hands should have known all uses of hands no less than the boy's head. But this is not yet the sure possession of all children, as very soon, under enlightened legislation it must be. These fourteen thousand are the first fraction of the great army to follow the army of the new order of politicians. With its entrance comes the dethroning of the 'boss,' the breaking of the 'machine.' With this training projected into all training; with the new heart and conscience that it gives to all, ends forever the reign of the demagogue, the shyster, the ward politician, and we come to a day like that earlier day of old Rome:

"'Then none were for a party,
But all were for the state;
Then the rich man loved the poor,
And the poor man loved the great.'

"And now for any objector who still asks, 'Why should the state or the city be called on to support free kindergartens, or expected to ultimately take in those started by private enterprise?' I will tell you in words chosen from the address of the superintendent of a reform school for children—Walter Lindley, of the Whittier school of California. I wish there were room for the whole wonderful paper in which he tells the causes that send children to him—first and chief of all, the want of intelligent training either at home or in the school:

"'Allow that a modification of our school system is needed, he says: 'But who will act? The teacher cannot do it. She is simply one necessary but little cog-wheel in a great piece of machinery, and any divergence on her part would throw everything out of gear. The principal cannot do it, for he must bow submissively to the superintendent. The superintendent cannot do it, for he must bend the knee to a board of education, controlled usually by ward politicians. The board of education cannot do it because you elected them to their positions, knowing that the best you could possibly expect of them would be that they would conduct the schools respectably well, according to existing methods. Oh, no! You cannot place this crime against American children on any official's shoulders. You, the intelligent voters and tax-payers, you are the responsible parties!'

"Untrained, uncared for, the child passes on. What is the end of a neglect which if bestowed in like proportion upon our domestic animals would raise a howl of indignation from one end of the land to the other? Let Walter Lindley speak once more and answer the question:

"'What do we do for our prisoners in our penitentiaries? We put on first the striped livery of degradation; seven hundred lads and young men are wearing this livery today in California, by your ordering; fourteen hundred older men are also incased in this exterminator of hope. Then, after putting this young man in these clothes, he is sent to take lessons of the most expert criminals the world has ever known. He is thoroughly trained in the most horrible sexual perversities; in the best methods of garroting men, in the use of opium, in stealing horses, in opening safes, waylaying stages, the use of vile language. He is initiated into the free masonry of crime. Signs, passwords, grips and a special vernacular are part of the education of the boy and young man received at the expense of the state. With tears in their eyes young men beg to be allowed to work at trades or avocations that will prepare them to stand erect among men, and be men when they leave the prison; but with a practical curse the state hurls them to enforced idleness, or sends them to work in a jute mill. Why put a man to work in a jute mill? Because that is the only kind of work the state could think of at which a man would find it absolutely impossible to get employment after leaving prison. The deliberate object of California, and of other states as well, seems to be to unfit its criminals for honorable self-support. Thus, we drive the cold steel of oppression to the hilt into the life of our fellow men, and as like begets like, we develop within him a hatred of society, a detestation of law and order, and a fixed determination for revenge that only death will conquer.

"'Yes, but we have by no means revealed yet the far-reaching effects of the plan that the state has so carefully prepared. If it were only the money this young man himself would steal, the murders he would commit, the houses he would burn after leaving the prison, it would be a comparatively small matter. But no; in your penitentiaries you have provided criminal normal schools. Every man is being made a teacher, and when he passes out he does not have to wait for bonds to be voted to erect a schoolhouse. He teaches on the curbstone, in the groggery, along the wharves, and in the dark and noisome alley. No need either for a compulsory law to provide him with pupils. The boys crowd around him, and with eyes, ears and mouths open, they will listen intently to this hero as long as he will deign to instruct them.'

"This is the word of a man who knows and thinks. These normal school teachers go out from every state in the Union at a rate of never less than a thousand yearly. Now reflect on the fact I gave you in the beginning, certified to by the chief of police of San Francisco, that out of those nine thousand kindergarten graduates, only three arrests were ever made—and do you need further commentary? I believe not. I believe with all my soul that never again will one of you think indifferently of this method of prevention of crime. Here in your own beautiful little city, sheltered and shielded as her sister cities cannot be in any near future, there is less chance of some forms of crime. But crime chooses all spots for its own, and continually from lesser streams the country feeds that great maelstrom, the city, where crime is born and lives. For every child, then, growing up in your midst, give this chance, and know that without it you make life harder to be lived and are forever responsible for such lapses as may come into that life. It is no matter to be lightly discussed and as lightly dismissed. In it are the issues of life and death, and here as elsewhere, not only are you your brother's keeper, but for you, too, the old words sound again, 'Whosoever shall offend one of these little ones, it were better for him that a millstone were bound about his neck and he were cast into the depths of the sea.'"

THE COMING CRISIS.

BY JOSEPH RODES BUCHANAN, M. D.

The crisis in California and elsewhere is but an inevitable step in the progress of social evolution.

The ideal condition of social harmony and happiness which was presented by Jesus in "the law of love," has never been approached. The anti-Christian condition under the law of selfishness has ruled the world in unbroken supremacy, bringing its inevitable results, poverty and aristocracy, slavery and tyranny, pestilence and ignorance, crime and insanity. My suggestion of a system of education which would eradicate all these evils and vindicate the Christian system has received very little attention, but the magnitude of the evils is compelling men to think because the sufferers have become thinkers, the poor are no longer in helpless ignorance.

They begin to perceive that a system of unrestrained competitive selfishness, producing unfair monopolistic legislation for the classes and against the masses, necessarily results in a despotic oligarchy and a helpless proletariat—a condition in which the right to "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness" is not even a "barren ideality."

When the landlord, the factory lord, the money lord and the railway master are fully developed and organized, the rest of mankind are at their mercy, and when they so decree may be reduced to the condition of highway tramps, with free access only to the bottom of the ocean; but with a probability that they may be permitted to live on conditions of perpetual vassalage for the vast majority.

Seeing this clearly, the laboring majority vigorously objects, but has no other method of resistance than the temporary, hazardous, painful and tumultuous strike, which vainly struggles to arrest the slow moving avalanche of organized capital.

Whether in vain or not, the crushed worm will turn, and American labor will make a desperate struggle before it submits to old world degradation. That this struggle must end in civil war is believed by millions now, and was emphatically stated by myself in the Arena four years ago.

But that dire result may be averted if the laboring millions can be sufficiently enlightened to realize that our social system of selfishness, which Carlyle rightly called a "hell scramble," is a fatal curse upon humanity, because a violation of divine law, and that "we, the people," in our governmental capacity, are bound to protect the welfare of all, and to abolish social institutions which have proved a social curse.

Private monopoly of land, as I endeavored to show forty-seven years ago, has been the primal cause; to this our skillful demagogues have added monopoly of currency and monopoly of transportation. Out of these has grown the monopoly of wealth by thirty thousand, and out of the laws of business has grown the monopoly of all productive power by the owners of machinery, leaving the man without capital a beggar for employment.

The savage revolution now in prospect may be averted if the people realize that the right to labor and thus enjoy "liberty and the pursuit of happiness" (which cannot exist without a guarantee right of labor) must be secured to all. When demagogues shall have been expelled from Washington and statesmen of the order of Solon shall have taken their places the dread collision of masses and classes may be averted.

As "the greatest good of the greatest number" is the desire of all patriotic souls, and as the greatest number consists of the industrial classes, the most important thing is to teach these toiling millions that it is not by angry and turbulent strikes that their welfare can be promoted, but by quiet and resolute political action, placing their truest and most enlightened friends in power. Nevertheless, the strike is not in vain, for it compels men to think who have become so lost in selfishness as to be willing to let the republic drift onward as it is drifting now toward unlimited calamities.

WHY DO NOT PEOPLE GO TO CHURCH?

(Concluded.)

WHY DOES NOT THE CHURCH GO TO THE PEOPLE?

Going to church is a habit mainly. So is not going, and it does not much signify, anyway; for, as to the bulk of the people, the church has nothing that they want; but in every purlieu of the world there is something she wants. Why does not the church go to the people?

B. & O. R. R. JOHN G. WOOLLEY.

RELIGION GETTING EASY.

Many people do go to church. Devoted Catholics;—and also, the superstitious and benighted; many Protestants, consecrated, earnest, tried and true; worshipful and working Christians.

Why do many not go?

First. Great change in theological views. Pulpits saying old things, people thinking new things. The priestly function less thought of or respected, people do their own reading and thinking, more services than formerly, more books, organizations, clubs,—less time.

Second. Church open twice on Sunday, once or twice during the week. Saloon open all the time. Churches—many of them—preach hell and license it. World knows that the preacher isn't hired to tell the truth about Chicago, but about Jerusalem, Sodom, Judas and all that. Saloon getting away with a lot of things.

Third. Aristocracy, wealth, fashion; mantua-makers, milliners and tailors have too much upon exhibition. Sacred (concert) music in an unknown tongue,—"Consider, consider, consid——er, consider the lil——ies, con——sid——er the, consider the lil——ies, how they 'gro.'"

Fourth. Sunday paper, "wheel" needs exercising, Saturday a holiday and too close to holyday. Religion getting easy.

Lastly. People tired, servants have to stay home and get good dinner, and headaches, colds, chills, fevers—always worse on Sunday.

And after all I am an optimist. H. A. DELANO.

NOR PEOPLE NOR CHURCH ENOUGH WISH IT.

You want a "real honest statement of my convictions" why people do not go to church. You shall have it. Let it be understood, first, that any answer which implies that people do not go to church as much as formerly, conveys to that extent a false impression. The exact reverse of this is true. People do go to church to-day in far larger numbers in proportion to the population than ever before in the history of the world since Christ.

But, secondly, the reason why more people do not go to church, is because more people do not wish to go.

Thirdly, the reasons why they do not wish to go are various: The pervasive, underlying, ever-present and potential reason is that "the natural heart is enmity against God." Men do not by nature desire the gospel, are not eager for it, or in love with it. All this talk about any considerable number of unchristian men hungering for the Word of the kingdom is without warrant in Scripture or fact. Even the blessed Founder of our faith won few followers by His personal ministry. Multitudes came to Him, partly from curiosity, partly because of His miracles, partly because of the strange, new word He preached. But when He told them the truth, these same multitudes turned away from Him, many of them even with wrath and hate. How few followers He had when He closed His ministry! What a small church gathered in that upper room at Jerusalem for prayer! Peter's first sermon converted more men than Christ's whole ministry. The great fundamental reason why more people do not go to church is because they are not in love with the truth the church of God is set in this world to preach.

Has the church then no responsibility for these churchless multitudes? She has an immense responsibility. She is not to wait for these outside, wandering, Christless populations to come in. She is to be so much in love with them that she cannot stay away from them, but will go out to them, and go out to them until she finds them, as the Good Shepherd did, and then constrain them by a loving, yet compelling violence to come in.

So, from the side of the world, the reason why more persons do not go to church is because they do not wish to go, and so, from the side of the church, the reason why more persons do not go to church is because the church does not wish them to come. It is not a question of means and methods. Lack of love is the secret. Why go on questioning and debating and paltering and pottering why people do not go to church? When Christians love the outlying multitudes, so that they are willing to seek them, to suffer for them, to die for them, the question will never be asked. Which is the first and greatest commandment? the first and greatest is Love, and the second is like unto it, Love. That is, there is no first and there is no second, Love is all.

AS MANY REASONS AS INDIVIDUALS.

It should be remembered that, all in all, many do attend the various churches, and we should not forget that out of the whole population, including the aged, the sick, little children and the many whose duties keep them at home or in places of work and trust, it is not possible for more than two-thirds, if indeed for that many, to be present at any one service. But with these allowances, perhaps not more than one-half or two-thirds who could attend church are found at either the morning or the evening service, and for this the reasons are many—almost as many as the individuals who stay away.

But to generalize these reasons, the non-attendants might be classified somewhat as follows: First, the indifferent, those whose minds are occupied with pursuits of pleasure or gain, who feel very little interest in questions of thought or religion. Then, there are not a few whose lines are cast on the other side; their associations are wholly outside of church relations, and even opposed to them by their broad thinking and doing. And there is still another large class who do not believe in any form of religion; do not believe in God, the Bible, prayer, or the life to come; who look upon these doings as superstitions or deceptions gotten up by the preachers for personal power and profit.

Another general reason for not going to church is found in the great number of associations, societies and clubs, that take both time and money. These may be, and generally are, helpful in their way, and serve in a sense to satisfy the mind and heart; but all lack something, and are much short of the value and power of religious worship.

Still another general reason, and more general than is thought, is in the fact that people are overworked during the week; when Sunday comes they are tired; it is the only day for longer sleep and rest in the morning; the only day to get the fresh air in the parks and to visit friends and neighbors.

The expense, the cost for sittings, collections and social occasions is another reason. Denominationalism tends to competition; churches must be on fine streets; must have fine music and the best preaching they can get; all these are expensive luxuries, and they naturally call for the support of the wealthy, and bring about them the surroundings of fashion and fine dressing. These churches become in a measure exclusive; in a sense, social clubs, from which the poor are excluded; not intentionally, but the conditions keep them away. They can't afford the money.

But so it is, and so it will be for years to come; and with this there is still another reason why so many who could do not attend any of these many churches: The preaching is and has to be, in general, not that of the great world of all truth and life and love, but a special pleading for the special dogmas of each denomination.

It does seem that some, at least, of these reasons for non-attendance at church should be overcome, and that great, earnest souls in the pulpits, minds and hearts all instinct with the great truths of life, the truths of God and man, of time and eternity should be able to reach and help the ungathered millions of our land.

MORE LOVE AND MORE LIFE NEEDED.

Imprimis—perhaps I may say that I myself am not included in the non-churchgoing people. I believe that each day, each hour should be lived "as unto the Lord," and that mere formal ceremonials of visible worship on Sunday in no wise atone for any failure to lift up the heart to God on every other day, and in the midst of any and every vocation of life. All the same, I believe in the absolute spiritual necessity of truly consecrating one day out of the seven to the single purpose of closer communion with the Divine Spirit.

Again, as for reasons "why people do not go to church"—it seems to me they do go; the great majority of our people, representing nearly all qualities of social life. As for those who do not go, am I wrong in hazarding the conjecture that they come under three heads: First, a few persons who perhaps enjoy an especial spirituality of life in a mystic way, to whom public contact and public worship is temperamentally distasteful. Second, many of the professional, literary and artistic people who are more or less indifferent and unmindful of the things of the Spirit, and yet who live, more or less unconsciously, much of the best of moral and spiritual life; and third, that unfortunate portion of our population who are the cruder, the more ignorant, and the more the "prisoners of poverty." This latter part (I dislike the term "class")—this latter part of our human brotherhood are non-churchgoers, I think, for several reasons, one of which is undue emphasis laid—or which they believe is laid—on being ill-clad; another of which is the lack of true friendliness of welcome in our churches; and very likely still another lack is that the sermons are usually rather above their comprehension.

While our churches remain what has somewhat irreverently been called "religious club houses," with every pew sold and owned, until a pew is regarded as much a matter of an individual possession as is a man's house—so long will all those persons who do not rent our pews, or who are not personally invited by their owners to share them—so long will they remain away from such churches. A more utterly un-Christian and non-Christian practice, to my mind, was never instituted in an enlightened world. The Catholics set us, in this, an example we might well follow. It is difficult to restrain my pen on this point, but I am already exceeding the limits of space. All these possible reasons, however, seem to me to resolve themselves into one—a lack of spirituality on the part of clergymen and of professed Christians and habitual church-goers. More love and more life—the two are synonymous—are needed. Christian fellowship should not be a mere theory, or a name, but a daily and hourly experience. Christian fellowship is only truly lived out when each and all, in whatever incidental contact—the conductor of the street car, the saleswoman over the counter, the stranger who asks a direction, is made to feel its glow of human sympathy and good-will. Theology is no more Christianity than law is morality; and we have too much theology and too little Christianity. Spirituality appeals equally to the highest or the crudest intellect. Love is the universal language. More sympathy, more love. In short, the true and divine realization of the brotherhood of man—in these must lie the realization of that deeper and finer life that shall overflow our churches in united human love and love of the Divine nature. A SENSE OF LOSS WITHOUT CHURCH SERVICES.

At nineteen or thereabouts, when I became a professed disciple, I promised before the great congregation to be governed by the usages of the Methodist church, or words to that effect. From this time on, I think my old neighbors will bear witness, that I was one of the most constant attendants at church, prayer-meeting, class meeting and on sacramental occasions, among the membership of our church "in my ain familiar town."

Perhaps I ought to add that my dear mother was a swift prompter on all these occasions, and possibly she was the more attentive to her duty in this matter because she seldom went herself after she was eighty years of age. But during her last years I observed that she was by no means so forward to remind me when prayer-meeting evening came around, and, indeed, fell into the habit of saying: "You are very tired, and I guess it will please the Heavenly Powers as well if you stay at home with your mother." She felt, perhaps, that I had served a long apprenticeship, and that as I was very regular in my attendance at the gospel temperance meeting in the afternoon some allowance was to be made for me at other services, especially in view of my growing cares and infirmities.

I confess frankly that I am not as "instant in season and out of season" as I was ten years ago; and I feel very sure that should ten years more be added to my sum total on this planet, the reasons I have indicated will have acquired increased weight, both figuratively and literally.

At the same time, I would not for untold gold be without the discipline and culture that I gained from the minute observance of church services, when I felt physically adequate to attend; and I know nothing that gives me more hope for the future of my country—both as a Christian and a patriot—than the fact that well-nigh two million young Christian Endeavorers have taken a pledge to be on hand, and to participate in the Sunday evening prayer-meeting.

I do not wish it to be understood, by any means, that because I am less constant in attendance at all the stated services, my love for the church is in any wise diminished. The fact is that I go whenever I feel sufficiently up to key physically, and intend to do so till the end. It is also true that I have felt a sense of loss the past two years, during which I have had so much less of Christian teaching from the pulpit and Christian testimony from the pew than usual, owing to physical weariness.

NOTES OF THE NOON MEETING AT WILLARD HALL.

BY JANE EGGLESTON ZIMMERMAN.

"DEAR SISTERS IN THE GOSPEL TEMPERANCE WORK:—I read the accounts of the noon-tide hour of prayer held at your grand Temple, with deep interest, the requests of sorrowing mothers for some dear one that has gone astray, or been overcome by the drink habit, and as I am one of those distressed mothers, I come to you with my request for a son who has become very intemperate. . . The chains have become so strong about him I fear he never will, or can break away. Oh, what words are these for me to write! But I read that 'all things are possible with God,' so I try to hope. . . He does not take kindly to any of our advice or persuasions. I write to him many times, the best I possibly can, and talk to him of the importance of living a new and better life . . that God cares for him . . then I send it, moistened with my tears, but I can never get a word in answer to it. . . Now, dear sisters, will you present my petition in the noon meeting at the Temple, that is what I want—if you think there is any hope for him? I have tried to search my heart and meet the conditions required by God when I go before Him in prayer, and when I read His promises to answer prayer, and then can get no answer to mine, my heart just sinks within me, but my dear Lord knows all about it, and is just as anxious to save him and all such as he is, as I am, but if they won't be saved, what then? Can we give them up? Never! while God gives me breath to pray. It is probable that some better instructed Christians know how to exercise stronger faith than I do. Please pray for him and I will love you forever."

In presenting this mother's petition at the noon meeting the other day, I was struck with its adaptability to all sorrowing mothers of wayward sons. I therefore read all the letter, asking as I read, "Is this you?" "Does this meet your case?" "Is not this the cry of your sorrowful, breaking mother's heart?" The letter produced a profound impression. We have had a number of requests for prayer of late, and all who attend the meetings feel that the Spirit of God is present, touching all hearts.

One lady, a white-ribboner from a distant city, visiting her son in Chicago, a young business man, asked prayers for him, saying that the next day he was coming to the meeting to consecrate himself to God's service and sign the pledge. The next day he did come, a fine young man, surrounded with many temptations in his business but determined to start right in life, and be guided by his wise, devout mother. Oh, what a strong tower to a young man is a persistent, religious mother, determined to present her son a living offering before the throne.

For many months an elderly man, who used to attend our meetings years ago, but who has been intemperate for many years, has been coming in at intervals. I have talked and labored with him many times and have prayed earnestly, although without much faith, for him. His case seemed utterly hopeless, and I have felt that he would never be saved. I have also been much interested in a young man who has been drinking heavily, and have tried to devise a way to influence him. Last Monday, after the meeting, I found these two standing at the corner of the Temple, just under the corner-stone, talking earnestly. The young man said he had just been telling the other that his case seemed just like his own. Both have begun a new life in a spirit of such humility and earnestness that my heart is deeply moved for them. The younger of these two, Mr. B., a man whose face betrays no signs of dissipation, was educated for the ministry, and I hope he will yet take up that blessed work. He said he had been converted not long before, as he firmly believed, while drunk. When I told him that John G. Woolley was converted when drunk he seemed greatly encouraged. He strongly resembles Mr. Woolley in personal appearance, and is a man of very thoughtful character.

OUR THIRD AND FOURTH ROUND-THE-WORLD MISSIONARIES IN THE ORIENT.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—With the exception of a single meeting, Sunday night, February 11, at the Soldiers' and Sailors' Institute at Hong Kong, our work both at this place and at Canton was a quiet one.

The readers of THE UNION SIGNAL probably are all aware that a false witness of tremendous volume as to the harmlessness and usefulness of opium is being prepared for presentation to the British Parliament. The majority of the members of the Royal Opium Commission, which went to India last autumn and has spent the winter there, trying to ascertain, as Mr. Alfred Dyer, editor of the Bombay Guardian, tersely puts it, "if black is white," is strongly in sympathy with the opium trade. And the evidence it has collected—rather, the opinions it has compiled, will, we fear, support the opium traffic as much as possible. A large number of the witnesses brought before the commission said they had seen no evil effects of the use of opium, and they stated their belief that it was good for all manner of things, from a "sharpener of the wits" to a "queller of mutiny."

Interesting contradictions, however, were brought to light by the cross-examinations they were subjected to by such stanch defenders of the truth as Mr. Henry J. Wilson, M. P.—for the commission did contain two or three such members—and when the full evidence appears in the report to Parliament it will certainly not be the complete triumph of falsehood over the truth that many fear from newspaper accounts.

There will be a great battle on in England this winter, and the friends of righteousness will surely score a victory for the abolition of the opium trade. When we reached Bombay last winter we were asked if we would consider the question of going to England to help in this crusade after the report was made to Parliament, in case we were needed. We could do no less than promise to pray about the matter, and learn what the Lord would have us do. Then, as we were going directly to opium-cursed regions, we felt led to study the extent of the evils of opium smoking in addition to our holding of meetings for the W. C. T. U. This we did in Singapore, Hong Kong and the parts of China we visited.

It is plainly to be seen by all fair-minded persons, that testimony as to the harmlessness of opium, when given by those who directly trade in opium or derive profit from trade in it, must always be open to grave suspicion. When our Pundita Ramabai was in Philadelphia once she was walking along the street and spied a boy just ahead of her carrying a fowl by the legs which was screaming a most piteous protest against such barbarous treatment. She hurried forward, exclaiming to the boy, "Oh, don't carry the poor thing that way, let me show you how," and lifting it she placed it tenderly in his arms, and immediately, of course, the screaming ceased; but he answered sullenly, "I wasn't hurting the hen, that's the way to carry them; the hen likes it." The Pundita turned away remarking wisely to her companion: "But I observe it is the boy that says the hen likes it, not the hen!"

It is plainly to be observed that it is the British (who, as it were, hold these Eastern nations by the heels in this opium infamy) that are saying Orientals like it. We have never known man, woman or child in India, Burmah or China, whether victims of the drug or not, among the Orientalists who had a good word to say of opium, and personally know that the opinions and the experiences of many are, of course, exactly to the contrary.

It is impossible, at this time, to give a detailed account of our work in the East in looking into the opium curse. Suffice it to say we pursued the work just as long as our physical health permitted our constant contact with the loathsome odors of the opium dens of the Orient. When we were leaving Japan last month, the Japanese newspapers were printing most harrowing accounts of the ravages of the "Black Plague" in Canton and Hong Kong. We could but repeatedly exclaim to each other, "We wonder it was not bred sooner by the reeking corruption of the opium dens."

It is easy to believe under the circumstances the repeated testimony of British surgeons, who have been sent out to protect the health of the European residents of these Eastern cities, to the effect that they have lived in the East for many, many years, and have never seen any traces of the evil effects of opium! That may, however, be nothing less than an unblushing confession of utter inattention to sanitary duties for which they have been drawing salaries as performing. Thus could many Chicago policemen go into court and testify that they have never seen a case of gambling in that city! It is on such evidence as this, largely, that iniquitous persons hope to defeat the anti opium crusade. They will find it hard work to do so.

We spent a week at Canton and two or three at Hong Kong, reaching Shanghai March 8, where we met with a most cordial welcome. Our home was with the president of the National W. C. T. U., Mrs. M. J. Farnham. Our meetings here began with a reception on the night of our arrival at the hall of the China Inland mission. About one hundred and fifty were present, missionaries and other American and English friends. Mrs. Farnham, Rev. Mr. Stevens, pastor of the Union church, the venerable Dr. Muirhead, Rev. Mr. McIntosh, of the Presbyterian mission, and others took part in the services. The tone of the meeting was spiritual, and the utterances uncompromising, and it greatly strengthened us for the meetings which followed. We addressed a Gospel temperance meeting in the same place on Sunday night; held a mass-meeting in the interests of our cause on Monday night following in the Union church, and an afternoon meeting for women at the same place on the day after. By that time we were ready for a grand rally at Astor Hall, the expenses of which were assumed by the Shanghai missionary association, which expressed a desire to coöperate with the W. C. T. U. in arranging for a series of such public meetings; but unfortunately we could not, without unfairness to other unions, linger so long. The venerable Archdeacon Thompson presided over the Astor Hall meeting, and the sympathetic response to our words was most helpful and inspiring. At the close of the meeting, in company with many friends who wished to see us off, we went on board the steamboat for our trip up the Yangtse river. At daylight we were off, and we did not end our journey until midnight the following Saturday night at Kinkiang.

OUR SCHOOLS OF METHODS.

Bay View W. C. T. U. Institute.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—One of the best means of pushing the W. C. T. U. work is by the various schools of methods, held at the Chautauqua assemblies. The W. C. T. U. Institute, held at Bay View Chautauqua, has been a great success. Superintendent J. M. Hall found a most capable conductor when he chose Mrs. Louise S. Rounds as the leader in this cause. Her thorough knowledge of the department work makes her speeches on all phases most interesting.

The meetings are held in Evelyn Hall, built by Mr. Peters in honor of his wife, a W. C. T. U. woman. The "all-roundness" of our women was shown by the fact that Mrs. A. E. Sanford, state treasurer of Illinois W. C. T. U. discussed equally well the "Typical White-ribboner in the Church," "W. C. T. U. Finance" and "Is a State Paper Necessary to our Work?" Mrs. Vie H. Campbell, president Wisconsin W. C. T. U., spoke earnestly on "The Typical White-ribboner in Business," "How shall we Educate our Daughters?" and "Effective and Defective Methods of Work." Mrs. Carrie L. Grout, recording secretary of Illinois union, gave a series of addresses on "The Ideal Home," most helpful to mothers in the care and education of their children. Miss Mary G. Hay, of Indianapolis, in a most practical method, discoursed on "The Typical White-ribboner in the Home," "Your Vote and Mine," and answered well the many questions in the question box. Mrs. P. J. Howard, president eleventh district W. C. T. U. of Michigan, ably led the music, and gave two good addresses, on "Gospel Prohibition" and "What Style of Music should be Used in our Temperance Meetings?" Mrs. G. S. Barnes, of Petoskey, gave two interesting papers on "The Best Way to Teach Temperance in our Sunday-schools" and "The Most Important Department." Mrs. Charlton Edholm, of California, discussed in two speeches "The Traffic in Girls" and "Florence Crittenton Missions." Mrs. Stone, secretary of eleventh district, read most excellent papers, sent by the writers: "Connectional Organization," Mrs. C. H. Johnson, Michigan; "How to Report for the Paper—Condense, Construct, Confine," Mrs. Julia R. Parrish, editor Michigan Union; Miss Lodie Reed, National superintendent press, read Mrs. Esther Tuttle Pritchard's excellent essay, recommending the giving of the tenth to the Lord. In the absence of Miss Mary Mahon, superintendent young woman's work in Illinois, Miss Leonore Ayres, of Indianapolis, and Mrs. Lilian Hollister, ex-superintendent Y work in Michigan, gave admirable plans of procedure in organizing our girls in the temperance work. Miss L. E. Phœnix, the well-known teacher of physical culture, deeply interested the audience in two addresses, on "The Beauty of Health" and "The Philosophy of Health." "The Work of the W. C. T. U. from a Physician's Standpoint" was considered in a fine paper by Dr. Annette Shaw, National superintendent of health and heredity. Mrs. E. N. Law, National organizer W. C. T. U., was detained by serious illness, and tender sympathy for her and Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap and our Chieftain, Miss Willard, was voiced by many a prayer.

But the gem of the session was the address of Mrs. Louise S. Rounds, on W. C. T. U. day, before the immense crowd in the auditorium. She proved conclusively that the problem of capital and labor will never be solved without prohibition of the liquor traffic, which will save the awful waste of $1,200,000,000 every year for drink, and then by the application of the Golden Rule. In many speeches the great need of a more thorough circulation of THE UNION SIGNAL was urgently set forth, and many good words said for our great Woman's Temperance Publishing Association.

A new feature of the Bay View Institute was a large table, well supplied with W. T. P. A. literature, of which the sales were very good, visitors also carrying off catalogues, by which to order this indispensable ammunition for our holy war.

The daily attendance ranged from one hundred and fifty to two hundred, and fourteen states were represented in the sessions. Mr. Hall, general superintendent, expressed great pleasure at the success of the institute, and earnestly urged Mrs. Rounds to consider herself engaged for next year.

Mountain Lake Park.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—The twelfth annual interstate conference and W. C. T. U. school of methods has just closed at Mountain Lake Park, Maryland, July 24–29.

Mrs. C. B. Buell, of Connecticut, has had charge of this meeting for many years, and has won a warm place in the hearts of those who gather on the mountain top, because of the service rendered the cause, and her splendid manner of conducting the meetings. This year we were favored once more with Miss Esther Pugh, of Ohio, as a helper.

The school of methods occupied the morning hours and the following topics were discussed: "How can we Make our Evangelistic Work more Effective?" opened by Mrs. Anna M. Hammer, president of W. C. T. U. of Pennsylvania; "The Legal Status of Woman," and "How can Woman's Ballot help the Temperance Reform?" by Mrs. Jane A. Johnson, of West Virginia; Finance—Proportionate Giving the Duty of Christians," by Miss Esther Pugh, of Ohio; "The Duty of the W. C. T. U. toward the Political Phase of the Temperance Reform," opened by Mrs. Jennie M. McClurkin, of Michigan. Others participated in all discussions, and many questions were asked and answered.

The afternoons were given to business meetings, and to a class in physical culture, and talks on Health and Dress by Miss Lydia J. Newcomb, of Michigan. The evenings were devoted to lectures—temperance and popular subjects. George W. Bain, of Kentucky, interested and entertained his hearers with "Drink, the Enemy of Labor and Business," and "Down Among the Masses." Mr. John A. Nicholls, of Massachusetts, gave two excellent stereopticon lectures, and Mrs. S. E. V. Emery, of Michigan, spoke on "The Industrial Situation."

The platform was occupied on Sunday by Mrs. J. K. Barney, of Providence, R. I., who spoke in the morning from the word "Watch," and in the evening on "Clean Hands."

Mrs. Hammer conducted a children's meeting one afternoon; an hour each morning was given to devotional services, with a different leader each day, Sabbath morning being led by Mrs. Hammer, who gave a beautiful exposition of the Book of Ruth.

The Silver Lake Quartette, of New York, furnished the music, and enlivened the meeting with their inimitable songs. While new faces were present this year, some who have gathered with us these many years and have endeared themselves to all were missing, among them Miss Addie Sherman, removed by death, and Mrs. S. N. Tudor, of Baltimore, by sickness. Jennie Smith, railroad evangelist, whose summer home is on the mountain top, furnishes a home for white-ribboners, and reminds us of our duty to pray for those who carry us safely all over the country in our temperance work—the railroad men.

Mountain Lake Park is a delightful place to spend a summer vacation, and plans have been made for a good program for next year. Keep it in mind when making arrangements for another year's vacation.

PROHIBITION ASSEMBLY.

I want also to say a word about the Prohibition Assembly at Moundsville, West Virginia, which has a W. C. T. U. day besides giving the forenoon of each day to a W. C. T. U. school of methods. The assembly just preceded the conference at Mountain Lake Park, and occupied eleven days—July 13-23.

Mrs. C. B. Buell had charge of this school of methods also, and had the same helpers as at the Park, with the exception of Mrs. Hammer, but had in addition, Mrs. Morrow, president of West Virginia W. C. T. U., Mrs. Engle, of Wheeling, Mrs. Love, and a number of others.

Plans are being made to broaden the work next year and bring in many questions of the times under the name of Woman's Council.

This assembly, under the management of Dr. C. H. Mead, of the Silver Lake Quartette, and his co-workers, has grown in numbers and influence and stands among the foremost of these summer meetings, wielding a great influence for the cause of reform.

John G. Woolley appeared for the first time on this platform this year and captivated every one with his eloquent words, and many votes were made for the Prohibition cause. JENNIE MCCLURKIN, Sec.

Fair Grove, Mich.

MANITOBA PROHIBITION LEAGUE.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—The third annual convention of the Manitoba Prohibition League was held in Winnipeg, July 24 to 26.

It opened with a temperance experience meeting led by the Rev. Alex. Grant. Those present were invited to recite, individually, such Scripture texts as in their temperance warfare they had found most suggestive and comforting. The response was hearty: "Jesus was manifested that he might destroy the works of the devil"; "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me"; "I have overcome the world," were among these inspiring texts.

Then the old-timers gave their experiences. Father Nixon, looking back over half a century, remembered as his first bit of temperance work, being sent to stop the illicit sale of liquor by a widow who claimed that she could make a living in no other way. A brother told of persecutions along the path; of his poor horse having had tail and ears cut off by miscreants who objected to his teetotal master, and how the animal had been proudly ridden, in spite of his pitifully ludicrous appearance, till he was known all over the country as the "prohibition horse," a standing advertisement of the temperance cause, and reproach to its enemies.

The committee on "Political Action" included one lady member. It reported in favor of a third party to be called the "Independent Prohibition Party," independent as to politics but solid in making prohibition of the liquor traffic its chief issue. This report was adopted with but four dissenting votes.

The convention closed with a mass-meeting. Rev. Canon Pentreath, rector of Christ Church, was in the chair. Addresses were delivered by W. M. Mulock (again elected president of the Prohibition League), Dr. Fleming, of Brandon, Dr. Amelia Yeomans, of Winnipeg, Miss Phelps, of Ontario, and J. K. McLennan, of Treherne, Manitoba.

At this meeting the following resolution was passed unanimously: "That this convention indorses the cause of equal suffrage, believing that it is just in principle and must (consequently) be helpful along all lines of legitimate progress."

Manitoba has reason to be proud of its Prohibition League. It is an executive council composed (through representatives sent from each body) of all the temperance associations, churches, including the Salvation Army, and labor associations of the province. Thus it focuses for active use prohibition sentiment wherever found, and it is the first of the provinces so to centralize the temperance forces. The impulse it has given the work has been widely felt and shows itself to-day in its advanced stand for justice and moral progress.

The attendance was large and representative, the discussions were earnest and interesting, the papers carefully prepared and full of wise suggestions, whose ultimate outcome will be in effective work in the Prohibition field, and a grand harvest of good to the people of Manitoba.

AMELIA YEOMANS, M. D.

Winnipeg, Manitoba.

THE HYDE PARK PROTECTIVE ASSOCIATION.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Within the past twelve months we have given attention through our own agents to 116 illegal liquor sellers, swearing out and following up 1,144 separate warrants of arrest, and secured convictions against practically all offenders, with fines aggregating $8,660, and have completely broken up about 100 saloons and dens of vice. In this campaign we secured at least 50 editorials and news articles in the leading daily papers, and held over 100 interviews with police and other city and county officials.

The treasurer's statement for the above twelve months is as follows:

RECEIPTS.

July 13, 1893, check from former treasurer		$ 684.70
Subscriptions collected during the year		2,846.56
		$3,531.26

DISBURSEMENTS.

Salaries and expenses of agents	$2,943.85
Attorneys' fees	445.00
Printing, postage, etc	107.41
Sundries	17.50	$3,513.76
Balance on hand		$ 17.50

The officers of the association receive no salary, though their service is often laborious.

Since February 1, 1894, our expenses though constant, have been small, as we found it practicable during this period to do our work largely through the police department. In this present month, on the other hand, we have been forced to unusual expense in defending, by special counsel and witnesses, our Hyde Park anti-saloon laws, in the case of Spittal vs. (Mayor) Hopkins. As has been the unvarying rule of our association, we won decisions in our favor upon every point, although Spittal, the saloon-keeper, was defended by Alexander Sullivan and partner, with plenty of brewers' money, as we believe, to help them. In addition to saving our priceless laws unimpaired we obtained from this trial the decision by Judge Windes, new to most of our people, that in option districts with a majority signing for a saloon the mayor is under no obligation to grant a license unless believed by him to be for the public good.

Last fall (to the surprise of the onlooking world) we won our World's Fair fight completely. A little baffled earlier, about September 1, through the merit of a new and more vigorous policy, we began to win all fights, and soon routed every illegal saloon-keeper we could find, and closed the season in complete possession of the field. The association has acquired the reputation of being invincible.

But great dangers beset us now, second only to those of the World's Fair time. A small minority of the newcomers, occupying the new buildings recently erected near Jackson Park, want saloons and liquor about them, as also do the rowdy class who visit our district, especially on Sundays. Plenty of unscrupulous men have been found, and are still being found, to run hotels and saloons to pander to this demand in defiance of the law of this state.

We have no choice except to maintain our organization with a fair working fund at all times in the treasury. If this association should be broken down or starved out the same degree of public apathy would totally discourage such good friends as our cause can count in the police department and at the city hall, and there would be nothing left to preserve the man who is reading this sheet from seeing a saloon opened in the same block in which are his home and his children. And the cause of religion and morality would suffer an incalculable disaster.

At present we estimate $2,500 per year as sufficient to maintain the work of the association and to preserve our homes. This is a very moderate amount to raise, provided each does not leave the responsibility to others. We request your subscriptions. Our treasurer is W. H. Brintnall, cashier Drovers' National Bank, Union Stock Yards, Chicago. THOMAS A. HALL, President.

Chicago, Ill.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

That the trial of your faith, being much more precious than of gold that perisheth, though it be tried with fire, might be found unto praise and honor and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ.—I Peter 1:7.

Our Greek professor, Mr. Alfred A. Wright, in passing through the city the other day, called at the Temple. Not finding the writer in her office he left the following note for her: "I have called, just for one moment, to say, 'The Lord bless thee.' If I had money I would leave that also. But sympathy and confidence from real friends are also precious. On this score credit this, my deposit, at many millions." The little note seemed to me to be more precious than many dollars, much as the dollars are needed these days. Our brother evidently has sounded the depth of the human heart and knows what a sustaining power the sympathy and confidence of friends is to every honest soul.

The report of the second triennial convention of the W. C. T. U. of Australasia, held in Sydney, New South Wales, March 29, has just reached us. The address of its able ex-president, Miss Jessie Ackermann, is full of interest. She devotes a page and a half to a description of the Temple, its inception and purpose. From our heart we thank her for her kind words of appreciation. A most encouraging letter from Miss Sarah Thrush, treasurer of the Quincy, Ill., W. C. T. U., enclosing a check from the union for $29, the last payment on a $100 pledge to the Temple, has been received. Miss Irene H. Smith, of Quincy W. C. T. U., also writes a letter which contains many notable things worthy of emulation. We give a few extracts:

Miss Smith says: "I am so glad we, at last, are ready with our last payment on our pledge of $100, and with it I believe our own success, by the grace of God, is only a prophecy of yours (ours) in the Temple which you have built. Three years ago our W. C. T. U. through the influence, very possibly and probably of your example, entered into a contract for an abiding place. After a period of fourteen years of wandering, meeting in more than as many places, parlors, churches, halls, rented rooms, we have at last a W. C. T. U. home. Here all weary white ribbon travelers are invited to come in and rest awhile, our superintendent furnishing meals to all such at a moderate price. We accommodate quite a number of working girls. We are now aiming to provide temporary shelter for friendless women and girls seeking employment. We hope, in time, to add other branches. Our property is valued at $6,000, we paid for it $5,500; principal and interest was all paid the 1st of June. June 3 we held a praise service, assisted by our city pastors. On the 5th we held a Jubilee Reception, inviting our many helpers whose generosity had made the occasion possible. We started without a cent. The Lord honored our faith; so does He yours, and we look forward confidently to the time when the Temple will hold a jubilee, too. May God speed the day! Perhaps we can help again."

Let our white-ribboners who are fearful that giving to the Temple will impoverish the unions, take note what the Quincy W. C. T. U. accomplished. Raising $100 for the Temple was but an incentive to them to raise the needed $5,500 for a building for themselves. Both objects were accomplished within three years, through faith and works going hand in hand.

Mrs. M. M. Green, treasurer of the Westminster, Mass., W. C. T. U., encloses a pledge for $100 from the union, with a check, making a $25 payment on the same. The following word of cheer accompanies the gift, giving it double value: "We are glad to do this for you, for ourselves and for the cause we love so much. Our best wishes and our prayers are yours, and when you are tried and troubled remember the great heart of Massachusetts is throbbing in sympathy." Here is another sweet and gracious white-ribboner, Mrs. H. A. Pharr, president third district Louisiana. She also sends a word of cheer along the line to brighten these dark days. She forwards $7.10, made by raising a Baby Band and Cherub Band. She writes: "I will start out again soon and try to complete both lists, and also start a Veteran Band. I love to work for the Temple. I have out thirty mite-boxes, and next week will give the children a lawn party on my own grounds to raise money to help fill them. The lawn party is for the Berwick L. T. L. When you were traveling, trying to raise money for the Temple, we prayed earnestly and constantly for you. So you must remember, away down in Louisiana you have true and faithful friends." Mrs. Mary A. Fellows, Wichita, Kan., sends $5 on the union's pledge. She says: "One lady gave me a two dollar and a half gold piece, which she has kept for thirty years. She said she did not know anything she would part with it for but the Temple, so you may feel that it is touching hearts." We deeply regret that by some oversight $35, forwarded by Troy, N. Y., union No. 2 at various times on a pledge of $100, was not acknowledged at the time of receipt of money in the Temple Items. Mrs. H. R. Tomlinson, Perry, N. Y., sends $7, which completes the $100 pledged by the Perry W. C. T. U. to the Temple.

That $3,000 of the July interest is still lying uncalled for in our Chicago bank, shows the confidence the public has in our Temple Trust Bonds. We hear only words of praise and commendation for our beautiful Columbian souvenir and Temple souvenir silver teaspoon. Mrs. A. M. Hapgood, Boston, Mass., writes: "The Columbian souvenir reached me this morning; many thanks for it. While I had only 'heard of it by the hearing of the ear,' when my eyes saw it it greatly exceeded my expectations. I wonder I had not coveted it long before."

SERVICE.

Ah! grand is the world's work, and noble, forsooth,
The doing one's part, be it ever so small.
You, reaping with Boaz, I, gleaning with Ruth,
Are honored by serving, yet servants of all.

No drudge in his corner but speeds the world's wheels,
No serf in the field but is sowing God's seed;
More noble, I think, in the dust though he kneels,
Than the pauper of wealth, who makes scorn of the deed.

Is toil but a treadmill? Think not of the grind,
But think of the grist, what is done and to do,
The world growing better, more like to God's mind,
By long, faithful labor of helpers like you.

The broom or the spade or the shuttle that plies
Its own honest task in its own honest way,
Serves heaven not less than a star in the skies—
What more could the Pleiades do than obey?

MRS. HOWARD'S GOOD HOUSEKEEPING.

BY LAURA J. RITTENHOUSE.

Mrs. Howard pulled off the dress waist she was fitting, threw it impatiently upon the cutting table, and removing a lot of pins from her mouth thrust them vindictively into the pincushion.

"I despise trying on a dress even when I have a dressmaker, but it's ten times worse when I haven't. I know I'll never get that shirring right if I work at it a week," she said angrily.

A knock at the door interrupted her.

"Come in!" she said, in a voice far from amiable. "Oh! I'm so glad it is you, Mrs. Thayer. You're such an expert. I'm sure you can tell me just what to do with this aggravating dress. I declare I feel as if"—but her face brightened as she saw her friend.

Mrs. Thayer took off her gloves and with skillful fingers soon had the refractory shirring in perfect order.

"There!" she said, "it is all right now, and looks as neat as a pin. I'd fit the collar on for you, too, but I'm in a hurry. I'm on my way to our W. C. T. U. meeting, and want you to go with me. Won't you?"

"Really I can't, Mrs. Thayer. I'm so rushed with my sewing I hardly have time to breathe properly."

"And you probably don't know how, even if you had time," said Mrs. Thayer, smilingly.

"What do you mean?" Mrs. Howard asked rather resentfully.

"Just what I said, my dear, and my mission is to take you where you can learn to breathe correctly and to live right generally. It's hygiene day, you know."

"Oh, dear! how foolish you folks are. Just as if breathing isn't a part of our existence. And as to regulating my living. I'm sure few of you are better housekeepers than I. Cleanliness and fresh air are hobbies with me, you know, so you'd better hunt some one else to convert this afternoon. Besides, I'm too nervous to sit still at a meeting. I've worked with that dress till I'm ready to fly all to pieces."

"That's the very reason you ought to put your sewing away and go with me. The rest would do you good. Then, too, you would gain information aside from cleanliness and ventilation. There's to be a paper on child-culture. Every mother ought to be interested in that."

"Now, Mrs. Thayer, it's no use urging, I'm not going to your temperance meetings. I don't believe in them. I think the best place for women is at home, attending to their own business. I teach my boy not to drink nor lie nor swear, and that's as much as any of you do. There's plenty of women who need reforming, but I'm not one of them."

Mrs. Thayer's beaming face clouded as she said: "There are few of us who do not need reforming in some direction."

At that moment the door was thrown open and eight-year-old Roy rushed noisily into the room.

"Mamma, can't I bring Earl Evans into the sitting-room? I want to show him my new game," he said, face and voice full of pleading.

"No, you can't! I'm not going to have everything upset and tumbled about by a lot of boys."

"But, mamma, we won't upset things. I'll put the game away when we're through with it. Please, ma'am, let us!"

"Indeed, I'll do no such thing. There would be mud all over the carpet, even if you did put your things away. Not another word! Go right along out of the house and play. You can't hurt anything on the street, unless it is yourselves," said Mrs. Howard, irritably.

The boy opened his lips as if to speak, but his mother's threatening looks intimidated him. Slamming the door, he called back angrily: "You never will let a fellow have any fun, for fear of upsetting the house or spoiling the old carpets."

Mrs. Howard's face turned scarlet. "I'd call him back and spank him, if he hadn't run off so fast," she said, as the sound of clattering feet down the stairway was followed by the banging of the hall door.

Mrs. Thayer's heart began to thump violently, for she felt she must speak, even though she vexed her friend.

"Yet you said only a few minutes ago that you taught your boy not to tell lies."

"Well, and so I do!" Mrs. Howard said, sharply.

"Then why punish him for telling the truth? You do seem to value the order and tidiness of your house more than your child's happiness. I scarcely ever come here that you do not send him out of the house to keep him from upsetting things. And when you thus deprive a boy of home happiness you defraud him of his most precious heritage. If he finds his pleasures on the streets or in worse places he is almost sure to come under pernicious influences, so while you are keeping your house so immaculate your child's soul may become soiled and polluted."

Mrs. Thayer spoke rapidly, in her earnestness saying more than she had intended.

Mrs. Howard's face turned from scarlet to a white heat of anger. "You let your fanatical ideas run away with your good sense and your politeness," she said, frigidly. "When I desire your advice concerning my household affairs and my child's training, I'll ask for it."

"Forgive me! I could not help it."

Mrs. Howard drew herself up haughtily. "Perhaps it would be well to drop this conversation before it becomes too disagreeably personal. I should be sorry to have your deep concern in my private affairs cause you to be late at your meeting."

Mrs. Thayer arose to go at once. "Don't be so angry with me. It is because I love you and your boy that I want you to think of my suggestion. Good-bye."

Mrs. Howard stood still until she heard the front door shut, then threw herself upon her bed and shed angry tears.

"The meddlesome, disagreeable thing! She's only jealous because my house is kept in so much better order than her own. And her children hang around home till I should think she would go wild with their laughing and clatter. My head aches so I shall not be able to sew another stitch, after hearing all that horrid stuff. Why can't people learn to attend to their own affairs? That's what comes of these temperance societies for women."

Then she went back over the whole conversation, and remembered how she had forbidden Roy to play in the house. Somehow she began to feel uncomfortable and uneasy. What did the boy do when she sent him out of doors to play? Whom did he play with? Was there really any danger for him? Her conscience began to sting and her anger towards Mrs. Thayer to diminish. Presently she got up and ran down stairs. She looked for Roy, first on the street in front of the house, then in the back yard. Voices in the barn arrested her attention, and with cautious step she approached until she could see within.

Earl Evans and Roy sat on the manger smoking cigarettes, while a coarse-faced, dirty boy she had never seen before was drawing long whiffs through an old cob pipe, stopping at intervals to indulge in jokes so coarse that Mrs. Howard was appalled. She endured the torture but a few minutes before she made herself known. The strange boy was sent away with sharp rebukes, the other two were taken to the bathroom and put through a course of vigorous scrubbing of mouths and teeth and hair. To the distressed mother it seemed the children were polluted body and soul, and she felt that the one great effort of her life hereafter must be to try to remove the stains before they became indelible.

In spite of her harshness to her little Roy, he was the idol of her heart. She felt unable to say or do anything strong enough for the occasion. Indeed, her own shortcomings as a mother rushed upon her so sharply and so suddenly that she felt helpless and almost hopeless. Her very silence impressed and awed the children, it was so different from her usual scolding, and her white, miserable face made them ashamed and penitent.

"I'm so sorry, mamma! Bob said you wouldn't really care, that mothers never did; that all they cared for was to get boys out of the way, and—and—I guess that's the truth, isn't it?" Roy said apologetically.

"No, dear, it is not true! Mammas do care very much indeed; more than I can tell you. But we will not talk about it just now. Take Earl into the sitting-room and play whatever you please, so that you do not hurt yourselves or destroy anything. Just have a good time and, oh, my darling, never forget that mamma loves you!"

She could say no more, her voice was so choked with tears, and the two little boys went quietly down stairs and soberly talked the matter over together.

When Mrs. Thayer reached her home from the W. C. T. U. meeting, to her intense surprise she found Mrs. Howard awaiting her.

"I've found I do need reforming. I've been a heathen in my home, and I've come to have you teach me how to remove the sin spots from my little Roy's soul," the humbled woman said, smiling faintly.

It was almost dark when she returned home, some of the heaviness lifted from her heart, her hands full of leaflets and books on child culture, social purity, heredity.

The next week found her an eager listener at the W. C. T. U. meeting. Under the ennobling influences exerted there she put forever behind her many false ideas concerning home-keeping and child-rearing, and learned of the beauty, broadness and holiness of the higher life of the true mother.

GETTING PEOPLE TO READ.

BY JULIA COLMAN.

This is done not so much by asking them outright to read, as by so managing that they will wish to read. A good way is to take up some point on which we can stimulate their curiosity, and then lead them on to other points. Suppose we begin with our associates, asking, perhaps, if they fancy it is generally known that there is alcohol in root beer, and what per cent, and how much suffices to create an appetite; and the significance of the fact that the popular advertisements represent the little drinker as continually crying out for "more!" Or take Jamaica ginger in a similar way, and perhaps show up the alcohol it contains by setting fire to it. In both cases quote some bright, wide-awake tract which you have at hand, and probably your friend will read the whole of it. This can be carried on indefinitely, and it is worth the while thus to win individuals, if for no other reason than because they make up the community.

To do these things, we need to be well read up ourselves, and to learn what there is available for such work. I know a lady who has just procured quite an assortment (for one dollar) of the literature bearing on the medical question. She thinks the people need information as well as the doctors. The pamphlets, including copies of the Medical Pioneer, are for her own reading and to loan to individuals. She is studying with a view of educating on that subject the community in which she lives. She realizes what the mechanic never forgets, that one must be very familiar with his tools to be able to use them to advantage.

Who is ready now to procure a kit of tools against the time when they can be used to advantage in the coming season of work? What theme will you select? With them all should be some science to prove the presence of the poison, and some gospel to urge people to do as well as they know. The thrift question is timely, in view of the present financial stress, and there is an abundance of tracts, pamphlets, and books available. The new pamphlet by Dr. Fernald is peculiarly apposite, and would help grandly in such a crusade of enlightenment. Shall we avail ourselves promptly of these economical helps?—National Temperance Advocate.

A WORD FOR PARENTS ON MARRIAGE.

BY ISABEL SOMERSET.

To withhold from one who is about to enter the most important relationship in life a knowledge of what that relationship involves is, to my mind, contrary to reason and to righteousness. There is no other step in life concerning which any one dreams of raising the question as to whether a human being should deliberately be condemned to take in the dark.

It is well known that a man who contemplates marriage will tolerate no flaw in the reputation of the woman he desires to make his wife, and the social problem will never be solved until woman is in a position to demand as clear a knowledge of his past, and a record as clear as he requires of her.

The truest education is that which most adequately prepares the young for those duties which they are likely to be called upon to fulfill in later years, but none are so important as those which pertain to their relations to humanity, and of these immeasurably the most important are those dependent on the marriage tie. It is my deliberate conviction, therefore, that a knowledge of the laws which govern such relationship should not come with a sudden shock and bewilderment upon the youthful mind, but should be gradually unfolded throughout the entire process of education as an integral part of the wonderful plan by which the Creator has said in every range of nature, "Let there be life."

TOUCH IT NEVER.

Children, do you see the wine
In the crystal goblet shine?
Be not tempted by its charm.
Children, hate it!
Touch it never,
Fight it ever.

Do you know what causeth woe
Bitter as the heart can know?
'Tis that self-same ruby wine
Which would tempt that soul of thine.
Children, hate it!
Touch it never,
Fight it ever.

Never let it pass your lips,
Never even let the tips
Of your fingers touch the bowl;
Hate it from your inmost soul.
Truly hate it!
Touch it never,
Fight it ever.

Fight it! With God's help stand fast
Long as life or breath shall last,
Heart meet heart and hand join hand,
Hurl the demon from our land.
Oh, then hate it!
Touch it never,
Fight it ever.

A BOY WITH A PURPOSE.

I'm but a little boy, 'tis true,
But I've a purpose planned
Like Daniel, ever to be true
And by that purpose stand.

I love the temperance cause, I do,
I love my native land.
God helping me I will be true
And thus for temperance stand.

Now as I bid you all adieu,
I beg of you to stand
Beside the W. C. T. U.,
Until they take the land.

HOW THEY WERE CURED.

A LITTLE GIRL'S STORY.

"I'll tell you, Daisy, something nicer than playing dominoes," said Kitty, packing them neatly in the box. "It's helping each other improve."

"How?" asked Daisy, settling back into her chair for a "good listen," as she said when a story was in order.

"Well, just this way. We'll each get a little blank book and write down each other's faults; then trade books, you see."

"Splendid!" cried Daisy, skipping out of her chair and clapping her hands, "and we'll have it for a 'secrick,' and not tell anybody."

Daisy lived next door to Kitty and they were almost constantly together during their waking hours, and aside from occasional little "spats," which never lasted but a moment or two, they were the most peaceable of playmates, and it gave one pleasure to see them together.

The program was changed completely now. Instead of playing in their usual happy and contented way they fell to studying one another critically, and making laborious entries in the little books.

A coolness and a feeling of unfriendliness, such as they had never before experienced, gradually came between them. The day at length arrived when the books were to reveal to each her faults. Daisy came over, and with many misgivings the books silently changed hands, and they sat down to read.

For a long time the ticking of the clock and the purring of the kitten in the window were the only sounds in the room. Then a little book came flying across the floor, turning many somersaults before it collapsed utterly, and an angry voice exclaimed:

"You are just as mean as you can be to write such things about me!" and Kitty's tears began to flow.

"Well, you're a hateful old thing, and I sha'n't never come to see you again. So here!" and Daisy flounced out of the house in high dudgeon, too angry and hurt to even think of her hat.

Kitty threw herself on the sofa, and here her mother found her, bundled into a dejected little heap in one corner of it, crying bitterly.

"Why, Kitty! what is the matter, and where is Daisy?"

"Gone home; we've fit," sobbed Kitty.

"Impossible! How did it happen?" exclaimed her mother, sitting down beside her; and by a few adroitly put questions she learned the trouble, and picking up the book off the floor, she read the following:

KITTY'S FAULTS.

Don't bite your nails so much.
Don't feel so big in your white hat.
Don't leave your close on the floor.
Don't sit on your foot, it's unproper.
Don't be mad when Freddie Blake gives me gum drops.
Don't carry my doll by the leg.
Don't blow on my bird when he sings too loud.
Button up your own shoes, I do.

DAISY'S FAULTS.

Don't throw your bonnit on a chair.
Don't get mad when I dress the kitten up in your doll's best things.
Put your hand over your mouth when you gape.
Don't act so silly in Sunday-school. You make me sick.
Don't think you are so smart sometimes before the boys.
Don't open your mouth so wide when you laugh.

With difficulty Kitty's mother suppressed a laugh which threatened to burst forth, and said:

"We cannot expect to keep our friends if we criticise them in this way. We find it hard to bear when told our faults in the kindest and gentlest manner. Our enemies are ever ready to enlighten us on that score, and even then it does not wound as when a friend takes us in hand. It takes any amount of tact, my dear, and instead of searching out the faults it's better to find out the good qualities; then you'll always be at peace with them and yourself also. Now you would better write a note to Daisy at once and make up. You can't afford to lose her friendship, nor she yours."

Kitty dried her eyes and sat down to write.

When she opened the gate to carry the note to Daisy she spied that little girl coming out of her own, evidently on the same errand.

They hurried toward eath other holding a note at arm's length before them, with a look at once timid and questioning; then a smile of forgiveness beamed from both faces, and feeling that the trial was at an end, they sat sociably down on the edge of the sidewalk and read their respective notes. Daisy's to Kitty ran:

"My Dear Kitty, I am not mad no more and hope these few lines will find you the same.

"Yours sinsearly, DAISY."

And Kitty's:

"Dear Daisy, I am sorry we tried to improve. Come over; mamma is going to make caramels. p. s. and get your hat. Yours respectable, KITTY."

"We won't ever do it again, will we, Kitty?"

"Never! Mamma says we must use 'tacks' when we tell faults."

"Tacks! How?" asked Daisy wonderingly.

"Oh, I can't tell how," said Kitty, feeling herself in deep water. "I s'pose we'll know when we're growed. Come, Daisy, there's mamma at the window putting on her apron," and hand in hand they hippity-hopped up the walk as happy as two nice little girls could possibly be.—Advocate.

YOUNG WORKERS.

It very often happens that a boy has to be busy with work of some kind, when he really wants to read and become educated. Now, this desire for education is a splendid thing in a boy. Indeed, there is nothing in the world that is any better. But, it often happens that a boy is prevented by circumstances from doing that which would seem to be the best thing for him. Here is a word of encouragement to such boys. Read all you can in the best papers and magazines. Pick up scraps of information about people and things, and make them your own, so that you will remember them. Some day, your knowledge, picked up little by little, will be very extensive, and you will find that you compare very favorably with boys who have had much better chances for education than yourself. Console yourself with the thought that some of the best work in the world has been done under very trying circumstances. Sir Walter Raleigh wrote his "History of the World" during his eleven years' imprisonment. And who knows but you, during your years of work, when you would like to be enjoying years of study and recreation, may be laying the foundation of some piece of work as great as any Sir Walter Raleigh ever did?—Ledger.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—I think that our Cozy Corner boys and girls who go to Sunday-school (and I am pretty certain that nearly all of you do) must have been deeply interested in that splendid lesson we had several Sundays ago about the boyhood of Jesus. This lesson, you remember, told of Christ's visit to Jerusalem at the time of the feast of the Passover and His talk in the temple with the wise men. To young people who want to grow Christ-like (and who among our Cozy Cornerers does not?) every detail of the boyhood of Christ is of greatest interest; you want to learn how He spent His time and what He did in order that your lives may be like His. And so you read the apostle's account with eagerness and listened well to your teacher's words.

And in doing these simple things you are following after Christ. For although we take Him as a model, it is a law of life that no beings can be exactly alike and you can only aim to live that kind of a life. You cannot go to a Passover as Christ did, for there is no temple, and you are too far away from Jerusalem. But you can obey the parents, whose duty it is to watch over your early years, as He did, and you can attend church and Sabbath-school; you can think of good things always, and be kind and gentle as He was.

As some one has said, comparing the heart to a seed, be sure you've a seed of the right kind; keep your face turned toward the sun and God will take care of your growth. May each one of you so live that your name might take the blank place in the verse describing the growth of the child, Jesus: "And —— grew in wisdom and stature and in favor with God and man."

Affectionately,

Aunt Jane

Our salute for the temperance family Cozy Cornerers.

I live in a country near a little town on the north called Lamanda Park. There are one saloon there, a church and a reading room, where the children meet for sewing-school Saturday afternoon. On the south there is the old Mission. There are eight saloons there and the Catholic church. I used to belong to the L. T. L. when we lived in the city; there are none near us now.

THE CRISIS IN COLORADO.

There is not a spot of ground on the earth's surface at the present moment which is the seed-bed of so many hopes as that sunshiny, mountain commonwealth where women will, in November next, cast their ballots for the first time in a state election.

Meanwhile Republicans are saying, "We have long been the dominant power. But for us, women would not now be citizens, and as an act of loyalty they ought to vote for us." And Populists are saying, "But we are the growing power; we helped to gain this battle, and we have declared nationally in favor of the enfranchisement of women, which the Republicans have never dreamed of doing. We have also said the same in the platform of almost every state, which they have not done, and recently in Kansas, where the equal suffrage amendment to the constitution is now trembling in the balance, the Republicans definitely declined to declare themselves in favor." The Democrats —they are not saying much, and very properly, for at the North they are the simon-pure antagonists of woman's ballot and its twin sister, prohibition. At the same time the Prohibition party in Colorado is saying, naturally enough, "The women ought to vote for us. We have put equal suffrage in our platform from the first, and we represent their ideas of home purity and home protection far more adequately than any other party that was ever formed."

The W. C. T. U. is a great power in Colorado, and those who are best informed declare that its systematic, steadfast work has had more to do with securing the enfranchisement of women than that of any other society whatever. So here we have four parties in the field, three of whom can at least make some pretension to "the hand" of the Colorado women in that strong new sense that implies a hand with a ballot in it. Able men and women are in the field canvassing the state for each of these three parties.

It is a spectacle for men and angels, and we fear that it is one in which another class of spirits, not so pleasant to contemplate, take a profound interest. For Prohibitionists, Populists and Republicans undoubtedly include within their circles of power well-nigh all the elements of good in Colorado, while it is a blazing, burning fact that they can no more "get together" than fire and water, cats and dogs. There are myriads in each of the two older circles who think alike concerning the outlawing of the liquor traffic, the gambling house, the haunt of infamy, but their respective parties have a greater attraction for them than these principles have as yet gained. It is one of the most curious psychological facts that the mind can contemplate, this devoted adherence to a perfectly soulless thing made up of human units that could so readily rearrange themselves on lines more helpful and congenial, if they only thought so.

We will do the rank and file of each of these parties the justice to declare our belief that they would be willing and glad to form a new alignment, but they are mere passengers that "wait for the wagon and all take a ride" with drivers who hold the reins with a grasp tenacious as death and gee-haw the team whithersoever they will. Meanwhile one man goes to his farm and another to his merchandise, leaving the party boss to "lay the pipes" for such nominations as seem good in his own sight, holding the caucus in a saloon, and enlisting a lot of men, mostly of idle and vicious habits, to "whoop it up" for candidates whose destiny the "boss" has already determined in the secret council of his own will.

In some better state of society this spell is certain to be broken, and because we believe that the instincts of self-protection and home-protection in women would not permit them to be so preoccupied and unmindful of public interests as men have become, is the reason that we want to see them have a larger share in public life. At any rate, into the witch's broth of modern politics there is but one ingredient more that can be added, and that is the protective instinct of the mother-sex; if this does not prove to be a branch of sweetness, then in our opinion the experiment of popular government is a failure.

But Colorado is a case in point. What if the women follow the party affiliations of their fathers and husbands, brothers and sons? What if they, like men, prefer party to principle? Ah, there's the rub. That is why the eyes of the progressive people of the world are just now centered on the beautiful plains and mountain sides of the Centennial state. They wonder how the homes will speak now that they have at last the opportunity and the authority. But for ourselves we do not wonder. We have yet to learn of a single instance where women were able to band themselves together against the vermin institutions that infest the immediate neighborhood of the nurseries where they rear their little ones, and have not done so. We believe that there is too much ozone in Colorado air for its mothers to become so anæmic as to cast their ballots for party rather than principle. It was not in vain that Mrs. Mary Shields, of Colorado Springs, at great physical discomfort, toiled on from town to town in the early days of the white-ribbon movement in Colorado; or that Mrs. Kate Thompson, of Longmont, moved forward in such wise and gentle leadership; or that Mrs. Eva Higgins, of Denver, now marshals the hosts of our local unions "For God and Home and Native Land." The National W. C. T. U. has in Mrs. Clara Hoffman sent one of its strongest leaders to the Pike's Peak country. The Prohibition party has put brave Mrs. Gougar in the field, and others are to follow to the extent of our ability.

Where are the Prohibitionists who, in this emergency, will send enough money to Headquarters to enable the National W. C. T. U. to detail for special work in Colorado half a dozen of our best women? Nothing but the lack of funds has prevented us from sending speakers and literature to this strategic point. Everybody knows the stress and distress of these times, which bear most heavily on those who are striving to advance reforms that antagonize "vested interests and political ambition," but meanwhile the liquor traffic and its allies never lack money for the sinews of war. They secure their daily quota by propelling down the throats of the people that which helps to make them bad citizens, and everybody knows this, yet the dramshop, that open sore of the world, still infects the atmosphere of the entire republic. We appeal to good men to give us money. We have not got it ourselves, but if they will help us, we will put forces into Colorado that shall bring the arrest of thought to thousands of minds and screw up the courage of wavering citizens to the sticking point of prohibition before the Ides of next November.

INSPIRING FINANCE.

It is perhaps an exception for financial statements to be "inspiring" to any one outside of the circle immediately concerned, but this exception is very happily true of an attractive appearing pamphlet which contains "A brief statement of the financial standing of the Salvation Army during 1893-94." It comes from the pen of the valiant commander of this unique army, Ballington Booth, and is full of interest, instruction and inspiration. Concentration is the life of force, systematic organization the strength of effort, and aside from its "fire" and zeal, the rigid system upon which the work of the Salvation Army is based is one great secret of its success. This systematic procedure is evident in all the lines of Army work, but a final conviction of it comes in the careful examination of the little book in question, since the use of money is a touchstone that bears testimony to the mathematical and economic abilities of the expender.

To show how the funds received by these untiring workers are disbursed so as to benefit the largest number possible of God's most needy ones we quote the following statement: "Consider . . the slum women, their Rescue Homes, their slum posts, and the thousands in the terrible under-world who have been benefited through their patient, loving ministry. Three thousand, eight hundred and seventy-nine dollars and eighty-five cents has been received in support and furtherance of the slum branch. Out of this there has been expended $3,024.46, leaving a balance of $855.39; but now consider the astonishing amount of work done for this money during the last year: 20,393 tenements have been visited; 59,989 slums and dives have been visited; 66,007 families have been assisted in some form or other, whereby want has been lessened and distress has been alleviated; 18,037 garments have been made and repaired, and ladies will know what work this means to those already overworked, while 121,-559 persons have been dealt with personally on the streets concerning their souls and the necessity of leading lives of righteousness."

Some of the regularly recurring demands upon the Salvation Army coffers are the support of Homes of Rest for disabled officers; the rescue work—"that which is removing the brand that society has so deeply engraved on the foreheads of the unfortunate and wayward who have been trampled beneath the feet of the unchaste and merciless, the work among fallen women"; the training of officers for army service and many others.

May it not be true that the wonderful power of conserving the money force so as to make "one penny do the work of two" is a result of two things: First, the workers have many of them learned this secret in darker days, when penury was more familiar than plenty, by many pitiful contrivings to keep starvation at bay; second, woman, a natural economist, is in the forefront of the Salvation Army service, and superintends the outlay of many of the dollars that have to go so far toward clothing shivering bodies, filling hungry mouths and spreading far and wide the Gospel of Christ.

THE RELATION OF CITIZENSHIP TO TEMPERANCE.

"Could some one write an article for next week's UNION SIGNAL on the 'Relation of Citizenship to Temperance'?"

The request meets us in one of the many letters through which our great constituency pours its needs and desires into the "all-powerful" editorial ear. It is not always that these requests come within the range of our practical experience, but, in this case there is material not alone for one, but for many articles.

What is citizenship? The dictionary defines it as "The state of being vested with the rights and privileges of a citizen."

What are those "rights and privileges"? The immortal Declaration of Independence defines them as "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness."

In other words, the congregating of men together in civic life ought to guarantee to each one certain essential conditions. There should be safety of life and of property; liberty to pursue one's individual bent, provided it in no way endangers the safety and happiness of others; and a mutual interest in and protection of each by all.

Not only is this a right of each individual citizen, but it becomes, from the very fact of its being a right, a corresponding duty, the neglect of which is criminal. Anything, therefore, which hinders in the performance of this duty is a menace to citizenship, and its destruction becomes the imperative duty of all true citizens.

The most conspicuous object in American social and political life to-day is the saloon. What does it stand for in its relation to our interests as citizens? Is it an aid or an hindrance to the benefits which ought to accrue from association together as units in one cohesive life? There can be but one answer. The saloon lets loose upon our land forces which, so far from aiding us in the preservation of our inalienable rights, threaten their total destruction. The poverty, misery, crime and desolation of our land may be traced, in an overwhelmingly large proportion, directly to that source as its fountain-head. From those baleful doors there issues nothing which tends to the uplift of society, but rather to its downfall and total disintegration.

This being the case, what is clearly the relation of citizenship to the saloon? There can be but one, and that is of absolute, unflinching hostility. By all that endears to us our homes and loved ones; by all that fires us with the flames of true patriotism; by all that inspires us with the hope of a nobler future, the citizen of this land and of this age should take his stand against that which is the greatest foe to his true citizenship.

And this means something more than theory and resolution; something more than personal total abstinence in the individual; it means active, uncompromising hostility—war to the knife. John G. Woolley has long since shown us that we are to "overcome evil" not by being but by doing "good." We may be saints of immaculate whiteness in our daily living; what avails that to the community at large if the white lightning of our sainthood be not directed against the centers of evil?

We may walk the earth "as seeing Him who is invisible," but unless we also see, with open-eyed, intelligent vision some other things which are clearly "visible," it will be the same to the world as if we had not walked.

Perish the thought of a salvation which limits its scope to the individual needs of individual souls, though they be numbered by millions! That only is salvation which broadens its scope to God's own purpose, and He only is saved who is himself a Saviour from all evil everywhere.

Only the other day we heard a prominent prayer-meeting habitué say, "A Christian man has no business in a primary meeting—no business at the ballot-box." And we could only pray God to forgive his narrowness and enlarge his view of Christianity. If there be one place more than another where the Christian man is needed to-day it is in the primary meeting. If there be one spot more than another where Christianity should be highly concentrated it is at the ballot-box.

The call to every citizen comes from God Himself—"Who will rise up for me against the evil-doer? or who will stand up for me against the workers of iniquity?"

You answer "I" in the prayer-meeting; what do you say at the ballot-box?

THE CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR PLEDGE OF GOOD CITIZENSHIP.

God always has one more arrow in His quiver. Progress, which means God working along the lines of civilization, never calls a halt, but beats its drums and waves its banners far up the hill of difficulty and its battle-cry is evermore Excelsior. At a time when it seemed that the church prayer-meeting was becoming little more than one of the fossil remains, the young people of the Christian Endeavor quickened it with their own warm blood. When the boa-constrictor of partyism had well-nigh strangled the republic, this same young Hercules strode forward with its inspiring watchword of "Good Citizenship." The Cleveland convention had two famous "arousements," and they centered around the figures of two strong men whose battle-cry was "missionary extension" and "God in politics." To our thinking these new departures are but fractions of one tremendous whole, since of all beings party leaders are most in need of missionary work.

Mr. C. E. Newlin, a level-headed Quaker and business man of Indianapolis, has mapped out a campaign for his own state, and no other in the nation needs it more. Some of the points included in his program are as follows:

1. All Endeavorers who have a vote can and should go to the primaries of their party and see to it personally, so far as they can, that only honest, clean men are nominated.

In some cases a party caucus would be an excuse for absence even from the weekly prayer-meeting which a Christian could "conscientiously give to his Saviour."

2. Some of us can vote, and all the rest of us can influence a vote. This right we should jealously guard.

As Professor Andrews said at the Halifax convention, "It should be as disgraceful for a man to sell his vote as for a woman to sell her virtue." We might add that it is as bad for a man to be indifferent about his vote as for a woman to be indifferent about her virtue.

[As women we hereby enter a protest against this illustration. We believe that it is written in the laws of nature and of grace that it is just as bad for a man to buy a woman's virtue as for her to sell—nay, if possible, a little more contemptible.]

3. We can, as individuals and as unions coöperate with "Good Citizenship Leagues," "Parkhurst Clubs," and other societies of the kind, which exist in many places; but we should not allow ourselves to be used as a convenience, or as a mere political make weight, by any one.

. . . . . .

Secretary J. W. Baer, in his Golden Rule letter of September 28, 1893, said:

"I do not know what political party thrives by your ballot, but there is one issue dearer to my heart than the tariff or silver bill, and that is the temperance plank in the platform of any of the political parties that shall receive my ballot at any time. . . We need more temperance committees, live committees too, who believe that the time has come for straightforward gospel missionary work to win the intemperate to Christ, and to create public sentiment enough against the liquor business to make it unhealthy and unprofitable in every community. It can be done. If the members of our Christian Endeavor societies would get square with God on this subject, the drink traffic would receive a blow that would stagger it as it staggers its victims. . . I stand with those who take for their motto, 'THE SALOON MUST GO!' "

. . . . . .

If you believe you can be a good citizen and smoke or chew tobacco, read the evidence on this subject by Chauncey M. Depew and Luther Prescott Hubbard in Golden Rule of January 4, 1894. I think you will all agree that no good citizen can voluntarily waste or spend for his own gratification $118,924.26 to say the least. This is what Mr. Hubbard, a moderate smoker, saved by quitting the use of tobacco at the age of twenty-four.

. . . . . .

No good citizen can consider the standard of social purity any less exacting or obligatory on man than woman, nor can he cherish virtue in himself, and his brothers and sisters, any less to be desired, or less sacred than life itself.

No good citizen can believe there is any such thing as a "necessary evil" in this great country of ours, and he cannot therefore, even by silent inaction, sanction the saloon, the gambling hell, the house of prostitution, or any violation of the law.

Will you at once become a good citizen by living a pure, honest, patriotic life yourself, and join us in this fight to exterminate these evils that are sapping away the life of our nation, lowering the standard of our citizenship, debauching our manhood, and blackening the virtue of our womanhood? The Christian citizenship of America has it within its power to exterminate these evils, and having the power and failing to use it, makes that citizenship directly responsible for their existence. Do you realize this burning truth and are you ready to quit shouldering this fearful responsibility?

The plan adopted by Mr. Newlin is to put one speaker into each county every two weeks, making a three months' course of lectures, consisting of six lectures by men and women of undoubted ability. In connection with these meetings the junior and senior pledge cards are to be given out, also the roll of honor to which the pledge refers. We do not see how anything could be more practical. The attempt is based on that law (well known, but overlooked) which teaches that you cannot get out of youthful character that which you do not build into it by inculcating specific habitudes of thought and action until they become not only axiomatic, but automatic. These the Christian Endeavor Society has been organized on purpose to develop. The pledges are as follows:

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR PLEDGE OF GOOD CITIZENSHIP.

Trusting in the Lord Jesus Christ for direction, I promise Him that I will never indulge in any intoxicants or tobacco, nor use profane or impure language, nor violate the obligations of Social Purity or the Sabbath, and when I vote it shall be as I think Christ would have me vote, and I will pray each day for God to help me keep this pledge, and that the saloon, gambling room and other places of evil resort shall be banished from our land.

Signed.....

JUNIOR PLEDGE OF GOOD CITIZENSHIP.

Trusting in the Lord Jesus Christ for strength, I promise Him and my fellow-members that I will never indulge in any intoxicants or tobacco, nor use profane or impure language, nor knowingly violate the Sabbath, and I will pray God every day to help me keep this pledge.

Signed.....

WE cannot sufficiently emphasize the importance, as a line of work for local unions, of seeking to help enforce our scientific temperance education laws now enacted in all the states but Indiana, Georgia, South Carolina, Arkansas and Tennessee. It is chiefly upon the intelligent vigilance of our local societies that we must rely for the success of this great movement, inasmuch as the average man and woman are not yet keyed up to a perception of the beneficent meaning of this measure in relation to their children. But in our efforts to secure the coöperation of school authorities and school teachers, we must be wise as serpents and harmless as doves, or we shall be quite likely to hinder rather than to help the cause we have at heart. It seems to us that it would be better to secure the promise of several of our most tactful members to use their influence in unobtrusive, friendly and social ways with teachers and members of the school committee, and to visit the schools from time to time, not for the explicit purpose of hearing the children recite in a scientific temperance branch, but in a more general way. Oftentimes, the end we have in view can be far better secured by indirection than when we sally out in force to make a direct attack and thus array against us all the prejudice of the good people who do not agree with us politically, and for this reason might be thrown instinctively into an attitude of opposition. What we want is that the children should be taught, and what we should consider is how to bring this about with the least friction and in the most effective way.

Not all of the "one hundred opinions" asked for concerning the proper form for signatures for women have been received, but so many have come that On Duty relinquishes her column this week and next to a sort of free parliament on this question. Other opinions (if any more are held) will be welcomed and after all are in, I will give a statistical table of the preferences. Let everybody speak or forever after hold her peace! ON DUTY.

"I think your suggestion that all signatures without prefix be understood to mean 'Miss' an excellent idea and hope you will agitate it until some rule is established, and also that married women shall sign their own Christian names and not those of their husbands."—SARAH CASE.

"This question of signing has been a trouble—all avoidable if one would put down what she is called by; in other words, what she is known by. For a lady who is known only as Mrs. So-and-So, to sign anything else, is certainly embarrassing. That is her name, what she is known by, then write it Mrs. A. B. Brown. Then a name without this prefix would be understood to be Miss, except that given names are getting mixed—belonging either to male or female—so to avoid that stumbling block let the unmarried write Miss. I ignore the parenthesis as uncalled for on this question. Am thankful this is up for discussion, as it has long been one of offense to me."—MRS. A. B. FISH, West Randolph, Vt.

"Why is 'Miss' vulgar and pert for an adult woman? Why is the title not as 'honorable' as 'Mrs.'? To say it is not we think is pandering to the old idea that it is almost a disgrace not to be married. To desire to take the married title is acknowledging one is ashamed to be known as single, and would like to be thought married. To be called Mrs. or Madam when one is not married might subject one's self to much annoyance. Suppose one unmarried were introduced as Mrs. to a stranger. The latter after some conversation inquires for husband or children; would not the necessary explanation embarrass the lady more than to be introduced as Miss So-and-So? In our present age of honorable single womanhood, when so many women are supporting themselves, are they not making the title of Miss as honorable and often more desirable than Mrs.—particularly when the latter title is craved by women in some countries as the license for a freer and less restricted life? To think otherwise is to go backward in our ideas of womanhood, to the not so very remote time when girls 'sat about' as it were, to be plucked by the masculine hand."—MRS. H. J. ROWORTH, Providence, R. I.

"I do not know but you already have your 'hundred opinions' on titles, but here is one more. In these days of business women I see no lack of courtesy in omitting Mrs. or Miss on an envelope when it is so infrequently used in the columns of the papers. I should direct a letter as the one I received was signed, with or without title, only I do not like initials. Let us know whether we are hearing from a man or woman. Isn't the desire for the title a remnant of woman's great pride in becoming a 'Mrs.'? I wish we might have some title that did not represent marriage."—HATTIE E. WOOD, Omro, Wis.

"I like to see addresses written with the proper prefix; but in signing the name, it somehow seems in better taste, to me, to omit the prefix, except in business letters. I am glad the question has come up and will follow the suggestion, that a name without a prefix is Miss—as I have always written my own name. There is another point! I like a woman, if she is married, to still use her own name—Mrs. Clara Smith, not Mrs. Charles Smith. Why not follow the plan further, and when initials only are given consider that they are the initials of the woman's name? I like the Friend's suggestion, too."—EMILY F. MILLER, North Searsmont, Me.

"It seems fitting that the title Madam should be reserved for the dear grandmothers and other elderly women, and since it is not imperative that women should advertise themselves as married or single on all occasions, how would it do to give the title of Miss to all girls until they reach the age of twenty-one and then change to Mrs., in the same manner as lads are Master until they reach manhood and then receive the title Mr.?"—LAURA MOORE, Barnet, Vt.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

FLORIDA.

AN INTERESTING FIELD VIEW.

While cooling breezes from over gulf and bay fan the brow, gratefully tempering the increased heat of a summer sun to a degree of bearableness, your correspondent takes the pen to report what she has gleaned of Florida W. C. T. U. doings since her last letter. First, I wish to thank those who have sent items, not leaving me, as I was left last year, to my own devices in reporting.

Miss Carrie Lee Carter, of Dexter, Mo., has recently completed a partial tour of the state and reports to the president of the Lecture Bureau the following summary of her work: Number of lectures delivered, nine; other meetings held, three; day meetings, four; Y organized at Daytona, with nineteen regular and eight honorary members. Miss Carter was kindly received everywhere and her efforts well appreciated, but her record is one of "rain, rain, rain." It was just in the beginning of our usual rainy season. Although it seldom rains continuously, the showers have an unpleasant habit of "dropping in" just at an inopportune moment, especially when a temperance meeting is on the tapis.

Miss Carter says she had a delightful time, notwithstanding, and reading her reports of an awakening interest in the work and a growing desire among Florida women to organize in places where no unions exist, certainly augurs well for a steady advance of the lines along the southern borders.

From St. Andrew's Bay, in northwest Florida, comes the cheering news, "We celebrated March 20 by organizing a union. Six long years out of the world, longing and praying for this, seeing the great need." This little band of praying women and men have gone promptly to work among soldiers and sailors, as this greatest opportunity is awaiting them.

Tampa union put in a word for temperance by extending a sisterly hand to the veteran soldiers. An appropriate greeting in form of resolutions was presented to our citizen soldiers; better still, the fathers, sons and husbands of our land, defenders of our homes, begging that by their ballot the purity and perpetuation of temperance homes should be maintained.

JACKSONVILLE.

Mrs. M. B. E. Brown, corresponding secretary, writes that weekly meetings are held in a centrally located hall, owned by the union, easy of access, and where visitors are always welcome. This fact is made known to strangers in the city by printed notices of time and place of meetings, framed in white, and hung where they can be seen, in hotels and depots. Through the courtesy of railroad officials, wall pockets, bearing cards of welcome, tied with the ever-blessed white ribbon, are placed in the principal depots. These are constantly supplied with temperance literature, for the use of and distribution among railroad employés and the traveling public.

Once a week, oftener during the tourist season, these are freshly filled. The people who read and take away this literature, as they are invited to do, often express in various ways their appreciation.

Every Sunday the jails are visited and once a month the county hospital. The city hospitals, being more directly under the supervision of other parties, still receive a friendly attention from members of the W. C. T. U. Copies of "A Great Mother" and the "White Ribbon Portfolio" are late additions to the collection for use of this devoted union.

The Bible readings and other services held by Mrs. E. S. Oliver, state evangelist, before going north, were a blessing. Good seed was sown for the Master. Quietly working, patiently waiting, results are left with God.

ORANGE CITY

had a wild chase after a "blind tiger" which was making sad havoc in their town. A meeting of the ladies, a set of strong resolutions, a visit to the offending party, wherein those same strong resolutions were presented in judicial manner by the mayor's wife, accompanied with an earnest request to leave at once, resulted in a temporary heeding, at least. A colored individual suspected of manufacturing and selling wine was arrested, prosecuted and found guilty. A fine of fifty dollars and costs settled that matter so quiet reigns in the town once more.

Mrs. E. A. Hill writes: "The great difficulty we experience in securing evidence in such cases leads me to feel more and more that the evil will never be eradicated until our national government has declared prohibition."

RESCUE HOME.

Through the interest and loving sympathy of one W. C. T. U. woman in and for the fallen of her own sex, a Rescue Home for such has been established in Tampa. This is the only home of the kind in the state, and, indeed, as far as known, at present in any of the southern states.

Inmates will be welcomed from any of the southern states, and in turn funds are solicited from any willing contributors to this noble cause. Generous donations have been given, unsolicited, from many friends, so that the home is considered already firmly established. The rescued ones will be taught many lines of industry, so that while being morally strengthened, they will be fitted to fill places of usefulness and honor in the world.

One poor child, yet very young, who voluntarily left a life of deepest degradation to seek a better, came to the lady I have mentioned and others, begging their protection and help. Under the influence brought to bear by the Salvation Army and through God's mercy, she was soundly converted. Then arose the pressing need of immediate action in regard to a place, a home for such helpless ones, fleeing from the evil, longing to be lifted and kept out of the mire of sin. Help came, and hence the Home.

A fearful lesson for incompetent, careless mothers appears in this poor girl's history as told by herself. "Since I was seven years old I have cooked the meals and did other work as best I could, while my mother laid in bed, eating morphine and reading novels." Do we wonder that a dissipated husband deserted a desolate home, and the daughter, in the first blush of young womanhood, fell an easy prey to the destroyer?

A number of our ministers have preached upon the social evil, and then presented the needs of the Rescue Home to an interested and responsive audience.

Mrs. N. E. Arnold, superintendent of social purity, in a late letter expresses her satisfaction in learning of such an institution in Tampa, wishing it "Godspeed." Mrs. Arnold is also our newly appointed superintendent of scientific cookery. She is enthusiastic over a new discovery in her department, a one dollar substitute for an "Aladdin Oven," the coming method of cooking. This wonder of substitutes, instead of broiling the cook, as most stoves do, will quietly perform the whole act of cooking the meal while the emancipated cook goes off about other business, perchance to deliver an address on suffrage or some other leading subject of the day, and then return to find her dinner ready to be dished for the table. Perhaps Mrs. Arnold will treat the readers of THE UNION SIGNAL to a description of this wonder, some day.

ST. PETERSBURG WHITE-RIBBONERS

across the bay, find eternal vigilance needful in chasing "blind tigers" out of their lairs. This union is interested in a flourishing Woman's Exchange, where coffee can always be obtained and articles of woman's handiwork are offered for sale.

Florida's letters in THE UNION SIGNAL have awakened an interest in one of Missouri's W. C. T. U. state workers, which, leading to a correspondence with the reporter, will probably result in an addition to our force during the winter months at least, in the shape of a lecturer upon the all-important subject of the elective franchise. White-ribboners coming South for the winter should always report themselves to local unions wherever they may stop. It will cheer and strengthen those unions which are, numerically, weaker than their northern sisters, perhaps, and while the bond of sympathy is strengthened, we may learn more of each other.

SCHOOLS OF METHODS.

Nebraska has five Chautauqua assemblies, at each of which a school of methods is conducted by the W. C. T. U. That of Beatrice has just closed after an unusually interesting session. The school was held in the large Willard hall belonging to the state union and was conducted by Mrs. C. M. Woodward, of Seward. A good attendance each day showed the interest of women in our work. Gentlemen also were frequently present. Various departments of work were given on the different days. Press work, railway department, the Temple and a parliamentary drill were given by Mrs. Woodward, also evangelistic work on which day your reporter read a paper on "Woman as an Evangelist." Mrs. Z. A. Wilson, of Lincoln, state superintendent, presented the subject of franchise, giving a very able address. A quartette of ladies sung a rousing suffrage song which had been written especially for the W. C. T. U. of Nebraska. On another day Mrs. M. E. Roberts, of Lincoln, spoke on "Homes for Homeless Children," and Miss Stoner, of Lincoln, filled an hour one day with a talk on sanitary and economic cooking. Miss Stoner has spent several months in the employ of the Young Woman's Christian Association of Lincoln, working among the young girls of the lower classes and training them in this line of work. Her talk was illustrated by actual cooking on a small scale and proved so popular that a table talk was arranged for at seven o'clock that evening. A good audience assembled and questions and answers were freely given. Dr. Parkhurst, of Chicago, conductor of the ministers' institute and Biblical exposition, was present and added to the interest by his questions and remarks on oriental cookery. Miss Stoner is a sweet, serious young lady who has made a deep study of this work and is in love with it.

Mrs. Woodward also delivered a lecture in the tabernacle the first day of the assembly, her subject being, "The Twentieth Century Woman."

Fremont, Crete and Long Pine assemblies are now in session and Salem opens later. I hope to have reports from all these places for my next letter.

GENERAL OFFICERS' MEETING was held on the grounds the first day of the assembly, at which three new superintendents were appointed to fill out unexpired terms—Mrs. Alice Waltemeyer, Omaha, for the Y work, Mrs. M. M. Claflin, of Ord, Sunday-school work, and Miss Berenice Kerney, of Plattsmouth, to superintend the L. T. L. work in place of Miss Lillie Williams, who has removed from the state.

Mrs. M. M. Pugh, of Omaha, superintendent of parlor meetings, is greatly delighted with the success of a reception to the teachers of Omaha, given them by the W. C. T. U. of that city. She says: "No one thing has ever brought our beloved cause so prominently before the people in such a nice way as our teachers' evening." Nearly five hundred invitations were issued. Every teacher in the public schools, kindergartens and normal classes was invited, about four hundred responding. A short program had been prepared, which was opened with prayer by Rev. Augusta Chapin, D. D., one of the white-ribboners. Mrs. E. L. Woods, president of the union, gave an address of welcome in a very happy manner, which was responded to by Miss Snyder, of the high school, who was so thoroughly appreciative of the union that she donned the white ribbon before the evening was over. Mrs. J. C. Carley, of South Omaha, furnished delightful music during the evening. Mrs. Matheson, a favorite with Omaha audiences, gave a most amusing character impersonation, which was heartily applauded. Dr. Freeda Lankton then publicly greeted and introduced the Y's, giving an outline of their work and saying many good words for them, which will doubtless bring them new members. Mrs. Alice Waltemeyer, acting president, responded for the girls, hoping they would be found worthy to work with their mothers in the cause to which they are pledged. After the program was closed ices were served with cake, and a delightful social hour was spent together. Will not those teachers receive new inspiration for their work in temperance instruction, recognizing, as they must, that the motherhood of the W. C. T. U. stands close behind them?

TENTH ANNUAL CONVENTION

of the fifth district was held in Geneva, June 18–20. Mrs. C. E. Howe, of St. Joseph, Mo., gave two stirring lectures, and Mrs. E. D. Blair gave a chalk talk to the children. Dear Mother Putnam was reëlected president for the sixth time. She had expected to remove from the state, but the women felt they could not give her up, and she has consented to remain. A large number of delegates were in attendance, and all enjoyed the convention very much.

NEMAHA COUNTY.

Mrs. S. F. Coryell, president, held a profitable convention in Peru, at which Mrs. E. A. Fulton, first district president, was present, giving an address. Miss Effie Abbott gave a fine recitation. Departments of work were discussed as follows: Health and heredity, by Mrs. J. H. Battles; Sabbath observance, Mrs. Graham; physical culture, Mrs. Ella Young; suffrage, Mrs. Coryell, and parlor and mothers' meetings. In the evening Mrs. Battles gave her illustrated lecture on "Alcohol."

CASS COUNTY.

This county convention was held at Murray, June 14, 15. Beautiful decorations filled the church—flowers, plants, pictures of Miss Willard and the Temple, and banners. The meetings both day and evening were largely attended, many riding long distances to enjoy them. Rev. Mr. Stewart, of Murray, conducted the devotional exercises of the first evening. Mrs. S. K. Dailey, second district president, was present, and gave an address on "Franchise." Miss Kerney also was of much assistance. A gold medal contest the second evening was much enjoyed, Miss Maggie Edson winning the medal. The address of the president, Miss Olive Gass, was concise and interesting. The L. T. L. of Murray added much to the success of the convention by their inspiring songs and recitations.

OTOE COUNTY.

The eighth annual convention of Otoe county was held in Douglas, seven of the ten unions responding with twenty-one delegates. Reports were satisfactory. Mrs. Dailey and Miss Kerney greatly aided by their presence and helpful words. The officers of the past year were reelected.

ADAMS COUNTY.

Adams county officers elected were, Mrs. Anna E. Marshall, president; Mrs. J. Fassette, recording secretary; Miss Emma J. Berryman, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Lina Cooper, treasurer. The delegates were tendered a reception at Mrs. Marshall's home.

THE ANNUAL MEETING of Gage county, held in Blue Springs, May 28 and 29, was one of the best the county has ever seen. Twenty-six delegates were present. Mrs. Bowman, the president, makes a model presiding officer, so full of bright thoughts and suggestions. Mrs. Fulton, district president, was also present. The address of the evening was a stirring one by Rev. Mrs. Bell, of Beatrice. A notable feature was the number of papers, which proved to be addresses, given in a very creditable manner without notes. Mrs. Chipperfield gave a thrilling account of her jail work. Mrs. Lewellen gave a beautiful address on "Personal Responsibility"; Mrs. Nickell had a paper on "Pernicious Literature," and Mrs. Russell one on "Position of the Church against the Liquor Traffic." An hour was devoted to a suffrage symposium, conducted by Mrs. Agnes V. Lester. This consisted of a fine paper by Mrs. F. M. Davis, the suffrage song by a quartette of ladies, referred to in the above report of school of methods, and a very laughable, yet strictly true, exercise of questions and answers very clearly defining woman's position as a subordinate and political nonentity. The last evening was devoted to a silver medal contest, in which a young man, Jesse Craig, won the medal. Miss Anna Craig gave a nice address to the Y's, and Miss Lottie Schroder sang a beautiful solo. Both evenings the young people of Blue Springs furnished delightful music. Mrs. Fulton kept all in good humor by her quaint remarks. Mrs. Bowman was reëlected president; Miss Addie Sylvester, corresponding secretary, both of Blue Springs. Miss Anna Goudy, Liberty, recording secretary, and Mrs. Lottie Cobbey, Beatrice, treasurer. There are one hundred and nineteen W's and seventy-one Y's in the county.

ITS FIFTH ANNIVERSARY

by Yankee Hill union was celebrated recently in the church at Rokeby, Mrs. Exley presiding, and Rev. Embree speaking hearty words of encouragement. Mrs. E. M. J. Cooley gave an able address. This dear sister has met with a great bereavement in the death of her husband, who was a minister in the M. E. church, a man much beloved and a good brother to the union. May the dear Lord bless and uphold her.

NOTES.

Mrs. Hartley, superintendent of Sunday-school work, is greatly rejoiced at the energetic way in which temperance Sunday was observed throughout the state; much of the success is due to herself. The work has wonderfully prospered in her hands, and the state regrets to spare her. We look to Mrs. Claflin to prove a worthy successor.

Mrs. Ellen D. Blair has returned to our state and is already at work, chalk-talking for the children. We are glad to welcome her home again.

The suffrage column in Union Worker is well sustained and grows in interest. It is refreshing to read the vigorous sentiments of the laywomen.

We wish every union could read Mrs. Jones' story, "How a Union Flourished Without the Union Worker." They can by sending for the June number, and then subscribing for it, as they will surely do. Long live the Union Worker.

MISSOURI.

DOING DAILY DUTY.

Nor summer's heat nor winter's cold can check the zeal of the earnest W. C. T. Unions which press most womanfully onward "for God and Home and Humanity." Some are doing a great deal of good work, but reporting never a bit of it. Every union in the state is very earnestly urged to send me a frequent report, and so "let your light shine" for the encouragement of your sisters and the upbuilding of our loved cause.

CONVENTIONS.

An excellent convention for the twenty-third district was held at Appleton City, June 21 and 22, led by Mrs. M. M. S. Gillson, the district president. A gold medal contest occupied one evening and Bishop Jones, of Sedalia, gave a stirring address the second evening. Good work was reported along many lines, and methods and plans for future aggressive action discussed. Three new, live, working unions, all in Henry county, helped to make a good total showing. The Anti-saloon Army, with headquarters at Clinton, Mo., is rapidly organizing through the district, and the W. C. T. U. gladly welcome and join hands with these new soldiers who have arisen to fight the evil against which the W. C. T. U. has been so long declared. Demorest contests, work in the Sunday-school department, literature and public and social meetings are among the lines receiving special attention.

In the second district a county convention has recently been held at Newark, and the district convention at La Belle, both being very successful. Mrs. Rebecca Hall, state evangelistic superintendent, was present, giving lectures and Bible readings and greatly encouraging the work.

The Pike county convention was held in Louisiana, Mrs. Haffner, the county president, having charge. The meeting was very enthusiastic and good reports of work were given, full delegations being present from other points. Miss Lulu Collins, the Missouri state leader of temperance work in Christian Endeavor societies, had charge of the evening session. Contest work is especially prominent, and strong equal suffrage resolutions were passed.

Pettis county held its first annual convention in Green Ridge at the M. E. church, on June 12, Mrs. Golladay, the district president, presiding. The county having but three unions, the convention was small in numbers but rich in enthusiasm and interest. Reports of work showed that excellent progress had been made and much good accomplished, particularly in jail, evangelistic, flower mission, press and narcotics lines. Excellent papers and talks were given, reports being followed by discussion. Mrs. Wisker gave an account of the fine Loyal Temperance Legion in Sedalia, where in a short time past two hundred boys and girls have signed the pledge. Methods for work in scientific temperance instruction department also received much attention. A lecture by Mrs. Golladay in the evening on "The Secret of Success," closed the convention, which will meet next year at LaMonte.

The sixth annual convention of Stoddard county was held in Dexter, June 26, the district president, Mrs. C. E. Smith, being in the chair. Four unions reported, the Bloomfield and Dexter W, and a Y in each of these places, but the Bernie and Puxico unions failed to respond. Earnest, progressive work is being done in many lines, directed by efficient superintendents. Three thousand six hundred and fifty pages of literature have been distributed in the county. Numerous socials and public meetings have been held. The Bloomfield L. T. L. has fifty-seven members and meets every week, while the Dexter L. T. L. has fifty-nine members, and the children are holding social and public meetings, and Demorest medal contests. County fair work has been vigorously and profitably carried on, much literature being distributed and many pledge cards signed at the W. C. T. U. booth. The resolutions adopted were specially earnest in the lines of suffrage, scientific temperance instruction in public schools, the demand for a greater interest and activity among Christians in temperance work, and recommending to all temperance people their friend and honorary member, Charles E. Stokes, lately elected chairman of the state prohibition central committee.

FLOWER MISSION

services have been very generally held, that at Jefferson City being specially memorable. Mrs. Lucy M. Wisker, state superintendent of jail and prison work, accompanied by Miss Lillian Wood, Miss Ellen D. Morris, and a number of other prominent state workers, gathered here, and on June 9 held a service at the state penitentiary at nine a. m. for the men, at two p. m. for the women, the prisoners altogether numbering over two thousand. The prison officials were very kind, and made the way pleasant and easy for the visitors. The chaplain, several pastors, and a quartette of prisoners assisted in the gospel service, and the Bible reading, exposition and sisterly address full of comforting counsel produced a marked effect upon the prisoners, who listened most attentively. As the ladies, after the service, placed text cards in their hands, each having a bow of white ribbon, many asked their prayers for the leading of a better life. A bouquet was also placed in each cell. A visit was paid to the hospital ward, where the kind words, flowers and cards bestowed seemed greatly appreciated. The afternoon meeting with the women was in one of the work-rooms of the building, and was very touching and sad, the grief of some of the women being uncontrollable. When Mrs. Isgrigg, flower mission superintendent of Kansas City, asked how many desired to lead better lives, every hand was raised in response, and we trust there will be future fruitage from the good seed sown that day for the Master. A number of places in the state sent flowers for this service, a specially touching tribute being a contribution of one thousand pure white roses from the Stark nurseries of Louisiana, Mo., sent by Mr. Stark in memory of his little daughter who died last March.

THE UNION OF UNIONS

of Kansas City held its all day quarterly meeting in the handsome new Christian church on June 14, and a most enjoyable time was had, the pastor and members helping most cordially to make the occasion successful. A basket lunch was spread for all, and a social time enjoyed during the two hours' intermission at noon. Miss Ellen D. Morris, the district president, presided over the meetings. Prominent lines of work were discussed, and an exceedingly valuable paper by Mrs. Robinson, "The White Ribbon, its Significance and Mission," was read.

The Central union has placed in the streets of Kansas City several of the cherry phosphate penny-in-the-slot fountains, and they are a great success, the thirsty citizens constantly asking, like Oliver Twist, for "more." The W. C. T. U. is delighted, and the saloonists correspondingly disgusted.

The St. Louis South Side Y is doing good work in stirring up Christian Endeavor societies to active temperance effort. This Y will do a continuous flower mission work through the summer.

The G. A. R. post commander at Austin will join the W. C. T. U. upon condition that the union secure one of our best W. C. T. U. lecturers to speak at the G. A. R. camp-fire in August. Austin union will have a gold medal contest July 20. It has trebled its numbers during the past year, most of its sixteen active members living in the country.

Hannibal union, under lead of her sightless but energetic flower mission superintendent, distributed over two hundred beautiful floral cards and literature to the inmates of the city jail, almshouse, and home for the friendless. The Clinton union and their friends on June 27 held a gospel service at the county jail and the poor farm, distributing about seventy bouquets and much literature.

Jamesport union went sixteen miles to visit the poor farm with flowers and literature and to hold a gospel service, to the great pleasure of the inmates. This union, after ten years of hard work, can boast that their county, Daviess, has no saloons, and that the five Jamesport churches use only unfermented wine.

An earnest union of twenty-six members meets weekly at Maitland, and holds a social once a month. A festival and "art gallery" was one of their recent entertainments. They are encouraged by a prohibition club lately organized here, which is doing some good work for "the cause." Sedalia had a very successful lawn social in June, a fine program being given and refreshments served.

NORTH DAKOTA.

A OLANCE AFIELD.

The first district, comprising Rolette, Towner and Ramsey counties, was organized at Cando, Towner county, in May. In the more sparsely settled portions of the state where counties are not strong enough for a separate organization, they will be united with other counties, and a district organization formed until such a time as they shall be able to stand alone. The three counties were well represented in this convention, some of the delegates driving seventy miles. Interesting papers were read and discussed. Part of the time was very profitably and pleasantly employed in a school of methods conducted by the state president, Miss Preston. The L. T. L. of Cando gave a pleasing exercise in the evening. The address of welcome was given by Rev. C. A. Macnamara, of Cando, one of North Dakota's staunch Prohibitionists, and was responded to in a bright little speech by Mrs. W. J. Baker, of Rolla. The state president gave a very impressive lecture on purity.

The county conventions thus far have been interesting and well attended, especially by the men. The sixth annual convention of Cass county was held at Hunter, June 5 and 6, having upwards of sixty delegates. It was a very profitable occasion to all present, and the attendance and interest pronounced by many the best Cass county has yet had. The weather was perfect and many drove from distant parts of the county to attend, and the happy expression on many a care-worn face testified to the blessing the W. C. T. U. is bringing to the women of North Dakota aside from the carrying out of the grand Christian purpose which is growing stronger every day. The best singers in the county gave us most delightful music and that by the Hunter orchestra seemed to give new inspiration to the workers. The address by our state president on narcotics was given to a large and appreciative audience, and it was a wonderful plea for lives unblemished by unclean habits. The workers of Cass county showed their appreciation of their most capable leader by reëlecting Mrs. Mattie Meacham, president. One of the most prominent resolutions followed: "Resolved, that we most heartily condemn the use of tobacco and that we will not lend our influence or support to any minister of the Gospel or teacher in our public schools who uses it in any form."

The fifth annual convention of Ransom county was held at Sheldon June 12 and 13, with Mrs. Alice Brown, president, in the chair. Mrs. Benedict, of Fargo, representing our Crittenton home, was present, and spoke in behalf of the home, and much interest was manifested for this noble enterprise. Mrs. Adams, of Lisbon, read a very excellent paper on "Social Purity," which was followed by an animated discussion. Mrs. Mott, of Lisbon, gave a very able paper on Y work. Miss Preston's address in the evening was on "Woman's Progress," and was handled in the speaker's happiest manner.

Sargent county convention, held at Forman, came next in order, and was largely attended. Much interest was manifested by all present, many of the gentlemen taking part in the discussions. The suffrage question here, as in all the conventions, was one of the leading subjects of interest, and it is with gratification we note the increase of sentiment in behalf of woman's cause all over the state. The convention closed with a Demorest medal contest, which was pronounced every way a pleasing success, and here I will add the exercises introduced in the conventions of Cass and Ransom by the band of L. T. L's were most interesting and encouraging. Some fine papers were read, and the cordial help of ministers and neighboring county Ransom officers was much appreciated. Mrs. Vail was reëlected president of Sargent county, as also was Mrs. Alice Brown of her county, Ransom.

Dickey county convention, held at Ellendale, was well attended, and was an enjoyable occasion, but I am sorry not to be able to give a fuller report, as I have failed, for some reason, to receive one.

Sargent county workers, under the leadership of Mrs. Vail, have commenced a series of school-house meetings. They have attracted such men and boys as never attend church, and have proven quite interesting; hence the outlook is encouraging. The Demorest contestants have recited at these meetings to good purpose, adding much to the interest and attractiveness, and the truths spoken by these youthful soldiers, we trust, may prove a power for good.

The local unions all over our state, in spite of the busy season and the extreme hard times, are doing good work. They are meeting their pledges and dues with a promptness highly commendable. One feature most encouraging in our work is the large number of honoraries our new unions and some of the old ones are securing. At the recent school elections in June, the women displayed an interest never before manifested in our state, and wherever there were unions the women quite generally went to the polls, thus proving their influence, especially so in some counties where the candidates were men of a questionable character, or known not to be especially friendly to the cause of temperance. The fight in these counties was quite a bitter one resulting on the side of right. Curses are being heaped upon the women by the defeated parties, especially the W. C. T. U., and in some particular localities some of our best women have been falsely and bitterly maligned.

There are two facts most conclusively proven in our last school election: First, women will vote when they have an opportunity, and especially when there is a moral issue. Second, they will not all vote as their husbands do.

The new departure of the Pembina union, which the readers of THE UNION SIGNAL will remember had a notice placed in the local papers of that place, warning all violators of the law that after a certain date they should cause all violators to be arrested, have suited the action to their word, and three of the violators were arrested and placed in jail (but released on bail same day) and the fourth has an injunction served on him. We await the outcome with much interest. Two new unions in Cass county, Wheatland and Buffalo, have also caused some of the violators to come to grief, and thus the good work goes on.

I would like to make mention of local work more at length, but fear I have already taken all the space to which North Dakota is entitled, but beg to add one more item of interest. The Populist party, at their state convention, renominated Mrs. Isenhuth for superintendent of public instruction, who has so ably and acceptably filled the place for nearly two years. The Republican party of our state has taken the leading step, and placed upon their ticket Miss Emma Bates, our state lecturer on purity, and one of North Dakota's best educators. Miss Bates was nominated without opposition. The Democrats have indorsed the nomination of the Populists' candidate, and thus for the first time in the history of our country two women stand as opposing candidates for one of the most prominent state offices. "Verily, the world do move." Who shall say North Dakota is not a progressive state?

The Republican party also adopted a resolution favoring our temperance law and the enforcement of the same, and also one of equal suffrage. The Democratic party favors resubmission. We see before us another bitter struggle, but as the children of Israel were once saved from bondage, we, likewise, trust we shall be saved, for the same God of Israel is over all.

MRS. D. W. SHINN,
State Reporter, Casselton.

ILLINOIS.

"UP AND AT IT."

The Illinois W. C. T. U. is not a nonentity, notwithstanding the long silence of its state reporter. Busy workers are found in every local union, whose brains are full of plans, hearts full of enthusiasm and hands full of work. They glory in Miss Willard's encomium, "The Illinois women are always ready for the next thing," hence, there are not many "between times" in W. C. T. U. work here.

But what shall I say of it? My UNION SIGNAL pen dropped about the time of Neal Dow's birthday anniversary which furnished occasion for thanksgiving services and the setting forth of the possibilities and blessed results of a grand life grandly lived. Spring elections quickly followed with increased interest in woman's ballot for school officers. In several towns women were elected as members of the school board.

The Christian Citizenship idea of the Y. P. S. C. E.—only a little spark in some instances, was fanned into a blaze by W. C. T. U. breath and produced quite a conflagration, burning up old prejudices and lighting the way for purer politics to enter in. I am told that at the recent great Cleveland convention, Illinois Endeavorers were reported as having led in the Christian Citizenship campaign. Much credit is due John G. Woolley, who has preached both the law and the Gospel in Illinois. The W. C. T. U. has responded "Amen and amen!" while Presbyterians, Baptists, Methodists, and the voices of all other persuasions have chimed in and produced a wonderfully sweet refrain, destined to grow into a ponderous "Thou shalt not!" to the liquor traffic, that will be heard afar.

This has been a year of conferences. Our state evangelist, Miss Anna Downey, planned wisely for the gospel work, and with the exception of two weeks, when la grippe had its hand upon her, she has been constantly in the field up to the time of her summer vacation. Two conferences a week, of three days each, has been the plan. Harvard reports forty-three members added to its union during her meetings there, twenty-seven active and sixteen honorary members. Only eternity can reveal the result of her seed-sowing, soul-saving work in connection with the unions.

This has been the time for county conventions also. Mrs. Rounds, our state president, attended eighteen in two months, in addition to the rest of her labors abundant. County convention programs are becoming quite elaborate affairs. There is a growing sentiment in Illinois that the county organization is the only necessary link between the local and state unions.

Illinois has loaned some of its workers to other states. Mrs. Rounds is at present conducting the Bay View W. C. T. U. Institute, with a wonderfully interesting and practical program, upon whose pages I note the names of Miss Mary A. Mahon, our faithful state superintendent of Y work; Mrs. A. E. Sanford, state treasurer, and editor of the Illinois Watch Tower; Mrs. Carrie L. Grout, secretary Illinois W. C. T. U. (who has been proving herself a very useful and acceptable speaker, both in her own state and out of it), and Mrs. Mary L. Brumbach, who in season and out of season never forgets her scientific temperance instruction department.

There is nothing selfish about the Illinois W. C. T. U. It may yet start a "loan association" for missionary work, but of course it would expect the loaning to work both ways.

Illinois has an able corps of district presidents, some of them veterans in the service, and some young women with all the enthusiasm of youth. Good reports come in from all along the lines. The Y work is flourishing under Miss Mahon's wise leadership, and Miss Wintringer has a "zeal according to knowledge" in the L. T. L. department. She worked up a large circulation for the special L. T. L. number of The Watch Tower.

Mrs. Annie M. Phillips, state superintendent of fair work, arranged that every superintendent of this line of work should have the state paper. It is an unsolved problem with me how any W. C. T. U. woman can get along without at least THE UNION SIGNAL and state organ, and one or more Prohibition papers, in order that she may know something about the real situation. I wonder how a superintendent of any department can do satisfactory work without the department leaflets. In the words of the old hymn, I say:

"'Tis a point I long to know,
Oft it causes anxious thought," and I wonder how much "love for the cause" there is, if one does not manage some way to have an ownership in a W. C. T. U. paper, even on shares with some neighbor, if necessary.

The State Sunday-School Convention was held in Peoria in June, and of course it had some earnest words from Mrs. Hibben about Sunday-school temperance teaching. Teachers' institutes are the order of the day just now, hence the local superintendent of scientific temperance instruction in the public schools jogs the memory of the professors about our state law on that point, and puts in a plea, to say nothing of the higher powers that very likely have been heard from several times.

Quincy has a woman's council, composed of fourteen woman's organizations. The president of the Quincy W. C. T. U. gave an interesting paper before that council entitled, "Origin, Scope and Development of the W. C. T. U.," which was followed by a twelve minute supplement by the secretary. No doubt much valuable information was given and gladly received.

Rockford Central union has introduced a series of very valuable papers in its meetings, given by prominent women of the city. There is a hearty relish for good programs.

Evanston union has a Sunday-afternoon Gospel meeting, and a cottage prayer-meeting each Friday evening. It reports four thousand pages of literature distributed, and thus in quiet ways, as well as in more public work, its influence is felt for good. It had a tea meeting for the mothers of its kindergarten children.

Medal contests have been "quite the fashion" in connection with conventions, and a diamond one is being planned for the state annual meeting. Reddick held a tobacco contest, when six girls from contesting school districts gave excellent essays, bristling with facts about the effect of tobacco on man. Cash prizes of two dollars and one dollar were awarded. Our superintendent of narcotics gives three cheers for Reddick W. C. T. U.

Monica union had an old ladies' contest which was quite a success, the oldest of the seven contestants was sixty-four years of age.

Brimfield, Carthage, Mount Vernon and Robinson have reported success with the interesting and patriotic entertainment, "The American Jubilee," written by Mrs. Anna Chacey, of Hillsboro. Money for the W. C. T. U. has been coined by this, as well as sentiment. More than sixty unions in Illinois have given this unique entertainment.

One L. T. L. shows its appreciation of the church that opened its doors for its meetings, by keeping an L. T. L. vase in the church filled each Sunday with flowers.

Bloomington Central union has just issued five thousand circulars, setting forth a general view of W. C. T. U. work. These are to be used in the house-to-house canvass with the Polyglot Petition. This union is prospering. A new L. T. L. has recently been organized by it, the outgrowth of its mothers' meetings. June 9 members of the Central union and the Normal Y held a religious service at the county almshouse. Fruit, with bouquets and texts, was distributed to the one hundred and five inmates there. The services were impressive, and greatly appreciated. The Normal Y's held a service there again July 1. The Bloomington Y's also observed flower mission day by the distribution of flowers in the city. Much work in this line has been done throughout the state.

July 31 was W. C. T. U. day at the Prohibition camp-meeting at Oakland Park, Decatur. August 1 was devoted to the Y's. Many W. C. T. U. names were on the program, among them that of Mrs. Rena Michaels Atchison, a candidate, with Mrs. A. E. Sanford, for trustee of state university, on the Prohibition ticket. Illinois W. C. T. U. intends to keep those nominations in mind until voting time comes. Mrs. Carlock, now of Berea College, Kentucky, has charge of the children's meetings at half-past nine each morning at this encampment.

I cannot even hint at all the varied work that is being done. Miss Walker, office secretary at state headquarters here, is kept busy in helpful correspondence and sending out literature. Being so centrally located, she has been able to respond to quite a number of appeals for personal help in conventions.

Of course we are all rejoicing that our own Frances E. Willard is on her native heath again. Long may handkerchiefs wave in her honor, and true hearts "rise up and call her blessed."

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

AT the late Prohibition convention held at Grand Junction, Mrs. Mary Jewett Telford was unanimously nominated as representative from her district for the Tenth General Assembly of Colorado. She was out in the state at work, and was staggered with surprise when she heard of it. Heartiest congratulations to our good friend, Mrs. Telford.

MR. G. H. VIBBERT, of Boston, closed a series of seventeen meetings in Greenville, O., July 29, speaking on the street and in the various churches. Mr. Vibbert is a scholarly gentleman, handling the different phases of the temperance question in a kind, but very forcible manner, always pressing home the fact that the mighty power of the ballot is the key to destroy the saloon.

MRS. HANNAH M. MULLENIX, the capable white-ribbon evangelist of the second district of Minnesota, has been given an unanimous call to the pastorate of the Congregational church of Grand Meadow, Minn. Shortly after entering upon her pastoral duties, she became so loved and highly esteemed by her people that an earnest request was made for her ordination, and this was recently observed.

MRS. CARRIE L. GROUT, the efficient recording secretary of Illinois union, writes of the remarkable success of the W. C. T. U. institute at Bay View, Mich., under the leadership of Mrs. Louise S. Rounds. The white ribbon note books have been filled with hints for developing practical lines of work; and many outside our organization were attracted by the entertaining character of the meetings. Mr. Hall, the superintendent of the assembly, gave every assistance in his power, and rejoices in the success of the institute. Mrs. Rounds' strong qualities were revealed in her wise conduct of the entire meeting.

MRS. LEONORA BARRY LAKE writes that the Catholic Woman's Temperance Union of St. Louis, Mo., has grown to a membership of two hundred, and that she has recently organized five other similar unions.

THE Siskiyon county, California, convention, in June, was favored by the presence and aid of Miss I. C. De Velling, one of our most valued National organizers. Several fine papers were read, among them one by Mrs. Gleason on "The Education of Better Mothers," another by Mrs. Isgrig on "The Question of the Hour," one by Mrs. Gray on "Individual Responsibility," and another by Miss Isabelle Davis on "Social Purity." Every question which came under discussion was handled by Miss De Velling with a master's touch; and it is owing largely to the inspiration of her presence that the convention was a most enjoyable and profitable one. Since June 29 Miss De Velling has visited six towns and five unions, speaking some fifteen or sixteen times. Wherever she goes she commands the highest respect and wins the hearts of the people with her irresistible earnestness and clear logic. She expects to organize several new unions before she leaves the county.

THE dedication of the Frances E. Willard M. E. church, Cherry Valley, Wash., June 24, passed off very successfully. As Rev. W. H. Johnstone, who had been invited to take charge, was not present, Rev. Geo. Kindred, pastor of the Congregational church of Sultan City, kindly consented to substitute, and proved himself "a workman that needeth not to be ashamed." The church was nicely decorated with evergreens, flowers, pictures, mottoes, flags, etc., as the ladies had determined to do their best to make the dedication services a success. It was a goodly sight to see the bright and intelligent audience that had gathered for the occasion. Many had come ten, and some even twenty miles, and as they listened to the eloquent sermon they could say with one of old, "It is good to be here." At the conclusion of the sermon Rev. Kindred stated as the debt had already been provided for by the Ladies' Aid Society he would ask for a free-will offering for the pastor, which the people responded to liberally, after which the Frances E. Willard M. E. church was formally dedicated. The pastor, on behalf of himself and people, desires to express gratitude to Rev. Geo. Kindred and his excellent choir from Sultan City, who did so much towards making these services a success.

MRS. WATSON THATCHER, Sec.

Cor. Secy's Notes.

A good record reaches us from Mrs. S. M. Wood, corresponding secretary of the W. C. T. U. of McComb, Miss.: "Our union was only organized the 22d of last April, and now numbers thirty-six regular and eighty-four honorary members. We hold meeting every month; have had one Demorest contest, one pay entertainment and one reception for our honorary members; are not in debt, have paid all state dues, and have money in our treasury besides a large amount of literature on hand for present and future use." Bravo! Who can do better?

Mrs. H. M. Switzer, president of the W. C. T. U. of Oklahoma, writes: "I rode one hundred and twenty miles to Cherokee to speak on the Fourth of July. Spoke in the afternoon in a beautiful grove and in the evening in a school-house, afterwards organizing a W. C. T. U. with seven regular and eight honorary members, also a Y with seven regular and seven honorary members. Those people made heroic efforts to get some one to help them, one lady driving forty miles to meet me at the station and another bringing me back. The heat was simply frightful. Our Oklahoma women are doing grandly." A magnificent record.

The following letter from Miss Elizabeth Preston, president W. C. T. U. of North Dakota, will interest and cheer all readers: "This week finishes the county conventions for North Dakota, which have been unusually well attended and enthusiastic. In spite of the great depression we are not only holding our own, but making progress. The Populist party, which carried the last state election, has again indorsed woman suffrage and placed itself on record as opposing the repeal of the penalty clause of our prohibitory law. The Republican party recommends to the favorable consideration of our next legislature the question of woman suffrage and declares for the enforcement of our laws controlling the liquor traffic. North Dakota enjoys the proud distinction of being the only state in the Union whose superintendent of public instruction is a woman. The "experiment" has worked so well, that this year both parties have nominated a woman for that office. The Populists renominated Mrs. Laura J. Eisenhuth, the present incumbent, and the Republicans nominated our state superintendent of purity, Miss Emma F. Bates. Westward the star of progress takes its way."

The annual state conference of the Y. W. C. T. U. of Ohio was held in the Asbury M. E. church, Delaware, July 19 and 20. We note with pleasure the exercises, and the presence of the enterprising state secretary of young women's work, Miss Frances Ensign. Mrs. Henrietta Monroe, president of the state union, was there to help, instruct and strengthen; also Mrs. R. J. Trego, our efficient National evangelist, whose labors have been greatly blessed during all the year.

As we write, other words which we hope may prove an incentive to many unions are received from Mrs. Delia W. Shinn, state corresponding secretary, Casselton, North Dakota: "The noble work done by the Moselle union, which is only a small country union, the members of which are mostly farmers' wives will, I am sure, delight you. It has under its charge forty-eight little children from Minneapolis, giving them Dakota air and sunshine, of which we have an abundance." God bless such a union is our prayer.

We are pleased with the close union in many places between the W. C. T. U. and Equal Suffrage Associations. Two of our much honored women are officers of the latter society of California, Mrs. Annie R. Bidwell being vice-president and Mrs. Emily Pitt Stevens, corresponding secretary of the Woman's Suffrage Educational Association of that state, and do us honor in their diligent, intelligent service, never compromising prohibition for suffrage endorsement. They stand fearlessly and truthfully for the Prohibition party; that always endorses woman's ballot.

We regret to learn that our National organizer, Mrs. Henrietta Skelton, has been laid aside for a time by illness, but glad she has found a resting place at Lytton Springs, Cal. She will go, as soon as able, to South Dakota for recuperation and hopes to find her way to Ohio for our National Convention, indeed hopes to be permitted to rally her fellow Germans in that state at an earlier date.

MARY A. WOODBRIDGE.

Treasurer's Corner.

Evidences accumulate to show that an extra effort must be put forth by state and local, as well as individual members, or we shall fall behind in dues and members. Some of the states have by extra effort paid dues in excess of last year, while others are not quite up to former years, and other states have not yet completed payment of dues. We are very anxious that our treasury may be entirely freed from debt and be able to present a clean balance on the right side of the ledger. This can be done if all states will faithfully collect dues from every individual member and promptly forward ten cents per member to the National. Dues have recently come from Alabama and North Carolina, also from Pennsylvania.

Coquille, Ore., W. C. T. U. sent $1.50 on ten cent fund; Kingston, Mass., $2; C. Emma Cawthorne, Henry, S. D., 40 cents, while Mrs. Maria B, Suliot, of Salem, O., sends 65 cents as a thankoffering.

Mrs. Eliza Waldo writes: "I saw your suggestion in THE UNION SIGNAL that a contribution to the National treasury of one dollar is a very practical way of expressing our welcome home to our National President. As this idea accords well with my own, I enclose herewith one dollar for that purpose."

L. M. Hyslop, of Nebraska City, Neb., says, "Am glad I always read the Treasurer's Corner, for it had not occurred to me that I could show my welcome to our beloved president in so small a gift as one dollar to our National treasury until reading the Corner in my last UNION SIGNAL. I have thanked the dear Father many times for returning her to us in renewed health and strength, and I often think it must be a source of great help and comfort to know that at the noontide hour thousands all over the world are supplicating a throne of grace in her behalf.

"'Though sundered far, by faith we meet Around one common mercy seat.'"

Some of our dear sisters write of burned up crops, suspended manufactories and paralyzed business, yet all are hopeful for the future and all assure us at Headquarters that they will do the very best they can. May the Lord give us victory even in our temporal matters.

HELEN M. BARKER.

Old Riders who know Bicycles

Are accustomed to ignore friendships, and measure wheels without mercy. With them loud assertions count for nothing. Their mounts must stand the crucial test of reputation gained by years of honest and skilful construction and dealing. The best riders, oldest riders, the most intelligent wheelmen of the country know Columbias to be the standard of bicycle excellence for the world, and ride them in preference to any other wheels.

POPE MFG. CO., Boston, New York, Chicago, Hartford.

Our catalogue for 1894 shows a line of wheels, all newly designed, which for attractiveness excel any bicycles ever offered. It is free at our agencies, or we mail it for two two-cent stamps.

A GREAT MOTHER

THE WOMAN'S JOURNAL.

A Great Mother. Sketches of Madam Willard. By her daughter, Frances E. Willard, and her kinswoman, Minerva Brace Norton. With an introduction by Lady Isabel Somerset. Chicago: Woman's Temperance Publishing Association. 1894.

How to achieve a successful motherhood is a physiological and psychological problem which exceeds all others in importance except one—equally important—"how to achieve a successful fatherhood." These two problems cover the whole ground of human progress, yet they enlist less thought and attract less attention than visionary theories and fashionable follies. Madam Willard was a success as a mother. She lived a life of exceptional value as a demonstration that domestic happiness is promoted by mental and moral activity. Mary T. Hill was born and raised in Vermont. She began to study grammar when nine years old. When thirteen her parents moved to a farm in Western New York. From fifteen to twenty-six she was a teacher. At twenty-six she married Josiah Willard, and for ten years lived in Churchville, half a mile from her father's door. Thence they moved with their two children, Oliver and Frances, to Oberlin, O., where a third child, Mary, was born. For five years husband and wife studied together in the college classes there, and then moved to Wisconsin, passing through Chicago, then a muddy village of 4,000 inhabitants. They settled in Janesville, on the verge of an undulating prairie, with forest grounds sloping to Rock River. Later, they made their last move to Evanston, to enable their children to study at the Northwestern University. Father, daughter Mary and son Oliver successively passed away, leaving Madam Willard and her daughter Frances. The mother lived to be eighty-seven, and died serenely, August 7, 1892, at Rest Cottage, Evanston, having been to the last the central figure of a beautiful and happy home.

This biography is deeply interesting. It gives a picture, all the more impressive because unintentional, of the outer and inner life of the kind of men and women who have founded the great Northwest, and have advanced American civilization.

ATTENTION! BOYS!

See our display advertisement which cannot fail to interest you. This opportunity is not for your mother or sister, but for you only. We do not offer many premiums but we are confident this nickel watch is just what you need, just what it claims to be, and for the effort it will cost, you cannot obtain a better time-keeper. It is really a clock movement in a nickel case, manufactured by the Waterbury Clock Company, small enough to fit in your vest pocket. The smallest boy can wind it and tell accurate time by it. It is not a toy watch nor as small and delicate as your father's, yet will keep perhaps better time than his. Read our offer and notify us at once that you wish to work for one of these watches and we will be ready to fill your order as soon as it reaches us.

BOOKS.

"Lady Gay and Her Sister," by Mrs. George Archibald, is a sequel to "Lady Gay," published as a serial in Our Little Men and Women. The two little maids, quaint, wise and bubbling over with fun, will remind more than one mother of the children in her home. They are live children, with whom any other little man or woman will be glad to be acquainted.

MISS WILLARD WRITES:

MY DEAR YOUNG WOMEN:—Among the many good things that keep on happening to—and that means making happy—the W. C. T. U., none in recent times has given me more solid comfort than your change of name. For though I have stoutly adhered to my own from a period long distant even unto this hour, I quite approve of YOUNG WOMEN changing theirs when they can improve upon them, and this, our gentle younger sister, the Oak and Ivy Leaf, has certainly achieved.

* * * * * * * * *

Heaven bless our YOUNG WOMEN and make them the strongest, gentlest wives and mothers, writers and speakers, reformers and philanthropists that the world has ever known. Ever your affectionate elder(ly) sister,

FRANCES E. WILLARD.

BELFAST, Ireland, has one license for drink shops to every thirty-seven families.

A PETITION has been presented to the Transvaal Parliament against the employment of barmaids.

FOUR thousand of the eleven thousand members of the Blue Cross temperance society in Switzerland are reclaimed inebriates.

IT is a historical fact that Selina, Countess of Huntingdon, attended and participated in Wesley's conference at Leeds in 1762.

JULES SIMON is quoted as saying that "France passionately desires peace" and would gladly enter upon a diminution of military expenditure.

BISHOP THOBURN states that when he left India, last March, the whole number of converts in the mission stations of North and Central India amounted to 72,000.

THE German Peace societies have received a welcome gift by the bequest of a Bavarian lady, of £2,500, the income from which is to be applied to their use.

LONDON hospitals are finding less use for alcohol in medicine; a hopeful sign. At one hospital the amount expended yearly is reduced eighty-five per cent in ten years.

IF the figures of a French statistician are credited, the balance of the sexes is more nearly equal in France than in any other country, being in the ratio of 1,007 to 1,000.

AT the meeting of the Third London Wesleyan Methodist district at Hastings, Miss Dawson, who is already a steward of the Red Hill circuit, was elected one of the lay delegates to the Wesleyan Conference.

THE British Royal Opium Commission has been memorialized by fifteen missionaries in China, representing the various British societies, urging the commission to recommend that the Indian government should restrict the production to what is needed for medicinal purposes only.

THE famous English cricketer, Mr. J. E. K. Studd, who is a total abstainer from principle, says with regard to quenching thirst, that he has always found it best to drink as little as possible of anything, and recommends hot tea as the best for a strong thirst. Next to this, lemonade is his favorite beverage.

THE Westminster Gazette, whose figures are indisputable, gives the proportion of drunkenness, as one to every twenty-six of population in Gothenburg compared to one to every two hundred and six and one to every four hundred and six in Cardiff and Southampton. Surely not a convincing argument in favor of the Gothenburg system.

MAN SUKH LAL, editor of the Banner of Asia, is another sufferer from efforts in the Indian anti-opium crusade, being sent to prison for one month, having refused payment of his fine. Mr. Alfred Dyer of The Bombay Guardian is the next to have been placed upon the rack. The government of Bombay is thus adding condemnation to the well-merited accusations heaped against it.

THERE is an estate in North London, according to the Christian Commonwealth, on which seven hundred cottages have been built by one company, without any gin or beer shops. Those residents who desire the drink know where to get it, and do get it. But this only shows that partial prohibition is partial failure. Prohibition itself is not a failure, and is its own best advocate.

REV. F. B. MEYER, of London, invites mothers in the poor and crowded districts to his weekly Monday meetings, which are held in a hall, furnished with carpet, comfortable chairs, tables, with vases of flowers to resemble a sitting-room. While the women, whose number averages three hundred, are busily sewing in groups, the good divine gives informal home talks, and the babies are cared for in an adjoining room by volunteers.

DO YOU HAVE ASTHMA?

If you do, you will be glad to hear that the Kola plant, found on the Congo river, West Africa, is reported a positive cure for the disease. The Kola Importing Co., 1164 Broadway, New York, have such faith in this new discovery, that they are sending out free by mail, large trial cases of Kola Compound to all sufferers from Asthma, who send their name and address on a postal card.

Already the first edition of the above book is exhausted, and we are filling orders from the second. Nothing could better indicate the impression it has made upon the public. The reviewers are a unit in its praise. Our own women write of the uplift it has brought into their lives. Unions are buying it to read together. SELF-DENIAL WEEK.

September 22–28 has been fixed upon as Self-Denial Week. It begins on the birthday of our First Round-the-World Missionary, and ends on that of our World's W. C. T. U. President. During that time each person (man, woman and child) who believes in the white-ribbon cause—a pure life, a protected home, a regenerated Republic—is asked to do without something that costs money in order to save and give that money to the World's and National W. C. T. U. in equal parts, to help on their work. The exact use to be made of the amount sent can be indicated if any so desire.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

Japan has more than fifty thousand soldiers on Corean territory.

The tariff bill has neither been signed nor vetoed by the President.

Ill health has obliged President Cleveland to retire to Gray Gables for rest.

Already much improvement is noted in commercial life since the passage of the tariff bill.

The assassin of President Carnot, Santo Caserio, was executed at Lyons, France, August 16.

A cablegram from Corea dated August 19, states that the Japanese have captured an important Chinese fort.

The bank clearings for the week show an increase of eight per cent over the corresponding week of last year.

Large quantities of whisky are being withdrawn from bond, so as to escape the advance twenty per cent tax of the new tariff bill.

The one hundredth anniversary of the birth of William Cullen Bryant was celebrated August 16. He was born November 3, 1794.

ACCORDING to the statement of an attaché of the city government, there were one thousand five hundred less saloons licensed in Chicago the first eleven days of August 1894 (the time for re-issuing licenses) than during the corresponding days of 1893. "It's an ill wind that blows nothing good." If these distressingly hard times will succeed in wiping out the saloons, we can endure them with more grace than though they did not affect our greatest enemy—the liquor traffic.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL workers will be glad to know that the quarterly temperance lesson for September 23, which is issued as a supplement to The Young Crusader, is now ready. The supplement is nearly double its usual size, the extra pages being given to general Sunday-school matter of value and interest to both teacher and pupil. The Young Crusader purposes hereafter to devote at least one page each month to Sunday-school interests, thus enlarging the scope of the paper and making it indispensable to those Sunday-schools that teach the temperance lesson. If white-ribboners in their respective schools would personally interest the superintendent in this paper, presenting him sample copies far in advance of temperance Sunday and attending to the order themselves, if desired, The Young Crusader would speedily grow to the one hundred thousand copies it should have.

THE most hopeful result in which any of our labor difficulties have yet issued is the appointment by the President of the United States of a National Commission to report on the causes and consequences of the great railroad strike. This commission is now in session in Chicago, and voluntary testimony of a valuable nature is being heard and recorded. THE UNION SIGNAL has been from the first a warm supporter of peace and arbitration at home and abroad, and regards the National W. C. T. U. peace department, which has been so long superintended by the wise and gentle Friend, Mrs. Hannah J. Bailey, of Maine, second to none in importance. We believe that compulsory arbitration should be wrought into the laws of the land, both state and national, and that right early. It is to our minds the remedy for strikes; it puts in the wrong both capital and labor unless they settle their disputes in such a manner as not to block the public highways or to imperil the public peace.

AUGUST 14, the seventy-fifth birthday of Lucy Stone, was the occasion of the gathering in Willard Hall of many who deem themselves ennobled in reverencing this gentle pioneer who made a life witness against the injustice of sex subordinations in the question of human liberty. Mrs. Catherine Waugh McCulloch was in the chair, and bestowed a special grace on the event by the felicity and model delicacy of her speeches of introduction. Senator Castle, of Illinois, made an address of marked excellence, in which he termed Lucy Stone "the gentle priestess of a successful revolution. . . . She left this world with every legal right of women acknowledged, if not granted, and with every avenue of life thrown open to her sex." Mrs. Helen M. Barker contrasted with enthusiasm the days when Lucy Stone's voice was that of "one crying in the wilderness" with the "fad" aspect of the woman question to-day and with the already dawning light of a world made better by just such simple fidelity to truth as was exhibited by this unswerving patriot. Mrs. Emma Smith De Voe reviewed the suffrage work of Kansas from its origin, giving special prominence to the controlling and indispensable work of the W. C. T. U. in these campaigns. Mrs. Helen Hinsdale Rich read the rare poem which will appear in our next issue, reserved because, as a farmer's daughter, Lucy Stone represented through all her ways and works the vigor, the beauty, and the purity which character acquires most fully by drinking at Nature's fountain-head.

A GOOD friend of woman's suffrage as well as the temperance cause (by the way, are not the two causes growing almost identical these days?) suggests that the W. C. T. U. endeavor to introduce into political caucus meetings resolutions in favor of woman suffrage, and that the delegates to the state and senatorial conventions be instructed to speak for woman's enfranchisement in their respective bodies. Agitation of this kind should, like charity, always begin at home. If legislators could be made to feel the real sentiment of the community, they would be greatly influenced in their actions.

A LAMENTABLE condition of affairs in Philadelphia has lately been disclosed by a member of the Ledger force, James F. Dailey, who has been engaged for six months examining the patronage of the liquor business in the city of brotherly love. He has discovered that of the sixty thousand signers for saloon licenses, a very large number are members and officers of various churches, also of different branches of governments and of courts. Mr. Dailey names certain prominent churches whose officers—Sunday-school superintendents and teachers, trustees and vestrymen—have their names affixed to saloon license applications, also police magistrates, city councilmen, state senators, etc. Although this is probably no isolated condition, it is seldom that we have seen such a clear and startling revelation of iniquity, even in the liquor traffic. Many of these Christian (?) men doubtless regard with horror liquor drinking and drunkenness, but if we were to compare the two sins—deliberate signing of a saloon application and impulsive drinking of the saloon product, we would pronounce the former the greater. Do not the churches named by Mr. Dailey, by their very silence, sanction this libel on Christianity? We await with interest the anticipated action of these religious bodies, and will inform our readers of the final outcome of the charges.

THERE is one good point about local option. When industriously applied, it has in it educative power for the voters. It is true that moralists might object to turning loose the agencies of evil periodically in a community, when it has once been settled that they are agencies for evil, always and everywhere, as it has been shown and is so generally admitted concerning the liquor traffic. Still, there may be communities where this way of dealing with truth is the only one practicable. It might be the same with counterfeiting, larceny, horse stealing or burglary. In consequence of many prominent members of society being personally engaged in the business, it might be difficult to decide whether or not the general interest ought to outweigh their own personal interests. It might even be thought best to license Smith one year to do an exclusive business in burglary within the county, and to permit him to recoup the public treasury by supporting a mission Sunday-school or a course of public lectures on the science of coöperative economics. In another year Jones might be licensed to do business in counterfeiting, a heavy license fee being exacted in return for the permission and for the monopoly. No doubt there would come a time in the political history of these communities when a majority of voters would decide that the public interest ought to outweigh those of these favored monopolists, and that henceforth no such licenses should be granted. Yet these licenses would not be nearly so detrimental to the public interests as those of the liquor traffic, which, (like the evil told of in the gospel) has power to destroy the body and soul. But the principle of local option and high license is the same, and singularly enough, progress has reached the point of generally prohibiting the merely property evils referred to, but has not reached the point of dealing with the liquor traffic upon a common sense not to say a humanitarian basis.

PERPLEXED.

BY HARRIET NEWELL SWANWICK.

"The times are out of joint!" Dismal they creak;
Discordant sounds are heard on every side.
Where, how and when shall rise the master-hand,
Whose touch of skill shall readjust the parts,
And wanted oil apply?

Faint falls the echo of the song of Peace,
As—seeking purer air—afar she goes;
Her white wings heavy with the smoke of war
Droop sadly o'er the land she long has loved,—
When will she homeward fly?

Dust-covered lies the harp that once could charm
The simple dwellers in Contentment's halls;
Who—who shall wake the silent chords, and bring
From out the deafening strife 'twixt Might and Right
Unbroken melody?

Chicago, Ill.

THE LONDON WORK OF MRS. BRAMWELL BOOTH.

I.

BY COL. ADELAIDE COX.

"I'm not going in," said the taller of the two girls as they stood in front of the Salvation Army Rescue headquarters in London. "I'm not going in, for I tell you I am afraid to."

"Well, so am I, for the matter of that," answered the other, "but I don't intend to come all this distance and then go home without accomplishing anything, simply because I don't know what these Salvationists are, and because they might happen to speak to us about our souls. Stay outside if you want to, but I wish you wouldn't; you see if they do attack us, they will be sure to speak to me first, because I am the older one."

It wasn't so very dreadful after all; the lieutenant who opened the door, smiled and asked the visitors for their names, quite as if she had been an ordinary mortal instead of belonging to the peculiar species known as the Salvationists. In the work room, too, they found that the captain who was in charge as well as the girls at work, spoke just the same language as they themselves did. They discussed the relative values of linen and cotton, of embroidery and lace, exactly as they would have done in a shop, and finally left feeling very glad that their dread of meeting the unknown had not kept them from giving to the sewing department an order for work which its representative was not more glad to receive than they to give. They left, too, with the feeling that if Salvationists were not just like other people, they at least had a good deal of ordinary human nature left.

But the workroom isn't like other workrooms, at least not like most of them. A bright, airy place with big windows and big tables, differing from the workrooms in the homes only in the fact that the women who work in it are those who have already stood the test of going back into close contact with the world, women who have proved in their lives the keeping as well as the saving power of Christ.

Almost every sort of sewing is undertaken here and beautifully done. Aprons and underclothing are the specialty, either made to order or kept to be disposed of at public demonstrations or drawingroom meetings. In the homes a great many outfits are made for the girls who are going into service. These outfits are never given but are paid for gradually by the girls, and there have been very few cases in which this confidence has been abused. As a rule, the girls are anxious not only to pay back what they owe, but also to give a little extra to help those who take their places. All the homes have one or two beds entirely supported by the "old girls," and there is nothing that they enjoy better than going to the home when they have their free afternoons to see their beds and their officers or to have a cup of tea in their dining-room.

To the visitor who has never seen the International Rescue Headquarters, the first thing to produce an impression is the corridor, that corridor which is so long and so narrow as to form a most excellent basis for a study in perspective. But when one has been inside the various offices whose doors open from it, the corridor resolves itself into, if not a "necessary evil," at least nothing more than a necessary means of communication among the rooms where so much is done so quietly and in so small a space. Everything seems essentially business-like, from the click of the typewriters to the bell in Mrs. Booth's office which summons her secretary, but this is so because every one recognizes that "the King's business requireth haste." It is a fundamental principle of the Salvation Army that a business man should be so much the better a business man for being a Christian, and that office work should therefore be conducted just so much the better for being managed by those upon whose heart is the burden of souls, by those who can see the wonderful opportunities hidden away within the shell of routine and machinery.

Going up the long corridor past the waiting-rooms, the first door on the left represents the interview office, which is not, as its name might be thought to imply, a sort of penance chamber for the victims of the aggressive reporter, but rather a place where the fundamental principle of paper-sorting is reduced to a science and applied to the various classes of human beings that apply at the door for spiritual or temporary help, and are passed on from the waiting-rooms to the interview office, and from there up the corridor or across it or back and out again according to the judgment of the officer in charge. Well for her, and for all who pass through her hands, that one of the Rescue Work's most deeply rooted articles of faith is the belief in the existence and the value of "sanctified common-sense."

The inquiry department, which has within eight months restored four hundred and seventy-eight people to their anxious friends, comes next in order. This is under the control of Adjutant Harland, who was born with a love for detective work and who has given both this love and himself to the service of those who have no helper. He has four women working directly under his supervision, and they stand ready to do their best in finding anything you may have lost, from your family to your reputation. And the inquiry department's best is something very good indeed, backed up as it is by the different War Crys and the various means of communication afforded by the fact that the army now has its representatives in almost every land.

Just one case is a sort of "sample of work done here," the case of a poor woman who had only too really the proverbial six children to take care of, and who left her husband because he couldn't leave the drink. When all trace of him was lost, she suddenly discovered that she would like to have him back again; so an advertisement was inserted in the War Cry, and a copy found its way to the very workhouse where James Bell was resting after his strenuous exertions in the service of saloon-keepers. Bell got hold of it, and read it so thoroughly that he saw the notice of information wanted about himself. He wrote saying that he was anxious to get work, to become reconciled to his wife, and also to meet her at headquarters.

He came to London to consult Adjutant Harland, and the very same morning, without an appointment being made, Mrs. Bell came to see whether she could get work in the Salvation Army laundry. But the difficulties were not over even then, for Bell was in debt £25 to the Guardians of the Poor, who were then caring for the children.

On the one hand, Bell wanted his children, but on the other didn't want to be arrested, as he feared he should be if the Guardians came to know where he was. He didn't know what to do, but Adjutant Harland did. He wrote to the board explaining the situation and soon received a letter saying that the warrant against Bell would be withdrawn, provided that the six children were taken away within a specified time. Work was found for Bell as well as for his wife, the children were sent for, and they have all lived together happily ever since. Quite a fairy tale with modern improvements.

The affiliation work comes very directly under Adjutant Harland's personal control. Within five months sixty-nine cases have come up, and thirty-nine of these satisfactorily settled, sometimes by arrangement and again by order of the police authorities. It is depressing work and shows in all their blackness the capabilities of human nature for wrong-doing.

But then, the bright side is just so much brighter by contrast. There was Hetty Thomas, for instance, whom a lady found while on her round of district visiting, and reported to headquarters. Hetty had been deceived by a man more than six years before, and when the little one was born had summoned the father. But he paid only enough to cover the costs of the summons and calmly disappeared.

Adjutant Harland took up the case, found the man, and asked him to make an offer toward the support of the child. Upon the man's refusing to do this, he was taken before a magistrate and ordered to pay arrears. When he refused to do this a warrant was issued against him and he was sent to prison for a month.

After he left there he was kept in sight and forced to pay a small allowance regularly toward the support of the child. He is still doing this, and the officers still keep in touch both with him and with the woman whom he deceived.

STARS OF HOPE.*

BY JOSEPH COOK.

Neal Dow at the recent celebration of his ninetieth birthday said: "When Christians say go and vote go, the liquor traffic will go."

There are in the United States about five millions of church members who are voters. If they were to unite to make the liquor traffic an outlaw, there is no political party that they could not bring to terms.

It is a star of hope in the temperance sky, that thirty-nine out of our forty-five states have now made scientific temperance education mandatory in the common schools.

It is another sign of hope that many series of temperance text-books adapted to this instruction have been issued by the foremost publishing houses, and are all keyed up to the level of total abstinence.

It is a third star of hope that the weight and power of temperance literature, as well as its diffusion and popularity, are rapidly increasing.

It is a fourth star of hope that the Methodist, Presbyterian, Baptist, Congregationalist, and several other Protestant religious denominations, refuse to admit liquor-dealers to church-membership.

It is a fifth star of hope that the Roman Catholic church, by the recent decision of Mgr. Satolli, approving the pastoral letter of Bishop Watterson, has adopted the policy of excluding rumsellers from Roman Catholic societies, and of refusing the sacraments to Roman Catholic rumsellers who violate the laws, especially those against Sunday liquor-selling. The Wine and Spirit Gazette dares Archbishop Corrigan to enforce this decree. The Archbishop replies that he accepts in spirit and in letter the principles laid down by Satolli, and that as to the fear and consequences, he has yet to learn what it is in the discharge of duty. These are great and significant precedents in the Roman Catholic world. The liquor traffic has the state by the throat. It remains to be seen whether it has its grip also on the throat of the church.

It is a sixth star of hope that the Methodist church declares that the liquor traffic can never be legalized without sin, and that both the Methodist and the Presbyterian churches affirm, in national assemblies, that no political party that legalizes the liquor traffic ought to be surprised if it loses the votes of church members.

It is a seventh star of hope that reorganization of temperance politics, side by side with improved methods of moral and educational temperance action, is in progress, and that there is a rising tide of outraged public sentiment demanding that the liquor traffic be made an outlaw by both state and national, legislative and constitutional enactments.

It is true that many clouds, some of them full of fearful portents, obscure these stars. Municipal misrule, under the despotism of the dramshop, is possibly the darkest threat in the American future. The sovereignty of the saloon is one of the chief causes of the corruption of politics, both municipal and state, and may ultimately invade the national field itself. The wastes and burdens of the republic by the loss of one thousand millions annually through the liquor traffic, add immensely to the distresses of the unemployed and the poor. The apathy of luxurious society to the temperance cause is perhaps diminishing, but is, nevertheless, so great as to be appalling.

It is certain, however, that through all these clouds the glorious cluster of the temperance Pleiades is rising, with God behind it, in the now brightening dawn of the twentieth century.

REASONS AND A REMEDY.

BY A. FREELAND.

Sometime since THE UNION SIGNAL, commenting on the Industrial army, remarked that many of the army through no fault of their own, have been out of employment for months. If they were out of employment through no fault of their own, by whose fault was it?

There is plenty of room in the world in which to employ themselves. The surface of America is barely scratched. The Mississippi valley is capable of sustaining as many people as the whole of Europe. Little Japan, half as large as Texas, or twice the area of Illinois, supports a population of forty million people, and yet it is said that even there only one-tenth of the land is in cultivation. The land of the United States is capable of sustaining all the people of the earth.

Then why do the Coxeyites not go on to the land and employ themselves? Evidently by reason of an artificial barrier they cannot get to it. Monopoly stands between them and the earth. There is the land ready to be tilled and to yield in abundance, and here are the hands ready to till it. A way must be found to open these lands to the use of the willing hands. And a way has been found.

Abolish all taxes save the tax on land values. Put the tax on land values so high that it will pay better to use it than to hold it idle for speculation. Adopt the single tax on the value of land, and then every man willing to work can find work. Then, instead of there being two men for every job, there will be two jobs for every man.

This "land value tax" is already paid in addition to all the other kinds of taxes, but at present it goes to build up a plutocracy, whereas under the single tax system it would go into the public treasury to be used for public purposes, and all other taxes which are now paid would be retained in the hands of those who earned them.

Waco, Texas.

E. B. SWINNEY'S VIEWS.

It is encouraging to note that a few journals, yours among the number, are courageous enough to allow it to be said in their columns that many of the rank and file of the Industrial Army were thoroughly honest in their purpose, and through no fault of their own have been out of employment for months.

These being the real facts of the case, which have come to light notwithstanding the strenuous efforts made to suppress them, does it not indicate grave injustice in our present social system? In a country teeming with natural resources, and capable of sustaining in comfort, and even luxury, over a thousand million people, why, in a population of seventy millions do we find between three and four millions willing and able to work, yet unable to obtain it?

The cause is obvious. Land and labor are the prime factors in wealth production, and the reason idleness and poverty exist is because labor is denied access to land, from which all wealth is produced. Industrial armies, strikes and labor troubles generally, are warnings against impending disasters if such conditions are allowed to continue.

The only practical remedy that will secure "equal rights to all and special privileges to none" is the single tax. Its adoption would utterly destroy land speculation by making it unprofitable to withhold valuable land from use, thereby opening up unlimited opportunities for the employment of labor and capital, and in that way abolishing involuntary poverty. The scheme is simple, practical and absolutely just. It is simple because everybody can understand it; it is practical because it can be put into effect by the existing machinery of taxation, involving the creation of no new functions of government; it is absolutely just, because it takes for expenses of government that value which attaches to land by reason of the presence of population. Land values, or ground rents, belong to all the people, because they all help by their presence to create them; they rise and fall in the same proportion that population increases or diminishes, and are in no sense due to individual effort.

Under this system, it is not proposed to tax land in proportion to the amount held by each individual, nor to tax all land alike, but this tax shall fall on valuable land only to the full amount of its annual rental value; consequently city land will be taxed more than farming land, because it is more valuable. All improvements would be exempt from taxation. The owner of a lot upon which is erected a magnificent building would be taxed no more than the owner of an equally valuable vacant lot, thus encouraging industry and discouraging land speculation.

The existing system of taxation is essentially unjust, for it heavily taxes the improver of property while allowing the real obstructor of progress to practically escape.

THE SALOON IN POLITICS; AN ENGLISH PARALLEL.

BY JAMES WHYTE.

Secretary of the United Kingdom Alliance.

At last the great danger to the nation of the influence of the liquor interest in politics is being recognized in high places. The Prime Minister, at a great meeting in Birmingham, on May 23, felt constrained to say: "The second point on which I regard drink as a danger is this: It is becoming too great a power in the state. I go so far as to say this, that if the state does not soon control the liquor traffic the liquor traffic will soon control the state."

This testimony is true. Already the liquor traffic is one of the most potent factors in determining the issue of elections; hence, even now, it largely controls the politics of the country. For, whether we like it or not, the Unionist party, or, to be quite accurate, the leaders, "bosses" and wire-pullers of that party are to-day dominated by the drink interest and are compelled to do its bidding. On the other hand, the Liberal party, as represented by its accredited leaders, has broken with "the trade," and by doing so has not only lost much support, but has brought upon itself the deadly hostility of one of the most powerful and corrupt of all the combinations for political purposes at present existing in this country. With but few exceptions the great brewers and distillers, with their plethoric money-bags, and all that influence in social, religious and political life which, in these days, wealth such as theirs always brings to its possessors, have cleared, "bag and baggage," out of the Liberal party. Just lately Lord Burton has left his party in the interest of his business. Mr. Beaufoy, M. P., seems to be on the wing, and Mr. Hugh Hoare, M. P., has just been showing signs of the greatest uneasiness in his position as a Liberal member of parliament. Publicans and drink-sellers generally, as well as those outsiders whom the liquor trade can cajole or coerce, have also gone. All the Tory and most of the Liberal Unionist papers in Great Britain are now pro-liquor; and all the liquor papers are "whole-heartedly" Unionist. With few exceptions, the Liberal papers—some of them heartily and some of them hesitatingly—support the government liquor traffic (local control) bill. The church is, on the whole, hostile to this measure; and the chapel, on the whole, friendly to it.

For the time these secessions have weakened the Liberal party and strengthened the Conservative-cum-Liquor party. But they have not made the latter supreme in the state. At the general election, and at by-elections which have since occurred, the Liberal-cum-Temperance party have successfully repelled the fierce attacks of the combination; and, if the Liberal-cum-Temperance party should remain "solid" on the temperance question, it will continue to repel them. But here is the danger. A section of the Liberal party are hungrily envious of the advantages—or seeming advantages—which the Conservatives derive from their political union with the drink interest. These Liberals are, or at least affect to be, at issue with their own leaders as to their proposed liquor legislation. It is needless to say that they are all preeminently "practical men." They, of course, "sympathize with the Temperance party in its desire to abate drunkenness"; but, at the same time, have the utmost contempt for the political capacity of that party, as well as for its projects and methods of working.

The Liberals of this class never cease to complain that at Parliamentary elections the temperance people do nothing or next to nothing, while the public house is all but omnipotent. If an election is won by a veto candidate, the veto has nothing to do with the victory. If an election is lost, it is the veto that causes the failure. They, —sometimes for one reason, sometimes for another,—now on the ground that the government measure goes too far, again because it does not go far enough, keep on urging that it should be dropped and a "practical" measure substituted for it. But no measure would suit them. What they really desire,—what they are actually working for, both overtly and covertly—is that all temperance legislation should be got out of the way "for the present," and that the policy of the Liberal party towards temperance legislation should be so shaped that the votes and influence of a considerable section of the liquor electors may be won back to the Liberals. Should this section of the party prevail, Lord Rosebery's fears will speedily be realized; for, assuredly, the loss to the Liberal party through the secession of temperance electors would so greatly outweigh any little gain that the adoption of the fatuous and perfidious policy urged upon them could possibly secure, that the Tory-cum-Drink combination would be borne back to office by a sweeping majority, and the drink interest would be lifted into supreme power.

It may, I think, be assumed that the persons who become liquor sellers are neither better nor worse, to begin with, than their neighbors; and that the characteristics which ultimately distinguish them, as a class, from other tradespeople are to be attributed to the peculiar influences of their environment. Now it is clearly demonstrable that their surroundings are preëminently inimical to both physical and moral health. The Registrar-General has placed beyond dispute the fact that the liquor retailer's business is the most deadly of all the occupations carried on in this country. Its effect on the moral character of those engaged in it is, to some extent, a matter of inference, but of inference from indisputable facts. The fact that the cause of the exceptionally high rate of mortality among publicans, beer-sellers and their servants is intemperance, is itself fraught with terrible significance to all who know to what an extent drinking, especially such as greatly impairs health and shortens life, inevitably deteriorates the moral nature of those who subject themselves to its devastating influence. In the report of the Registrar-General it is said: "The mortality of men who are directly concerned in the liquor traffic is appalling;" and further, "That this terrible mortality is attributable to drink might be safely assumed a priori, but the figures render it incontestable. The mortality attributed to alcoholism itself is far higher for inn-keepers and publicans than for any other industry, and more than five times as high as the average." The following statement, made by Mr. David Lewis, J. P., of Edinburgh, in his work "The Drink Problem," shows in a very striking manner the sort of histories which are summarized in the Registrar-General's statistics. On page 93 Mr. Lewis says:

"The late Dr. Norman Macleod, one of her Majesty's chaplains for Scotland, noted the career of the occupants of various liquor shops in Dalkeith, during the period he was minister of that parish. The results are startling. Dr. Macleod, as the result of his observations, gives the history of thirty-nine families. When he left Dalkeith for Glasgow, six of these occupied positions of comparative respectability, and in the case of nineteen others either the husband or the wife had died under the influence of drink; and of the remaining fourteen families both parents and children, without exception, perished victims of the traffic with which they were associated."

But, further, certain of the influences to which the ordinary publican—the publican, that is, of everyday life, not the glorified "licensed victualler" of the political speech or leading article—is exposed, are obviously fitted to "harden all within and petrify the feeling." Day by day he witnesses, and profits by, the formation and development among men and women—sometimes even among boys and girls—of habits which lay waste, and are familiarly known by him to lay waste, whatsoever is noble, beautiful, lovable or useful in human nature. In the ordinary way of business he, from hour to hour, takes, in exchange for the brain poison which maddens fathers and mothers, the pence and shillings which, as he is well aware, ought to buy bread for famishing children. The drink-shop, is practically, the "prostitute's exchange"; and the keeper too often obtains no inconsiderable portion of his gains from the leprous trade in prostitution.

The opponents of stringent liquor legislation are never weary of entreating the public to beware of that demoralization which is the Nemesis of unpunished law-breaking. The frequent violation of some laws, these gentlemen assure us, produces in the minds of the law-breakers and of others a contempt for legal obligations generally. We certainly have no interest in contesting the point. The temperance party are "law and order" men of the least flexible type. We "commend the chalice to their own lips." What about the evasions and violations of the present licensing laws which take place in such abundance? What is the effect on the character of those who resort to them, of the scheming, lying and bribing known to be rife when public-house cases, in which licenses are likely to be endangered, are brought, or are likely to be brought before the court? Lord Bramwell, a great champion of the "trade" declared that he had met with more perjury in connection with liquor dealers' cases than with any other class of cases whatever. And,—let it be very specially noted—his lordship's experience was not derived from countries where there are Sunday closing and prohibitory laws, but from England, with its slackly administered "judiciously restrictive" liquor legislation. Notoriously the law is habitually violated by the liquor shop keeper; and, notoriously, convictions for the offences which he commits are peculiarly difficult to obtain because of the "hard swearing," that is, the perjury, which is so readily forthcoming in his defence.

INTERESTS VERSUS PRINCIPLES.*

BY J. B. GAMBRELL, D. D.

Victor Hugo, the man who came as near telling the truth about France as any man who ever wrote, in describing the condition of things just before one of those violent revolutions which have occurred in France during the present century, said, "The contentions of the period were about an aggregation of interests rather than a group of principles."

Read that sentence over till you catch its fine sense, and see its masterful embrace of a critical period in a nation's history, a situation which quickly changed into revolution and bloodshed. There were contentions. That is nothing strange nor dangerous in itself. Where there is much intellectual life there will be much debate. But what were these contentions about? Human rights? No. The safeguards of a nation? No. Public justice? No. Purity in public life? No. Great problems involving the enlightenment of the masses? No. What were the contentions of the period about? "An aggregation of interests." The various classes were contending for advantage, for personal interests. The contentions waxed hotter and hotter till some won and some lost.

When principle is put in the background and greed in the front, as the ruler of a nation, that nation must speedily reverse the position of the two or go to ruin. What the French demonstrated in our century, other nations had demonstrated before, and other nations still are likely to demonstrate it as time goes on.

THE SITUATION IN AMERICA

is precisely what it was in France when Victor Hugo described it in the terse sentence quoted. We are in a prolonged period of bitter "contentions about an aggregation of interests" with scarcely a voice raised anywhere for principles. For thirty years it has been either sectional or commercial politics all the time. Mr. Cleveland in his famous tariff message, struck a high key of principle which had been so long mute that the nation was startled; capital combined and Cleveland was defeated for reëlection. Later the people rallied and elected him and his party, putting them into complete power. Since his last inaugural not one high note has been heard from Washington by a member of the government. The endless contentions are about an aggregation of interests. For many months the whole country has been kept in suspense, while the Senate has been trading on the tariff bill. No principle of common justice has any chance amidst this long drawn out "contention about an aggregation of interests." Each senator is striving to secure some interest special to himself or his constituency. Patriotism, justice and honesty all lie dead on the altar of greed. How long can a government last when principle yields to party and patriotism to gold?

This pernicious, unending "contention about an aggregation of interests" takes a new form of expression in the conduct of the great parties of the country. The contentions of politics are not about the great principles which underlie governments,—purity of elections, polity in office, a moral, intelligent citizenship, justice and equality among citizens, great social and political agencies, like the saloon, but about parties and party success. Nearly all the speeches made in Congress are for party effect. And what is still more striking, the trading on the tariff, the struggles for party advantage going on in Washington to the displacement of honest, straightforward legislation on the principles underlying the government, are no longer concealed or sought to be concealed. He is the best representative who can get the most out of the government for his section and his friends. We have fallen so low in this "contention about an aggregation of interests" that it is now a large part of a Congressman's duty to get offices for his friends, who in turn are expected to carry the people to the polls like sheep to the shearer and reëlect him to get other offices or a continuance of the ones now enjoyed. Public interests give way before the rushing tide of aggregated personal interests.

If we turn our eyes away from politics, we behold the same threatening picture, a "contention about an aggregation of interests" rather than over a group of principles. Banks, railroads, manufacturers, brokers, real estate dealers, all sorts of people, aggregating their interests and contending about them, while labor, often blind, but, like Samson, feels in its aggregated strength for the very pillars of the temple of wealth and pulls everything down on its own head.

City, state and the national governments by the consent of the great parties are so intent on revenues that they turn everything over to the saloon with its vast aggregation of interests, striking their roots through banks, house-renters, all the trades, and going into the pockets of the taxpayers in a way to influence them to quietly yield to the matchless evil. America is sanguine. We are at the big boy period of our development. We lack thoughtfulness. We are heady and inconsiderate. It is hard to make us believe in the near approach of danger. We did not believe it in 1860. But danger was near and calamity came. It can come again. It will come, and that right soon, unless there is an awakening among the better people. Already we are quite accustomed to calling out troops to riots, to many kinds of lawlessness, which clearly indicate the over-wrought nervous condition of the people, and the lack of that conservative balance which comes only by the abiding presence of sound principles in the masses. Wars and rumors of wars, on a small scale, greet us almost daily, and the very commonness of such things prepares us to go into military methods, which lead to revolutions, disorders of all sorts, and finally despotism.

The despair of the situation is that the great mass of Christians, ministers and laymen, follow in the lead of these evil forces in their ever growing "contentions about an aggregation of interests." The very servants of God have become the ministers of evil to the whole land. We may believe that we can remain a free and happy people, and sell everything for gold; but history will teach us another lesson if we will stop long enough to learn.

I am not in despair. I believe in God and have a feeling that He does not mean that humanity shall throw away for a mess of pottage its greatest opportunity since the world began. I expect something to happen to wake us up to our folly and wickedness in bartering principle for pelf. Some John the Baptist will rise, I hope, to lay the ax to the roots of these aggregated interests and humble their pride. And while waiting the words of the Psalmist come to mind, "It's time, Lord, for thee to work."

OUR THIRD AND FOURTH ROUND-THE-WORLD MISSIONARIES IN THE ORIENT.

Dear Union Signal:—Perhaps I may be pardoned for reference to the personal gratification it was to me to revisit my old mission station after an absence of twelve years. I seemed to walk and talk in a dream from the time we reached Shanghai, and I began to see familiar places and familiar faces. Could it be possible the banks of the old river were still the same? But what a growth of foreign residences at Chingkiang, Wuhu and elsewhere along the way! I need not say I could not sleep as we neared Kinkiang. Would the old pagoda still form the chief landmark as we neared the city? Yes, there it was; I could see it with almost preternatural clearness of vision. I awakened Mrs. Andrew, and in a few minutes more we were along shore. But I had already caught sight in midnight darkness of a familiar form among the hundreds of natives waiting to board the vessel, and shouted, "Shu Toai Fung, bah?"

"Yes, yes, Dr. Bushnell, it is I, the tailor," was the eager reply. Another moment and I had clasped the hand of the faithful old servant, and was asking him questions in a language I supposed I had forgotten until my eager interest brought it all back. In twelve years I had not seen a Chinaman who could talk the dialect I had learned; but it was almost as natural to ask and answer questions and understand what was being said, as though it had been but yesterday I had learned it.

The tailor had been waiting impatiently for hours for our delayed boat; he had come provided with coolies to carry our baggage and two sedan chairs and bearers for us. We must pass through the city gates which had been locked up for the night, but he had arranged for their reopening. Rev. Mr. Banbury, of the Methodist mission, was also there to meet us. Not a missionary at Kinkiang was left whom I had known in former years; yet they received us as old friends. It was so wonderful to be carried by night through the old, familiar streets with the tailor walking by my side to answer every eager question. I imagined I knew every stone of the rude pavement under our feet. I knew the streets by night, and recalled times when abroad as late as this to attend the sick and dying in cases of great need.

It is said that these Oriental cities do not change from year to year; scarcely from century to century. But I noted changes. Kerosene lanterns instead of the torches of the past; the lights in many houses shone out through glass window panes, whereas they were formerly crude holes in the wall, sometimes covered with oiled paper; there were more chimneys on the houses; the wolf-like eastern dogs did not follow us in troops to bark at our strange appearance as formerly; even a city five hundred miles in the interior of China feels the pulsating life of the nineteenth century civilization. These signs give great cause for encouragement. Eagerly I pointed out the spots that were connected with incidents I had described to Mrs. Andrew in the days of my mission life, when she was at home, meeting the duties of a pastor's wife and officer in the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Methodist church. Here was the lake we crossed in a great storm, when hundreds of others were drowned, but God brought us safely through; and here was the very spot in the pathway by the lakeside close to the red city wall, where a little Chinese mountain girl stopped me, for, with a heart full of human sympathy, at one glance, she had read in my face the awful struggle with homesickness, and said timidly: "Foreign teacher, do you want my flowers?" God bless her! it was a dozen years ago, yet the tears spring to my eyes at every remembrance of it! Fitted to the circumstances, it was the greatest human kindness I ever received, and it made me a kinder woman for all time, I believe, to have seen the spot again.

I could not sleep that night, and the next morning I was up at daylight, for I could restrain my impatience no longer. I wanted to see the mountains, eight miles away, by the sunrise. They were the mountains that God had spoken to me of over and over again in the word: "The mountains shall depart and the hills be removed, but my kindness shall not depart from thee, neither shall the covenant of my peace be removed, saith the Lord that hath mercy on thee." Wonderfully has the Lord stayed me with that promise during the past fifteen years! First, my health failed, and I sat week after week able to do little but watch the play of the sunlight on these mountains, but they constantly assured me: "My kindness shall not depart from thee." What a wonderful fulfillment of this promise it seemed when Dr. Ella Gilchriest came to my relief! But strangely soon she was stricken with mortal illness, and then in my faithlessness I would have shut out the sight of the mountains if I could, but yet they kept calling even as I turned my back on them: "My kindness shall not depart from thee." The very last morning of my missionary life, when, broken-hearted, I relinquished my last hold on the work I had expected to spend my life doing, and began a weary march homeward with that awful, self-accusing sense that God had branded my whole future "failure," "failure!" it seemed as though the mountains were calling after me what I would have stopped my ears from hearing, if of any avail: "My kindness shall not depart from thee!"

Now what a wonderful, a joyous Sunday to return to all this! God had led all the way. God had done what He pleased, for "it is lawful" for Him to "do what He will with His own." And He had done the best with His own, too. And that best had included my dearest earthly plans. He has restored to me again the wonderful joy of affecting for the better the joyless life of heathen women. What more could I ask? What wonder I was impatient to see the mountains which, first to human eye and afterwards in memory, had continually testified, "My kindness shall not depart from thee!"

A happy week was spent at Kinkiang, and we addressed meetings in the interests of our work. It was very gratifying to see the increased number of Christians and the growth of the mission in many regards. The woman's work was temporarily crippled by the absence of Miss Gertrude Howe in America, and the orphan young ladies, Ida, Julia, Belle and Fannie. These young women were little children when I last saw them; they are most helpful workers in the mission. It was a rare joy later to meet Julia, Belle and Fannie at Nagasaki. Ida Howe, whose name will be remembered by Union Signal readers because of occasional letters from her, is now in America taking a course in medicine.

We next visited Nanking and Chingkiang, both on the Yangtse river, between Kinkiang and Shanghai. At Chingkiang is one of the best informed unions to be found in any part of the mission field, and the leader of this most enthusiastic work is Miss Mary Robinson, of the Methodist mission, who is a deeply consecrated Christian woman, baptized into the white-ribbon spirit. Mrs. Wan is the president of this union, and it would have done the hearts of our workers untold good to have witnessed how capable she and the president of Nanking, Mrs. Whan have become in conducting meetings in the correct parliamentary method, as well as in the true spirit of the W. C. T. U.

Returning through Shanghai we held a farewell meeting there, and then proceeded northward by sea to Tien-Tsin. Our union at this place had been permitted to lapse, but was reorganized as the result of our visit. Dr. Rachel Beun gave pledge to see the work carried forward, and she will be helped in so doing by Mrs. Verity, Miss Roberts, Mrs. Stanley and her daughters, and many others, we hope. Mr. and Mrs. Stanley are most enthusiastic temperance workers, and conduct a gospel temperance hall, in which our large public meeting was held. Dr. Rachel Beun was identified with our white ribbon host before going out to the mission field.

From Tien-Tsin we retraced our steps as far as Chefoo, where we rested a few days with friends of the China Inland mission, at their sanitarium previous to sailing to Japan via Corea. We were too weary to attempt to organize a work at Chefoo, as it would have involved considerable labor on our part to find and indoctrinate leaders. But we rested, held a meeting with the English girls and boys of the large boarding school located here, and conducted several Bible readings and informal meetings, sailing from there, May 18, for Japan.

WHITE-RIBBON GLEAMS AT CHAUTAUQUA.

Dear Union Signal:—It would be useless for me to endeavor to give to The Union Signal readers even a faint reflection of the Chautauqua enthusiasm. To get it one must come herself to this blessed center of good influences; tread these well-worn paths beneath the old elms and maples; stroll along the shore of the shimmering lake and find stimulus and food for body, mind and soul in the rich program prepared for each hour in the day.

Having done this is not enough, however. She must get within the confines of the surging crowd of happy humanity on the great opening night; gaze upon a vast audience whose waving handkerchiefs is a never-to-be forgotten sight—the stirring Chautauqua salute; hear the anniversary orations; listen to the incomparable Chautauqua "yell"; feast her eyes on the fairy effects of an "Old First Night" illumination, and then she will have fully caught the Chautauqua inspiration and a conception of the breadth of the "Chautauqua idea." Knowledge and spirituality, purity, pleasure and social harmony are the ideal combination wrought out upon the shores of this gentle inland lake. No wonder Bishop Thoburn had cause to say that Chautauqua represented his idea of what the world will be when everybody is converted!

To a white-ribboner the atmosphere of this memorable place is ozone and inspiration, whether she be an "old Chautauquan," as she is very likely to claim with pride, or sees for the first time the "only original" of the numerous namesake-summer schools which, following out the "idea," are scattered far and wide. To her, there is the ever-present thought: This is the birthplace of the W. C. T. U. Beneath these wide-branched trees, the great movement was conceived which afterwards crystallized into the most powerful working force against evil, within or without the church.

Seeking Mrs. Emily Huntington Miller, whose connection with the projection of our organization is so well known, I asked her to indicate the spot whereon she and Mrs. Jennie Fowler Willing discussed the formation of the woman's organized movement against the saloon.

"That I cannot tell you exactly," she smilingly replied, "so many changes have been made. We used to go to a raspberry patch every day, and (with a glance towards the southwest) it was in that direction." Cottages are now thickly clustering in what were open spaces of the old Chautauqua, for the progress of the place has kept pace with the passage of the years, and the old landmarks have vanished.

The Chautauqua white-ribboner of to-day has at her disposal the cozy headquarters provided in the handsome and convenient Kellogg Hall. This year Miss Folsom has charge, and is present in the room from three to five o'clock to receive visitors, the room being open all day. A carved wooden shield on the outside wall beside the entrance bears the motto, "For God and Home and Native Land," and the modest sign above calls the stranger's attention to the fact that this is the W. C. T. U. room.

The furnishings within are new and attractive. Tables are covered with temperance pamphlets and leaflets and recent copies of THE UNION SIGNAL and Young Women. (N. B.—A good work for some neighborly W. C. T. U. literature committee would be the placing of the two summer months' files of our publications for reference in this room.) Books are open for registry, both of W. C. T. U. visiting members and the Y's. The number who have enrolled their names and addresses was greatly increased after the first meeting, held August 4.

The little room was packed to overflowing on this occasion, many being unable to get within the doorway, a fact which certainly testified that the gathering filled a "long felt want." Mrs. Watts, the mover in the arrangements, presided. A devotional service was held. Miss Solomons, a native South African, daughter of an English missionary, from Wellington, Cape Town, gave in a graphic and interesting way some account of the W. C. T. U. work of that colony. She told of the first and only idea which was theirs in regard to temperance work—holding meetings and getting people to sign the pledge—and of their surprise to learn from Mrs. Andrew and Dr. Bushnell, on their visit, of the forty departments of work, some of which were at once adopted, and an account of whose work she gave. She paid warm tribute to the work of Miss Alice Palmer; to that of Mrs. Andrew Murray, Colonial superintendent of social purity, and the devotion of the native W. C. T. U. women, who often walk fifty miles, fording rivers, to attend meetings. Their special difficulty is in reaching Christian wine farmers and merchants and the native women who crowd the canteens. Miss Solomons is Colonial press and literature superintendent. At the close of the meeting an informal reception was held.

Noon prayer-meetings were commenced at the room last Monday, to continue to the close of the season. Other gatherings are announced, and the headquarters chronicle will display more than the usual degree of activity and interest this year.

The "Temperance Work of To-day" is the general topic under which temperance is discussed at the Woman's Club under the direction of Mrs. Miller. The subdivisions of the subject are "Obstacles to Success,—1, In the School; 2, In the Home; 3, In the community." Mrs. Margaret A. Watts, of Louisville, Ky., well known in connection with the police matron department of the National W. C. T. U., gave a timely and thoughtful paper at the first discussion, which was published in full in the Chautauqua Assembly Herald. She briefly reviewed the evolution of temperance work and then pointed out with clear logic and well supported statements, the important connection of the W. C. T. U. with the church, good government and social economy. Her closing thoughts were: "We are now near the close of the second decade. The future work will not be so much of reformation and transformation as it will be that of formation. It will be that of gathering together the lines that have run diagonal and triangular over the vast field about us; the summing up of the forces which have been expanded; the crystallizing of the good in public sentiment, so that judicious laws may be made to govern the criminal classes; the combining of variety in unity: the sorting out and placing to themselves the best thoughts to be used in the revision of the future."

The Outlook (girls) Club is again in charge of Miss Mary H. Mather, of Wilmington, Del. Miss Mather is a white-ribboner well known to the sisterhood by her writings on health meetings, and her many unique social temperance entertainments. Her peculiar inventive genius, and sterling Christian gifts find ample opportunity in this summer gathering of two hundred and forty girls from everywhere, who carry home with them higher, broader, yet practical and work-a-day ideas for home and philanthropic uses as a result of their connection with the club. Many a gray-haired "girl" finds opportunity to slip into an unoccupied chair (if there be one) during the well-conducted and varied meetings. The club is formed of circles of ten or more who choose as a "patron saint," some woman known for her living or writing and their motto from her works. The impress of the white ribbon is upon these girls, of whose "Temperance Day" I hope to give you some account in my next letter.

EQUAL SUFFRAGE AMONG SOUTH DAKOTA POPULISTS.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—I am sure your readers will enjoy the report of the adoption of "the equal suffrage resolution" by the recent Populist convention at Mitchell, South Dakota.

At the request of our state president, Mrs. Emma Cranmer, of Aberdeen, I took the early train the morning of the convention to appear before the committee on "platform" to ask for our people, that they as a party declare against resubmission. I went before them with a heart big with hope and was allowed to speak for our cause. Only one lonely man voted adversely, and as it was so near the dinner hour some of our ladies charitably remarked they knew he was hungry.

The resolution offered by the W. C. T. U. was tabled, the committee adopting one favoring the nationalization of the liquor traffic beginning with state control, under our present constitution without profit to the state. Nothing but prohibition will ever satisfy the mother-heart of the nation.

The Populists consider their position under our present constitution is against resubmission; and "without profit to the state," will place the traffic in the hands of a hired person who shall alone keep it for medicinal purposes, thus annihilating the troublesome drugstore trade.

Women and thousands of our men believe the best thing to do is to hold on to constitutional prohibition, and no political party will find it an easy matter to rob us of our legacy given five years ago at the ballot-box by our grand majority.

Feeling disheartened and sore of our failure to secure the support of this large and growing party in our state, we called to our council Attorney Mouser, of Hitchcock, one of South Dakota's true-hearted Prohibitionists and equal suffragists, and submitted to him a resolution asking that as a party the Populists would express themselves in favor of extending the right of franchise to the women of the state.

In reply he said: "If we introduce this in the committee it will only be tabled. If you will stay over another day, I will in to-morrow's forenoon session spring this resolution in open convention, and ask the privilege of your speaking in its favor."

About the middle of the next forenoon he gained the floor and introduced his resolution. After quite a determined opposition on the part of a few antis, permission was given me to speak as I would on this important question.

I came to the front of the platform and began. When I finished my argument immediately a large number of delegates were upon their feet to move the adoption of the resolution. Not a delegate opposed; among those speaking in favor was a Catholic priest. Out of 561 delegates only a few "nays" were heard when the vote was taken.

The wildest scene followed. Delegates sprang upon the benches, hats went into the air. Those who could not find their hats waved their handkerchiefs. Cheer after cheer was given. Amid the general rejoicing the chairman read a telegram from Kansas that the Populists had by a large majority adopted an equal suffrage resolution. Again cheers rent the air, and for a half hour the convention was turned over to congratulations. Delegates left their delegations to shake hands and rejoice with the women upon the platform. It was a happy moment for us. We could almost begin to figure in our minds where we belonged in this free country. "The better day is coming."

The sight was a glorious one, never to be forgotten by those present. Tears rolled down the faces of strong men.

We realized as never before that we shall not have prohibition until woman is free; we felt with Victor Hugo, as he wrote upon his dying bed, "For woman is liberty, and liberty is woman." As women, as never before, we must work for our freedom.

"The King's business requires haste." Let us up and sanctify ourselves for this great work of our enfranchisement. Let us go up and possess the land, shouting victory through our God.

A GREAT LOCAL OPTION VICTORY IN NORWAY.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—The Norwegian temperance people are far from satisfied with the Gothenburg license system. They consider it as an evil which ought to be destroyed as soon as possible, and this whole system will therefore soon be overthrown.

The Norwegian legislature (Odelsthinget) has just adopted a local option bill for Norway. This is a great victory for temperance. According to this new law, no "Samlag" (dispensary) for the sale of intoxicating drinks can be organized under the Gothenburg system before a majority of the inhabitants (men and women) over twenty-five years of age have voted "yes." And if a majority of such women and men in a community vote against the dispensaries there can be no sale of intoxicating drinks in that place for five years.

This local prohibition is only a stepping-stone to national prohibition. Let temperance people who believe in the "Norwegian system," watch Norway for a few years, and they will be astonished to find how quickly the dispensaries will be driven away from the country, while prohibition, with all its blessings, will become an established fact from "Lindesnas" to "Nordkap."

Let Massachusetts take warning. Why should that state adopt a system which has been so conscientiously weighed in Norway and found wanting?

This writer shall be pleased to follow the development and workings of local option in Norway, and, if the editor should desire, he shall in due time inform the readers of THE UNION SIGNAL about the exodus of the dispensaries from a large part of the territory of that country.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

Let us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering; for he is faithful that promised.—Hebrews 10: 23.

From far-away India a gift of $100 has been received. The letter which accompanies it is as cheering as the money which is so greatly needed. We hear so much about the evil deeds of men, it is refreshing to read of lives consecrated for generations to the good of mankind. Miss Phillips resides at Balason, India. She writes: "I left America in 1878, when the W. C. T. U., was still in pinafores, and during my first Indian term seeing none of its literature, I knew very little of the growth of the organization. Since my return a year and a half ago some one, I think it was the Lord, led me to subscribe for THE UNION SIGNAL in hopes it would help me in my work for the natives. My interest in the organization, its leaders and its 'do-everything policy' has greatly increased, and though I am trying to do what I can for these people among whom I was born, I have a longing to take a hand in the grand work being done in the home-land. The ladies of our mission society have chosen May as the time for our annual thankoffering, and after thought and prayer on the subject, I think I have my Father's consent to send you $100 for the 'House Beautiful' which, by the way, I had the pleasure of visiting while at home on furlough. I am sure you will think I have abundant reason for making a thankoffering when I tell you the Lord has permitted us, as a family, to give one hundred and sixty-six years of service to India. This includes the time given by father, mother and brother and five sisters, and when added to the time of two brothers-in-law and one sister-in-law makes a total of two hundred and six years. A still further cause of thanksgiving is that not one in all our large family has ever been even a moderate drinker. I would like to have a tablet that should be a sort of family memorial, and would like it inscribed thus: 'Phillips. Oriffa, India, 1835.' Whether a recorded date shall ever be added to indicate the termination of our family's service in India must be left to the future. My sister-in-law, Mrs. D. L. Phillips, is just now acting president of the W. C. T. U. of India, in the absence of Mrs. Hauser."

We will, indeed, feel honored to have the name of the Phillips family recorded on the marble walls of Willard Hall; there could be no more fitting place for the record of such a worthy name and service.

That noble Quaker, Jane E. Weeden, next to the founder, is, we believe, the most deeply interested in the Temple of all white-ribboners, not excepting Frances E. Willard herself. She has again, in spite of her three score years and ten, taken the field in the interest of the Temple. Her watchword now is "A free Temple." Would that God would put it in the heart of every true white-ribboner to take this as her watchword for the next year and bend every energy in that direction. Miss Weeden has visited, July 9 to August 3, seven towns in Illinois—Chrisman, Newman, Ridge Farm, Murdock, Tuscola, Arcola, Mattoon. She raised during this time $90 for the Temple; $50 of this amount was for Baby Bands. Five letters from her lie before me (signed, "Thy friend for a free Temple"), in which she tells of the great kindness shown her in all but one town by the members of the W. C. T. U., how lovingly they entertained her, and some of the presidents of unions gave her a lift in their carriages occasionally as she went on her toilsome way. She writes: "All thou lackest could be made up in these or any other town by one good solicitor in every neighborhood in the United States. The people are better than we think or give them credit for. From my heart of hearts I thank them, and bespeak for my self-imposed fellow-laborer the kind attention of all members of the W. C. T. U. among whom the spirit of God may call her to work."

Mrs. Julia A. McCool Martin, New Providence, Ia., sends a check for $50, which completes the payment of $100 for the name of her former husband, Thomas W. McCool, on the Iowa memoriam tablet. Mr. McCool was a stanch temperance man, his name is worthy of a place on the panels of Willard Hall. Five dollars is sent by Mr. Edward Averill, Dorr, Mich. Part of this amount was found in the purse of his wife after her decease; she was a devoted white-ribboner and deeply interested in the Temple. Mrs. Emeline Hathaway, Grant Park, Ill., sends $1.71. She says it was found in the mite-box of her niece, Mary Carnell, after her death, whom, Mrs. Hathaway writes, was deeply interested in the Temple and always saved her pennies to help pay for it. Mrs. Maria Coulson, Urbana, O., sends $5, which was found in her daughter's, Carrie Coulson, pocketbook after her death. The stricken mother says: "I feel that this money can only be used for a consecrated purpose, so send it to the Temple, hoping it will help to keep the torch of human liberty lighted for the world through the redemption of man from the power of evil habit and of women and children from the consequences of the drink traffic."

All persons sending $1 to the Temple will receive the beautiful Columbian souvenir. Any individual who fills a mite-box during 1894 will receive a solid silver Temple souvenir teaspoon. This, however, does not apply to persons filling boxes for unions; they receive the Columbian souvenir. All money orders and checks should be made out in the name of William D. Preston, and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara G. Johnson, the Temple Chicago, Ill.

GROWING OF A SOUL.

Hear ye this parable: A man
Did plant a garden. Vine and tree
Alike, in course of time, began
To put forth fair and pleasantly.
The rains of heaven, the persuading sun,
Came down alike on each and every one.

Yet some trees willful grew, and some
Strong vines grew gaily in the sun,
With gaudy leaves, that ever come
To naught. And yet, each flaunting one
Did flourish on triumphantly and glow
Like sunset clouds in all their moving show.

But lo! the harvest found them not;
The soul had perished from them. Mold
And muck and leaf lay there to rot,
And furnished nourishment untold
To patient tree and lowly creeping vine
That grew as grew the husbandman's design.

Hear then, this lesson, hear and heed:
I say that chaff shall perish; say
Man's soul is like unto a seed,
To grow into the judgment day.
It grows and grows if he will have it grow;
It perishes if he must have it so.

MARY DRAKE'S TEMPERANCE BOWER.

BY FLORENCE HIGGINSON.

"Confound this strike, it's just my luck," was the not very gentle expostulation of John Drake, as he threw the lines to his hired man upon his return from town.

"Why, what is it now, John?" asked his modest little wife.

"Why, this miserable strike prevents my getting the beer that the harvesters will expect when they come on Thursday, and I shall not be able to get half the work out of them now that I should," and John sat down on a porch chair in not a happy mood.

Mary Drake said not a word; she could not sympathize with him, and she dared not express her own satisfaction. She had, three years before, tried to urge him not to provide the beer, as was his custom; but his outburst of reprimand wounded her sensitive nature, and taught her that she must wield her influence—strategically.

John Drake was one of the most prosperous farmers out of the little city of P., in southern Illinois. His large, white farmhouse and red barns were situated on a little knoll, and could be seen for miles around. He was known as a dominant man, but every one admired his thrift and the business ability he manifested in the management of his farm.

Five years before his first wife had died and the following summer he had married Mary Mandell, the district school teacher, thinking he saw in her just the guide his motherless children needed. She was an orphan with no especial ties, and was rather won by the rugged virtues of Mr. Drake. She was a woman of twenty-nine years, and thought there must be much to admire under John's plain exterior. He kept his four children, two girls—nearly grown now—and twin boys, younger, at school in the city of P., for John said he should give his children the advantages he had learned in the saddest way to value—by the want of them.

Mary could not comfort him for the loss of the beer, but she commenced to revolve in her mind some plan for satisfying the thirst of the harvesters. She thought long and late that night. The next morning she said: "John, I will serve hot coffee to the men all day to-morrow, if you like, and think they may enjoy it."

"All right," said Mr. Drake, "if you want to, but I doubt their caring much for it."

After he had gone to the field she called the girls in and revealed her plan. They were very fond of her, and always in sympathy with anything she wanted to undertake, and ordering their driving horse which Mr. Drake called "the ladies' pony," they hurriedly dressed and were soon on their way to town to purchase an oil stove. They were back by dinner time and all the afternoon were busy, with the help of the boys, gathering daisies and small branches with which to make a bower under a great oak tree at the edge of the field.

"We will put our daisies in water over night," said Mary, "that they may be fresh to-morrow, for we must have a great deal of the 'white ribbon' color, you know, for just between ourselves this is a temperance booth that we are enabled to set up here, thanks to the strike."

It was a very busy day, and between directing and helping in the house and the new bower, she was very tired that night; but her heart was most light that she at last had an opportunity to carry out some plan to supplant the beer.

The next morning she was up bright and early; after seeing that things were well in progress for dinner she went to the field, and with the children's help served coffee until eleven o'clock, carrying it to the mowers boiling hot from the little stove. The cream was delicious as only country cream can be, and the men seemed wholly satisfied. They had a sumptuous dinner in the farmhouse dining-room at noon, and at half-past one Mary was at her post again out of doors ready to serve coffee. She was delighted to hear one of the men say, "Well, I believe this is the best thing I ever drank in a harvest field; it may be because it's hot."

"I believe so, too," responded another, "it is kinder stayin' to a man's stomach."

That night as they were filing out from supper, a small man who was known to love his beer, said: "Mrs. Drake, I think that's the best coffee I ever tasted. It keeps a fellow satisfied, same's food."

"We shall be anxious for harvest next year, so that we can have some more of Mrs. Drake's good coffee," chimed in "Big Dick," the great royster of the neighborhood, and center of every fight.

Mary smiled a quiet "thank you" and "good-night," but she felt a tumult of joy that her coffee booth had given such satisfaction. The children had retired and Mr. and Mrs. Drake were sitting on the porch after their busy day enjoying the quiet country scene, bathed in moonlight, and the gratification of a successful day for the mowing.

Mr. Drake said, "Mary, I never thought daisies were pretty until to-day. They have been such a pest to me; but in your bower they looked very different. I think I'll let that pesky daisy field alone. The men did more work to-day than ever before in one day. I wonder if your coffee and cream don't keep them kinder built up like, so that they can keep goin' steady? I think I'll give the beer a go-by next year an' sorter test the two."

And he did, and never again furnished beer in haying or harvest time. And when the next election day came round he said to Mary, "I can't see any sort o' good these saloons are doing. I think I'll test your vote, wife, as well as your coffee."

A LOSS OF POWER.

BY ESTELLE MENDELL AMORY.

When we hear women complain that their "union isn't more active," that they themselves are "doing nothing in the cause," that "there doesn't seem to be anything that they can do," we always wonder if they are conscientiously faithful in the use of one means of doing good, always within their reach, viz., the wearing of the white ribbon.

Perhaps you think this too simple a thing to command the care and thought necessary, in order to always have it on. And possibly, you reason, that the people in your community know you are a member, so what's the use? All of which shows that you do not know the wonderful power there is in that tiny bow of white. Scarcely a day passes that some sweet or touching incident of its value to lonely, suffering humanity does not come to me.

Recently a mother told me that her daughter, away from home at school, wrote that she "wasn't quite so lonesome now, for she sat beside a dear old Quaker lady in church last Sunday, who wore a white ribbon," and she added, "if I should need a friend I should go to her quicker than to a minister." The matron, too, she learned by seeing her white ribbon, had once had charge of a Band of Hope, and forthwith an endearing bond was formed. The mother of this young daughter, by the way, has always been a devout white-ribboner. We happen to know that there is no union at the town where this school is, but these two true women do not forget their privilege—and their duty (?) to wear the sacred emblem of their principles. How many times have we known of its saving a young man away from home, and at a point "where two roads met." The passing of some faithful sister with her white ribbon has been the restraining and constraining power that has guided his uncertain feet into the right path.

At this date there is scarcely a land or an individual that does not know the beautiful significance of our simple emblem. To all it speaks of purity, of peace and the protection of the home. Hence, wherever we wear it, it never fails to silently rebuke sin and point to the path of safety.

A poor washerwoman, not esteemed very bright, is still bright enough to always wear her ribbon, not at the union alone, but as she goes from place to place to wash and scrub.

"It sbeaks vor me ev'ry dime," she explained in her broken English, "an' de beeples, dey knows I dake no vine nor peer, an' so dey doan ask me, an' somedimes dey git 'shamed an' doan drink vhere I bees. Oh, I dells you it can talk."

I have often thought that this poor, ignorant sister accomplished more for the cause by this conscientious faithfulness than many of her sisters, better equipped mentally, and more conversant with the work, yet careless about their badge.

Some never wear the emblem, save at conventions where it is "popular," and where it will bring them some special benefits. Such persons should certainly never be sent as delegates, unless it is with the charitable hope that they may receive a fresh baptism of Crusade fire.

Others always try to wear their badge at the union meetings, but never elsewhere. These sisters, too, need to be reminded of its power to bless, in the home, on the street, at the church, the lecture or concert, in fact, any and everywhere.

You may wonder, what is the good of wearing it on your morning work dress. But it will, for one thing, impress your children and family with its sacredness to you. Again, you have morning callers on various errands to whom it will speak with unusual emphasis, from the very fact that you wear it on your everyday gown.

But "they get soiled so soon," do you urge?

Well, buy several yards of ribbon at a time, or a bolt—it costs little compared with the good it may do—and have a ribbon tied on every dress you wear—every one—this is the only safe and convenient way.

But realizing all this, do we not see the loss of power to each and every member of this noble army, who for any cause fails to use this means of strength and comfort to others? Bless God, this is something we all may do, the weakest and humblest of us, and at all times, even when things are dark and hard, with strikes and financial crises.

SAVINGS BANKS.

BY GEORGE MAY POWELL.

The importance of savings banks to women can hardly be overestimated; and the openings for women to find employment are among the glories of our time. As helps to rise in life, this employment and these banks are like the wings of a bird. The good that many women should get from the bank is never realized because they never begin to use it.

The writer knows a case of a poor young woman who was urged to begin a savings account. She thought her income too small to bear any subtraction. A friend opened an account in her name with five dollars as his investment in the experiment. In less than four years she had over five hundred dollars in that bank, all of which, except the five dollars, she put there herself.

A mechanic now working for us says that a former employer induced him one week to take only two dollars of the twelve he had earned, in cash, and the remainder in the form of a savings bank book with ten dollars to his credit. Four years later that young man had twelve hundred in deposit. This he found of use for his wedding outfit, furniture, etc.

The possession of a few hundred is often the key to an education, or to owning a home, or to becoming an employer instead of an employé. When one earns more than he spends he is a capitalist. Capitalists should remember that no one with even a small sum in savings is likely to throw bombs.

Postal savings banks should be mighty safety-valves for the country; and savings banks in the public schools are becoming stepping-stones to many of the good ends involved in this question.

Philadelphia, Pa.

The great and real heresy of this heresy-seeking epoch is not a divergence from the formulated systems, but a non-recognition of the "Comforter." The authority of synods, councils and assemblies has been set up in the place of the Indwelling Spirit. Such a rejection of the "Guide into all truth" precludes "forgiveness" while it continues, because the question is one of condition not of remission. To forgive is not a matter of debit and credit, and does not imply an escape from natural consequences; but it is rather a substitution of the Christ-mind for that of the flesh. The overcoming energy of the divine influx frees from the dominion of sin, and the dismission of penalty comes as a normal result. The seed of spirit brings forth a harvest of its own kind.—Henry Wood.

The liquor traffic is the awful heritage of a less kind and less enlightened past. For its existence in this gentler age, we are all more or less responsible. Let us combine to put it away, "with malice toward none and charity for all."—Frances E. Willard.

TO A SAD LITTLE GIRL.

You say you are ugly, and you are afraid
That nobody loves you, sad little maid;
For people whisper, with lip acurl,
As you pass by: "What an ugly girl!"
Ah, well, dear, if you mope and fret,
Your ugly face will be uglier yet.

Let me tell you the secret without delay
Of growing beautiful day by day;
'Tis a secret old as the world is old.
But worth in itself a mine of gold:
Beauty of soul is beauty of face,
For inward sweetness makes outward grace.

There is the secret, simple and true;
Now prove what its wisdom can do for you.
Fill up your heart with thoughts most sweet,
Bidding all others at once retreat,
And these sweet thoughts will grow like seeds,
And bloom into beautiful words and deeds.

And soon, very soon they will leave their trace
Of loveliness on your ugly face;
The lines will be softer on cheek and brow,
Bright smiles will shine where tears are now,
Your eyes will sparkle, and some blest power
Will make you lovelier every hour.

Just try it, my dear; begin to-day
To do kind things in the kindest way—
To kindly think and to kindly speak,
To be sweet-tempered, gentle and meek.
Then never again shall you need be afraid
That nobody loves you, sad little maid.
Opinions will change with a pleasant whirl,
And all will think: "What a charming girl!"

BILLY.

The clerk at the general delivery window of a city post-office is usually a pretty busy individual, but on rare occasions he has his moments of leisure. It was at such a time, one summer afternoon, when active business seemed entirely suspended, that the young man who presided over the general delivery was startled out of a comfortable doze by the sound of a piping voice issuing from some invisible quarter.

"Say, mister," said a voice, "is der a letter for me?"

The clerk stared out across his little corner, but failed to see the owner of the voice. Then he poked his head half-way out of the narrow window, and, glancing down, saw a little mite of a ragged fellow with a bootblack's kit swung around his shoulder.

"A letter for you?" he echoed, with a smile. "Don't know. What's your name?"

"Billy."

"Bill ——, what else?"

The little fellow shifted from one foot to the other, but the clear blue eyes looked steadily at the clerk.

"Not'in' else," he said. "Jes' Billy."

"I guess not," the clerk replied. "Were you expecting a letter?"

"Yes, sir."

There was an expression of faith in his errand in the little fellow's face, and the clerk racked his brain for a simple explanation to offer him.

"Mebbe," said the boy, "if I told yer why I was a-lookin' for a letter, yo' cu'd find it for me."

"Perhaps I could," said the clerk.

"It won't do any harm to try, anyway."

The little fellow set his bootblack's kit down on the floor.

"It was like dis," he said. "Last Sunday mornin' I was at d' mission Sunday-school up town, an' on my way back I walked wid Miss Rogers. You know her?"

"No," replied the clerk still smiling.

"You orter. She's d' teacher uv our class. She wuz a-tellin' me erbout d' lesson, an' when I left her by her house I jes knowed it all. Well, I walked on down d' street, an' pretty soon I seen an old gentleman in front uv me dropped a pocketbook, when I tuk it up an' tuk it over t' the alley where I live. I seen it was full of money but I never touched none uv it. Long erbout night time I begun t' think of the Sunday-school lesson an' the more I thought uv it the more I got worried. D' nex' mornin' I put on my good clothes ag'in, an' I wuz a-goin' t' take d' pocketbook up t' Miss Rogers. I knowed she'd feel bad's I did, an' so I thought I'd send the money back on my own accord. D' wuz some cards 'n' things in it, tellin' d' name o' d' man what dropped it, an' I writ a letter to him 'splainin' how I wuz sorry I'd kept it, an' signed my name —jes' Billy. Den I wrapped it up and sent it to him by mail."

The clerk had ceased smiling by this time, and he looked into the boy's sober face as he asked:

"Did you tell the man where to reply to your letter?"

"Nusser; but I said I'd come here an' ask to see if d' pocketbook got to him, da's all."

"I see," replied the clerk. "If you'll wait a minute, I'll see if I can find anything."

Without any hope of success he went over to the "B" box, and ran quickly over the letters it contained. In the center of the pack he found one addressed:

"BILLY.
To be called for."

With a bright face he hurried back to the window, and handed the missive to the bootblack.

"Here it is," he said, "this must be for you."

Billy took the letter, turned it over once or twice, and then handed it back:

"Read it for me," he said, "I ain't much on makin' out writin'."

The clerk opened the envelope and extracted the contents. In a business hand was written a kindly letter to "My honest little Billy," and the writer asked that the boy call to see him at an address which he gave. The letter closed with the familiar words that "honesty was the best policy, always; but I feel that in this case a reward of another sort is called for." The letter referred to a neatly folded greenback which was enclosed.

The clerk read the letter to Billy, and then handed it to him with the enclosure.

"Go to Miss Rogers," he said, "and tell her the whole story. She will advise you what to do."

Little Billy's eyes sparkled as he thanked the clerk. Then he swung his kit over his shoulder again, and promising to return to explain the rest of the adventure, he trudged into the street.

It was a week later when he came back to see the clerk. His clothes were new and fitted him somewhat better than his old ones, and the bootblack kit was not visible. He reached up and shook hands with his friend as he said, "I ain't shinin' shoes no more. D' gentleman dat writ me dat letter hez give me a place in his office, an' I'm a going to night school now."

He said more than this, and the two had a chat during the first lull in business. But we have told enough of little Billy's story to show how true—always true—is that story about honesty is the best policy. And even if there had been no letter for Billy the policy would have been the same.—Selected.

THE SENATE PAGES.

Of the one hundred and ten appointments under the sergeant-at-arms of the United States Senate, those of the pages only can be said to be non-political.

No boy can be appointed a page of the Senate who is not twelve years of age; and no boy can continue as a page who is sixteen years of age at the beginning of a session of Congress. It is a lucrative position, and few of the boys are not sorry when their term is ended.

Usually, four of the boys who are graduated from the page's position at the beginning of a session are appointed riding pages. Their selection depends on their records for efficiency and faithfulness.

The page on the floor of the Senate draws two dollars and fifty cents a day during the session of Congress.

The riding page receives two dollars and fifty cents a day the year round, and has a horse to ride. His duties keep him out of doors a great part of the time, carrying messages between the capitol and the departments. The position is considered more desirable than that of a page.

Speaking of their work, the Washington Star says: "The page's life is a pleasant one. He must be on duty at nine o'clock each morning, but the serious business of the day does not begin until noon, when the Senate meets. Before that time he arranges the files of the Congressional Record and the bills and reports on the desks of the Senators who have been assigned to him.

"There are sixteen pages and eighty-eight Senators, so none of the pages have very much to do. The morning hours are not all working hours. There is a gymnasium in the basement of the capitol, furnished especially for their use. They exercise their arms and their chests there every morning; their legs get plenty of exercise through the day."—Selected.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—It was a warm summer day in the Cozy Corner, and nearly all the boys and girls were off in the woods, at the seashore or on the cool farms. I took up pencil and paper for a little talk with you, and as I sat in my highbacked chair, after reading over a batch of Cozy Corner letters, I closed my eyes for a moment—"Hello," said a soft voice in my ear, and I saw a boy, his hair in curls, dressed in a summer blouse and linen trousers. "Hello, Aunt Jane, the Cozy Corner poets haven't all gone off to the woods, and I want to recite to you a little piece I wrote," and before I could utter a word he had commenced:

I'm a Cozy Corner cousin,
Of bright years I've had a dozen,
I'm a member of the L. T. L., too;
I've two big sisters and one brother,
A loving father and dear mother,
We all of us are temperance through and through.

THE UNION SIGNAL, 'course we take it,
Our subscription, 'thout a break, it
Has run on since the paper was begun.
Mother, she's an old Crusader
From the whisky war; that's made her
Honored and beloved by every one.

Father's all for prohibition,
Says a vote's a high commission
To use against the awful power of drink.
We've prohibition in our city,
And it is a dreadful pity
Not to have it everywhere, we think.

But just wait till I'm grown up,
Then I'll help to build a throne up,
And on it prohibition shall have place.
Peace and plenty will sustain it
And our principles maintain it,
King Alcohol won't dare to show his face!

A bow and a smile, and suddenly my little visitor had disappeared. Rubbing my eyes, I saw only the pictured walls of my room, and found I had been napping. But wasn't that a pleasant summer dream?

NEPHEWS AND NIECES.

I am a little girl eleven years old. I am a temperance girl, but have never signed any pledge, as there is no L. T. L. in this place. I would like to become a member of the L. T. L., also to be admitted to the Cozy Corner.

Rose Hill, Ill. MONA E. MELTON.

You can become a "member at large" of the L. T. L., little niece, by sending your name to Miss Margaret Wintringer, Austin, Ill., who is state superintendent of the L. T. L. By enclosing a stamp, you will receive a letter and a pledge from her. You are already enrolled in Cozy Corner Circle.

If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily, and follow me.—Luke 9:23.

SELF-DENIAL WEEK.

In no way has the Woman's Christian Temperance Union proved its vitality more fully than by its plasticity of form and the readiness with which it has incorporated into itself new methods, from whatever source.

Its growth has been always the free growth of the great tree, to which no two seasons bring exactly the same foliage; which preserves the same general form under countless varieties of unfoldment.

Self-Denial Week is an addendum of the past few years, and came originally from that source, whence has sprung so much for the uplift of humanity—the Salvation Army. In that army it is as regular an institution as is Christmas, and is planned for with an enthusiasm which proves that the Salvationists belong more fully than any other people to that class whom the Lord especially "loves," viz., "the hilarious giver." (We refer to the Greek New Testament for our authority in this translation.)

What the army accomplishes through means of its Self-Denial Week is almost incredible when one considers the financial status of the masses which make up its membership. It is the widow's mite brought down to the nineteenth century, and multiplying itself into a total magnificent alike in magnitude, enthusiasm and result.

In the Woman's Christian Temperance Union the results have not, as yet, been so apparent. Possibly because we have not yet become fully accustomed to the week as a part of our routine year; possibly, also, because we have not learned the secret of giving to the degree and with the abandon of the Army.

Until this year Self-Denial Week has been a movable feast with us; but at the last World's Convention it was decided that it should, henceforth, begin on September 22, the birthday of Mary Clement Leavitt, and close on September 28, Miss Willard's birthday, which should henceforth be known as Membership Day. The appropriateness of selecting the birthday of our first round-the-world missionary as an inaugural to Self-Denial Week, will be apparent to all who recall the heroic self-denial of those seven years in which she "wove the ribbon round the world"; while the desirability of having a Membership Day apart from Crusade Day has long been felt, since the latter falls so near to Christmas as to make the necessary canvassing for new members practically impossible.

But, and here we seem to stand with our ear to a great telephone through which comes a multitude of ejaculations: "How can one deny ones self any more this year, when every breath is a self-denial!" "I am doing without so much already that it is almost beyond the compass of thought how I can do without more." "My children have needs, actual needs, which I cannot hope to meet. I dare not divert one dollar from that sacred channel." "I am facing the coming winter with a dismay of soul which I do not know how to put into words. When I think of the thousands of unemployed who must suffer, I feel that all my self-denial must be for them." "Crops have failed; no money anywhere." "Out of work; no chance of employment"; and on the chorus swells till it seems a universal miserere.

We know, sisters; we both know and feel. How fully we, who are at the center, feel for the great circumference you can never know unless you, too, take your place here and listen to needs, despairs and longings with a heart aching to help all, and hands so powerless to reach more than a very few.

Not for the world would we have Self-Denial Week mean an added burden upon the already overburdened. Not for the world would we have it mean a transforming of help from the point where help is most manifestly first due.

But there are white-ribboners to whom self-denial would, in no sense, mean suffering. There are white-ribbon homes abounding in luxuries. There are other homes where the broadest comfort is on every hand, where even the "hard times" means only the giving up of some unnecessary luxury. To these homes, to these white-ribboners, we especially appeal. By as much as many of your sisters have reduced self-denial to the minimum in their daily living, by just so much is it your duty and privilege to deny yourselves doubly this year that their lack may be made up from your abundance.

If you could read the letters which come to us from readers of THE UNION SIGNAL who love it with all their hearts, but who feel that they must give it up for lack of money to pay for it, you would gladly find some way to start a Self-Denial Literature Fund, which should put not THE UNION SIGNAL alone, but many of our other publications into homes and towns where they would prove veritable centers of life and light.

There are so many things one can do without if only one is moved thereto by the consecrating purpose of a mighty love. Even the poorest of us can almost always find some little branch to lop off, though it be but a car-fare saved. Think what an aggregation of nickels would come from each one of our great constituency by such a method.

Then why not induce people of wealth or well-known benevolence outside our ranks to join in the keeping of this week? The Salvation Army by no means limits its work to its own membership. It scatters its appeals broadcast over the land. The membership of a wealthy Chicago church contributed over one hundred dollars to the Army last year by means of the self-denial of its members.

What better way of bringing a knowledge of our purpose, plans and scope before the Christian and philanthropic world than by just such an appeal? We should seek an entrée into the pulpits and prayer-meetings of our land during this week. We should present our work in its broadest, freest, fullest proportions. We should prove by the irresistible logic of facts that there is no real way for settling the difficulties of our land to-day until the saloon be overthrown; no broader charity than to stop the work of drunkard-making; no surer way of feeding the hungry and clothing the naked than the way marked out for us in our incomparable Magna Charta, the 146th Psalm, and elaborated in our platform and practice through twenty-one intervening years.

Bombard the churches and society at large with some of John G. Woolley's concentrated lightning of eloquence and logic, and verily there shall be an electrical display which shall open blind eyes and dazzle the universe.

The resources of Self-Denial Week are limitless. Let us avail ourselves of them as never before. Let the very desperation of the financial situation spur us to a vigor before undreamed of. When "the kingdom of heaven suffereth violence" the violent shall surely "take it by force."

MEMBERSHIP DAY.

The culmination of Self-Denial Week in Membership Day is a happy thought. Those who cannot give of money can give of time, and if the seed sowing of which we have spoken be carried on, there will surely be a harvesting of members which will gladden all our hearts when we come up to the great annual feast at Cleveland in November.

Seed sowing sounds easy and poetic, but crops mean prosy care ofttimes, and human crops must generally be "raised by hand," as it were.

"Agitate—agitate—agitate!" Ears are well-nigh weary with the repetition of the phrase, but none other is so near the secret of success.

It will be more than likely that many of the visits made in the interests of Membership Day will be only tentative, to be followed up by more outspoken effort later. After the good seed has lain quiet in the mind where it was dropped, a burst of W. C. T. U. sunshine on Membership Day—persistent shining made manifest in a concentrated effort to secure names and fees—will result in many cases in tender shoots of an awakened interest and purpose to join the ranks marching temperanceward. Be not discouraged; God is not mocked. Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. Is the application inapt?

Of the more exact modus operandi for conducting Membership Day, we will speak in a later issue. Let us but begin in faith and prayer, go forward with zeal and enthusiasm, and we shall surely see the "yet greater things" promised, in money, numbers and power.

A DEADLY PARALLEL.

The midsummer number of The Century has a debate between United States Senator Hoar, of Massachusetts, and Rev. Dr. Buckley, the redoubtable opponent of the enfranchisement of women. We have no disposition to comment upon the manner in which the subject is handled by the respective champions, but it occurs to us that it will be interesting to place some of the principal arguments side by side that our readers may judge for themselves concerning their relative value.

DR. BUCKLEY.	SENATOR HOAR.
With inconsiderable exceptions the common sense of the human race, as expressed in civil government, has confined its prerogatives to men.....	But in general the common sense of the human race has confined the prerogatives of government to a very few men, to monarchs, noblemen, aristocracies, oligarchies. We are at present addressing an audience who are agreed that what is largely "the common sense of the human race" is entirely mistaken in its opinion, as expressed in existing civil governments, or the civil governments of the past. So we surely need not occupy time or space in debating whether we should exclude women from a share in the government of the republic in which manhood suffrage is the law, because the common sense of the human race has agreed that nearly all mankind, whether masculine or feminine, should be excluded from a share in the government. Our question is, whether women should help in self-government, not whether, if it be true that most of mankind are born to obey, and a few are born to rule, it is better that the ruler should be of one sex or the other.....
Whether the suffrage shall be conferred upon any class of men or women cannot be decided exclusively upon the question o natural rights.....	In opposition to Dr. Buckley's statement that for women to substitute the habit of government by authority for the habit of influence by persuasion will destroy the sweet nature of womanhood itself—it seems to me we shall find the answer to this proposition by inquiring whether the function of voting bears such a proportion to the other influences that form and affect the character, that it will tinge and color the whole character and life, or whether it will take its own color and tinge from the general character of the person who exercises it....
There is a feminine as well as a masculine soul; a spiritual sex as well as a corporeal..... (We wonder when, where and how Dr. Buckley ascertained this "for a fact.")	Now, I affirm that in mankind in general the function of voting takes its hue and tincture from the general character of the person who exercises it, and that the general character of the person who exercises it is not changed by the temptations which attend the struggle for political power. Voting and politics, to most men, are but a small and insignificant portion of life. They do not change opinions, or control the character of the citizen, but they take their character from the character that he brings to them. The German

To invest her (woman) with the responsibility of voting will diminish the real power of woman in speech. At present she may say what she will; men hear, and without subjecting her words to too close a scrutiny, are influenced by her spirit. Require her to vote, identify her with a party, and in some instances she will grow timid; where she refuses to restrain herself she will become an impediment to party success, and will be ignored. When women oppose women their party conflicts will deprive them of that power by which they now leaven public sentiment.....

who has lived under the iron rule of the Cæsars, the Irishman who has lived as a peasant under the heel of the Englishman, the Englishman who has lived under the hooped Republicanism, by which the Englishman governs himself, and with that arrogant disregard for human right with which the Englishman deals with other nations—each, when he comes here, brings to his American citizenship the quality which he gained at home, and does not change it when he takes his share in our republicanism. It may be added, also, that the function of motherhood is a function of absolute authority, perhaps the most absolute that one human being exercises over another.....

No person desires to change the essential character of American womanhood. It is a character whose beauty, dignity, grace, sweetness and power come from causes with which the giving or denying to women of a share in the government of the state has nothing to do. It will not, in my judgment, be affected in the slightest degree for the worse if her vote shall be counted. On the other hand, when she shall be admitted to complete citizenship, these qualities of American womanhood will become more and more the qualities of American citizenship itself.

We feel it necessary to disabuse the minds of many who speak of Miss Willard's "resting." She receives from fifty to seventy-five letters per diem at Twilight Park, and works with stenographers from six to eight hours; the "rest" is from public speaking and the constant interviews, public and private, that characterize the life of a leader in these analytical days, unless he (or she) climbs a tree and draws it up after him. In a figure,

"Rest is not quitting the busy career,
Rest is the fitting of self to its sphere."

So said Goethe, and he was right.

The following is quoted from the report of the board of conference visitors to a prominent Biblical institute:

A wise ministry will qualify itself to meet each new phase of human activity. It has become apparent that the excitement over questions relating to labor and capital is not an evanescent agitation. The aroused masses are misled by ignorant agitators. Capitalists are also in need of enlightenment. The minister for to-day must be qualified to speak effectively on the whole economic situation. Your committee are of opinion that the theological school should prepare the young preacher to meet existing sociological needs. We respectfully suggest that steps be taken immediately, or as soon as practicable, to found in this institute a chair of social ethics.

Ministers such as these are very rarely radicals along any line of reform. They are indeed, pronounced and positive in their views and are often among the ranks of those whom the defenders of iniquitous systems call fanatics, but nevertheless they represent the more conservative element of society; they reach their conclusions cautiously. The words quoted, therefore, become of all the more weight as indicating the growing interest in the labor question and showing the growing conviction that it is not going to be settled by any of the old methods which have been tried so long in vain.

"The Spring Grove camp-meeting, near Middlebury, Vt., has been 'an institution' for twenty-five years, and has now been carried on by the state W. C. T. U. for two years, under the capable leadership of the president, Mrs. Ida H. Read. Our white-ribboners not only make the program and conduct the services throughout the ten days, but carry on the boarding department, store, receive all comers and goers, control the tents and cottages—in short, are business proprietors. Their success last year was such that this year they have a much larger attendance and the presence and help of several ministers and one presiding elder. The grounds are beautiful, a very temple of God seems the grove of white columned birch trees while the pines are the organ and the bright flowing spring the font. We shall never cease to be thankful for the spiritual uplift that came to us there on August 9, from the hour we alighted from the train to be welcomed by a long procession of 'home protection' men and women singing a welcome all through the halcyon hours of psalm and speech and prayer, until our train departed to the tune of 'God be with you till we meet again,' as the evening shadows fell. We were in pretty good condition, too, for I spoke three times and Anna twice."

So writes our chieftain from New York whither she and Miss Gordon went to meet Lady Henry Somerset and party, August 10.

It is reported in the New York Tribune that at the camp-meeting held by the National Temperance Society in Ocean Grove last week, our friend, John M. Stearns, stated that "in the National Temperance Society men and women stood on the same platform." In view of the fact that there has never been a woman on the board of management or in any official position (except once or twice, we believe, as vice-president, an office that is purely honorary), we think our brother must have referred to the literal fact that, even as he spoke, there were men and women around him on the same platform, and that the reporter broadened the significance of the remark with a zeal for the women's cause that was not according to knowledge.

Within a few days the statement has been made by the home secretary of the British government that before the end of the present session of Parliament a bill, which has already been carefully drawn, will be introduced in one of the two Houses, embodying the recommendation of the Parliamentary committee on the treatment of habitual drunkards. This bill contemplates giving power to local magistrates, upon adequate evidence, to consign inebriates to places of detention for as long a period as the magistrate may deem best. These places will be industrial homes prepared for the purpose at the expense of the government, where the inebriates shall have such opportunities of reform as they do not enjoy under the present system and shall in the meantime be self-supporting, while, best of all, perhaps, their families are set free from the hopeless bondage and misery of their presence. We have often urged state W. C. T. U's to take up this line of work and to secure from their respective state legislatures such laws as the British Parliament will soon enact, and we earnestly call their attention to this great subject again and urge upon them the value of a mode of effort which can but commend itself to the common sense of all good people.

How little the world knows the number of its benefactors. We learned from a white-ribboner a few days ago that a lady who would not on any account have her name mentioned, long ago lived in Lansing, Mich., and learning that the law made even an unborn child the property of its father, she determined to have it changed. For this purpose she went from house to house with a petition which she carried to the House of Representatives, and called every day of the session to see some member of it, always gently saying, "You must not grow weary, for I shall come regularly and I shall keep on getting names to the petition until a mother is made as much the possessor and guardian of her child as is its father." So gentle and persistent was this woman, that as some of the legislators declared "they passed the bill to be rid of her importunities." She then proceeded to the Senate, conducting her campaign on precisely the same principles, and when the bill was passed, she followed up the governor until he had affixed his signature. Nothing was said of this in the papers, and the women of Michigan do not know to this day, that they owe it to one woman's devotion that they own at least an "undivided half" of their own children. It is this personality, purpose and persistence that causes things to come to pass, and if one member in any one local union should resolve that its membership should double within the next six weeks, the feat would be accomplished. "Without haste, without rest," is the Divine method, and it must be the human method of success in everything worth doing.

We rejoice in the election of good Father Cleary to the presidency of the Catholic Total Abstinence Society, which has just held its twenty-fourth annual convention. He is faithful, intelligent, progressive, and his noble presence, clarion voice and brotherly words made a strong impression on the National W. C. T. U. Convention in Boston, where he appeared as a fraternal delegate in 1891. We are also greatly pleased that our white-ribbon sister, Mrs. Leonora Barry-Lake, of St. Louis, was made one of the vice-presidents, and her duties specially defined, thus: "To pay especial attention to the extension of women's and girl's societies and to prepare such literature, subject to the approval of the executive council, as will best advance the work." Mrs. Barry-Lake is one of our most eloquent women, and it is a pleasure to announce that she leads the fraternal delegates from the Catholic Total Abstinence Society, to the Cleveland W. C. T. U. Convention. The names of the other ladies are Mrs. M. A. Manning and Mrs. Philip Dempsey, of Cleveland. Some of the liquor papers are trying to make capital out of the failure of the convention to endorse the Polyglot Petition, but it should be remembered that this is consistent with the position taken from the first by the society which, to our regret, declared in its constitution for total abstinence as the sole issue involved in its propaganda. Archbishop Ireland preached the convention sermon, and was the leading spirit. Among the most noteworthy features of the convention was the equal participation of women with men in all of the deliberations.

And still they come, the opinions concerning the proper signature for women! "So many men (women), so many minds," was never better illustrated than in the variety of these opinions, each one of which is so well sustained. The majority seem to favor the dropping of the Miss when a woman reaches maturity, and the use of Madam for single women and Mrs. for married women, but we'll take the census when every one who cares to has spoken.

On Duty.

"Though I somewhat agree with the Quaker sister, yet if a title is necessary I sincerely hope we may have one consistent with the dignity of women in these days, and that the silly 'Miss,' the relic and reminder of the time of woman's subjection, may become a thing of the past as inapplicable to adult women. If our beloved Chieftain, the leader of the world's womanhood, would start the custom by rejecting 'Miss' and claiming the appropriate title, might the fashion not be established?"—M. E. Haviland, Lake View, N. J.

"I have often been tempted to write The Union Signal and ask how one should give her signature when writing to a stranger. I frequently write the 'Miss' in parenthesis. Yet it does not seem that one should have always to be making efforts to impress people that she is unmarried. But if I neglect this I am almost invariably dubbed 'Mrs.' I would be glad indeed if at least among ourselves, i. e., the W. C. T. U., there could be an understanding in this matter. Shall watch On Duty for something further."—E. Alice Comstock, Allendale, Mich.

"I quite agree with Rev. Sam Small that it should be an established custom for married ladies to prefix Mrs. to their name, and that all articles not signed thus are to be considered written by unmarried ladies. I think, too, that married women should be known by their own names, and not by those of their husbands. That women may not lose their identity after marriage, it would be well for all to retain their maiden name as a middle name. Then old friends can tell at once who one is. It ought to be unnecessary for one to explain who Mrs. John Jones 'was' by saying—like Samantha Allen—'she that was Submit Tukesberry.'"—Mrs. Julia Lester Bosworth, Kirksville, Mo.

"I always enjoy your column, but have no sympathy with those who are clamoring for a distinctive Miss or Mrs. in signatures. Why should a woman be obliged to advertise herself married or unmarried? I agree with your quotation. Master and Miss are for boys and girls. Mr. and Mrs. are for men and women. Miss is vulgar and pert for an adult woman. For years I have writhed under the present custom, and would that the good old English way of addressing all women of full age as 'Mrs.' (especially those of the W. C. T. U.; certainly, they, at least, are mistress of the situation) might be revived right now."—Caroline A. Steadman, Mill Village, Nova Scotia.

"'Madam' is too long, so there should be some abbreviation. It should be as short as Mr. and not liable to be confounded with it. This rules out Miss, while Mdm. and Mme. are too long, and the last one not English. Therefore I vote for Md. Second choice, Mdm."—O. B. Bird, Vineland, N. J.

"For myself, I exercise common sense, and moreover, exercise it at the signing of each individual letter. Ordinarily—and that means when it cannot greatly concern the party of the second part whether I am married or single—my signature stands as below. When I am transacting business of a peculiarly careful nature I either bracket the distinctive title before my name, or, after appending the signature commonly used, write name with title and address in the lower left-hand corner. For example, were I ill in a hospital in a strange city and writing to officials for their aid in notifying friends, I should certainly be very explicit about my signature, using the title. A sensible rule to follow is, that when the Christian or given name is without doubt a woman's and no title used, she has up to the date of writing lived in single blessedness. A good plan, however, is, take nothing for granted. Initials are execrable, and 'N. G. Smith' deserves to be called 'No Good Smith.' One's name should be written as judicially as one dresses for distinct seasons and occasions, and on this occasion am I not consistent and clear in signing my name—Ada M. Melville, Chicago?

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

MASSACHUSETTS.

SUMMER MEETINGS.

Considering that we have had the hottest July in Signal Service records; that neither the mountain-tops nor old Neptune himself have been able to furnish us suitable oxygen to breathe, the temperance banner has been held aloft, if not flung to the breeze. The local unions have taken a vacation, but state and county meetings of interest have been held at central points where there are vacation gatherings, and where nature adds its attractiveness to the prominence of the work and workers. In this way the attention of the uninitiated is focused to the great significance of the temperance work; else it would be hardly worth while for the untiring leaders to spend and be spent with the thermometer at ninety and one hundred degrees in the shade. This has been known to happen: Our good president speaks somewhere, at Princeton, perhaps, and the next morning a gentleman introduces himself to her on the train, expresses great pleasure in her address of the previous evening, and hands her five dollars for her "noble work." And this was not the only one! It was duplicated by a lady. No wonder she likes "that kind of applause."

First in the July list came the W. C. T. U. Day at Lake View, the 10th. B. B. Johnson, director at the Chautauqua, said "there was more practical common sense to the square inch in that all-day meeting than in any he ever attended." Middlesex county union, Mrs. A. F. Rolfe, president, has a tent and holds afternoon meetings all through the season at Lake View. This is not only attractive and helpful, but prepares the way for the larger public meeting on W. C. T. U. Day. Rev. A. A. Miner, Mrs. E. Trask Hill, Dr. H. A. Gibbs, Mrs. M. E. A. Gleason and Richard Booth discussed themes pertinent to the cause, and it is no secret that special interest and enthusiasm were elicited by Mrs. Fessenden's parliamentary drill. It needs a master hand to make this kind of tactics the most agreeable in the world. While the Massachusetts reporter has the ear of the states she feels like suggesting, very modestly of course, why not try to borrow the Massachusetts president and see how it is done? You have a chance in your own state gatherings, but not all the presidents make this a specialty. I am not too far away from the subject to speak of the always successful Y hour in charge of the state secretary in this department, Miss Caroline Caswell.

Both at Lake View and at Cottage City, July 13, Massachusetts was glad to welcome our quondam corresponding secretary, Mrs. K. L. Stevenson, coveted by the W. T. P. A. and THE UNION SIGNAL, and one who could be but illy spared. So bereft has the state been that her place still remains vacant. Her sermon Sunday morning at Cottage City was one of the best, indicating even additional power and pith from her experience in Chicago. The text was, "Now are we the children of God and it doth not yet appear what we shall be." Mrs. Ada B. Frisbee, of South Boston, who was also musical director at Lake View, delighted the gathering at Cottage City by her entertainment, "Temperance in Art and Song." Possibly Mrs. Frisbee, too, would do a little migratory work in other states, and it is not too much to say that it would be of advantage. Mrs. Rolfe, of Concord, who has done so much to arouse the mothers of the state, gave one of the evening addresses in her own "motherly way," and Mrs. Fessenden's Sunday evening address brought out the usual appreciative response. Mrs. Walker (evangelist) gave freely of her ability and general helpfulness to the meeting, also Mrs. Rev. I. Lansing, of Boston. An all-day session of a practical character brought out the many and varied talents for which our workers have a name, and the great work of the children was advanced in a session devoted especially to them. Mention should be made of the hospitality of hotels and cottages, which is truly to be appreciated in a summer resort. The days were propitious, even the hailstorms giving emphasis, and all about this island home was

"The sea, the sea, the open sea,
The blue, the fresh, the ever free!"

Of the Asbury Grove meeting, July 25, the only word received has been that it was "a great success." At this point it may not be amiss to say to Massachusetts, that a reporter cannot be everywhere, and if a meeting or work of special significance has been overlooked, it is because you have sent us no word.

July 31, the Massachusetts W. C. T. U. had an outing—a most unique and delightful excursion stripped of the usual accessories, crowd, noise, heat, discomfort. The outing was to Concord, the famous, historic, Massachusetts Concord. How would you like to ride out some day to the home of Emerson, of the Alcotts, of Thoreau, of Hawthorne? The Old Manse is there; also Sleepy Hollow Cemetery. There are many of the typical New England homes, those of the "gambriel roof" of which Lucy Larcom sings,

"How pleasant! This old house looks down
Upon a shady little town,
Whose great good luck has been to stay
Just outside of the modern way
Of tiresome strut and show;
The elm trees overhead have seen
Two hundred newborn summers green
Up to their tops for sunshine climb;
And since the old colonial time
The road has wound just so."

Walden Pond is near, and the famous battle ground of Lexington. Entertainment was furnished by the Concord union; the famous places were visited; and Mrs. Livermore, a mine of New England lore, gave reminiscences of people and events. See September Our Message for a full account of this excursion.

ADVISORY COUNCIL.

A promising and encouraging feature of the coming season of work in this state is the formation of an Advisory Council to work in conjunction with the W. C. T. U. The superintendent of legislation, Mrs. S. S. Fessenden, has associated with herself a number of clergymen, business men and lawyers, to discuss and pursue the wisest methods of conducting the work with reference to temperance legislation. And one of the best things about the matter is, that the proposal came from the gentlemen themselves! The first action taken was a resolve, viz.: "It is the sense of this meeting that to secure woman's ballot is the most effective measure for the overthrow of the saloon." The next was: "That vigorous measures should be inaugurated to educate the public regarding the Norwegian Bill, believing that a proper understanding of it is all that is necessary to insure its defeat."

It was intended to give you the history of this bill in Massachusetts, and the outlook, but the limits of this communication will not now permit.

STATE CONVENTION, FITCHBURG, OCTOBER 16–19.

The program for the annual convention is well under way. George W. Bain has been secured for an address, also Helen M. Barker, National treasurer; Miss Ackermann, from "round-the-world" is expected; Mrs. Leavitt has returned; Mrs. Hauser, from India, is at Auburndale, so that our horizon is large—as large as the world.

LOUISE C. PURINGTON,
State Reporter, Dorchester, Boston.

MISSISSIPPI.

SINCE CONVENTION.

As was predicted at our recent state convention, work has started out more energetically than for a year or two, and plans are maturing for still better work as the season advances.

Miss Belle Kearney, soon after convention, made a tour through the eastern part of the state. A Y convention (the first attempted) was called to meet at Columbus, but had to be postponed on account of Miss Kearney's illness. Since the convention three unions, all Y's, have been organized by Miss Kearney, viz.: Canton, Starkeville and Macon.

Presidents have not been secured for all districts, but we can count on four, which is very good for a beginning. The state officers have received letters expressing interest in our work from places where there are no unions. We feel encouraged to hope for several new unions soon.

Flower mission day was generally observed. This department is very popular in our state. Miss Garner, state superintendent of physical culture, has visited a number of unions lately.

Mrs. E. I. Biggs, of McComb City, state superintendent of railroad work, has gone to work in earnest, and interest in this department is on the increase.

Natchez union has monthly gospel meetings.

Greenville and McComb City have had Demorest medal contests which roused great interest.

Our gifted and energetic corresponding secretary, Mrs. Nellie N. Somerville, has been very busy, and has her work now well in hand. We predict fine results therefrom later on. She reports fifty-seven unions and nineteen Y's.

McComb City bids fair to be the banner union; organized April 11th with ten members, it now numbers thirty-six, and is carrying on work in eleven departments.

The Fayette Y's hold weekly meetings, have monthly gospel meetings, fill pockets with literature at depot and courthouse, besides a Y column in the county paper. They exercise a pure influence in their pretty village. Press work will be immediately urged. We wish we had the last editorial on that subject in THE UNION SIGNAL for a leaflet to distribute in the state. [This will soon be leafleted.—EDS.]

ANNIE E. HARPER,
State Reporter, Fayette.

CONNECTICUT.

HERE AND THERE.

The East Hampton union held its annual free-will offering meeting in the Methodist Episcopal church. The attendance was large and the exercises throughout most interesting. It is a matter of congratulation that the condition of the union is such as to justly entitle its members to take satisfaction in it, and we believe the future to be not devoid of promise.

The meeting was in charge of a vice-president, Mrs. J. S. Barton. The address of the evening was delivered by Mrs. C. B. Buell, whose theme was the Crusade. It was a joy long to be remembered for us to visit the shadowy realm of the past in company with one so thoroughly well informed in regard to the thrilling events of that memorable time.

The evening program closed with a few bright words from our vice-president, Mrs. J. S. Barton, addressed more particularly to the gentlemen friends, in which she cordially invited them to join our union as honorary members, stating that this privilege might be theirs on the payment of double the usual fee. The reason therefore being that we believe them to be twice as wise, twice as good, and to possess twice as much money as the ladies, therefore it is just and right for them to pay twice as much as we do for the privilege of being members of our union!

FAIRFIELD COUNTY ITEMS.

Danbury union is increasing in members. Space has been granted in the daily papers for temperance items. A barrel containing clothing, bedding and reading matter was sent to a colored school in the South.

Bridgeport union visits the jail, hospital and almshouse weekly, holding services in the latter on Sunday afternoons. Their Home of Mercy is well sustained.

South Norwalk Y has contributed to the fund for the endowment of a Y bed at the National Temperance Hospital in Chicago.

Shelton reports a wall pocket at the railroad station filled with temperance papers and magazines.

Stratford has engaged in local charities. The scientific temperance instruction law works well in this town.

Greenwich gives fostering care to a Loyal Temperance Legion, a band of mercy, a sewing school, and has in charge a penny provident savings bank.

Sherman supplies four papers with temperance news items. The tobacco law is well enforced among them.

South Norwalk furnishes teachers in the public schools with the Monthly Advices issued by Mrs. Hunt. This union has joined with the church in protesting against the granting of a certain saloon license. The remonstrance was successful.

George R. Scott, of the New York Witness, has lectured for Stepney union; the attendance was large and the address excellent. The wall placards of temperance principles issued by the Connecticut temperance union have been placed in three public schools.

Meriden union reports a number of pleasant events. The union is large and active and its influence felt in the city. Miss Elizabeth Yates, of Round Pond, Maine, delivered an address in the town hall to a large and appreciative audience. Her subject was "The Modern Hercules."

Following this closely were two delightful talks by Mrs. Fitz-Gerald in White Ribbon Hall. Her remarks, based on a wide experience of twenty-five years' work in temperance reform, were intensely interesting. Thus at intervals the fires of temperance are fanned by willing, energetic hands, resulting in a bright blaze, which, though it may be insufficient to illuminate as a brilliant searchlight the country for miles around, yet lights up home, hearthstones and corners where shadows lurk the thickest, and gives a new, fresh impetus to our W. C. T. U. in the way of encouragement.

MIDDLESEX COUNTY.

The semi-annual convention of Middlesex county union was held in East Hampton, and was an exceedingly pleasant one. Mrs. Marvin, president, presided, and the devotional service was conducted by Mrs. Barton, of the local union. The morning was devoted principally to business. The roll-call was answered by "working mottoes"; reports from unions gave a fair idea of the work being carried on in the towns. Miss Josie Sexton gave the address of welcome, and Deacon Skinner added, during the morning, fitting words of greeting. The response was given by all in form of a hymn sung heartily.

The collation tendered was just what might have been expected, abundant and excellent. Ice cream was served and was greatly enjoyed. In the afternoon Mrs. Buell, Mrs. Gleason, of Massachusetts, and others, made short addresses. Two young ladies, Miss Gertrude Bevins and Miss Percie Smith gave recitations and there was some fine music during the day. The address of the evening was made by Mrs. Gleason and was a fine lecture.

Rockfall union, feeling that something different was desirable for the summer months resolved itself into a reading circle and will read W. C. T. U. literature in the meetings. They have commenced with "A Great Mother" and will follow it with some other of the excellent books published by the W. T. P. A.

The L. T. L. of Rockfall is still active and has lately taken up the band of mercy work.

NEWS BY LOCALS AND COUNTIES.

Genoa local union sends an account of a parlor meeting held at the home of the president, with a goodly number present. A fine program was carried out, and at roll-call each one responded with a text or quotation from some favorite author. A social hour followed and all were so pleased with the results that it was decided to hold monthly parlor meetings. Several new members have been added to their union.

During a recent session of the Teachers' Institute held at Horseheads, Chemung Co., Mrs. Helen L. Bullock presented the subject of scientific temperance instruction in a most entertaining and instructive manner. She answered a "box" of puzzling questions, secured private talks with teachers, distributed literature and gave an excellent address in the evening. The county commissioner acknowledged neglect of duty in this branch of study, and publicly pledged himself to future faithfulness.

Miss Vandelia Varnum has also been at work in Chemung county and has accomplished great results in organizing new unions, building up old ones, and enlisting the interest of outsiders.

On the first Sunday in April the union at Geneseo celebrated its tenth anniversary. It might almost have been called its twentieth, for in 1874 a union was organized, and though not having the present complete system of organization,—working by committees instead of departments—in aim, spirit, and general plan of work it was the same, and for nearly eight years held weekly meetings without an omission. When death and removals weakened the working force it was obliged to close its work, but in 1884 the present union was organized with a good membership. It works mainly along educational lines. It sustains a column each week in one of the village papers, and regularly supplies literature in barber shops, Y. M. C. A. rooms and normal school reading rooms, has an L. T. L, with senior division, secures public addresses on temperance and holds service at the jail, besides department work.

Monroe county W. C. T. U. was invited by Professor and Mrs. Roberts to hold the May convention at Chesborough Seminary, North Chili, and the invitation was gladly accepted. The students gave a song of welcome and Professor Roberts a brief address, warm and hearty, Miss McPherson, of Scottsville, fitly responding. Twenty unions were represented by ninety delegates, and twenty-five departments by their respective superintendents. Reports were very satisfactory, especially that of the treasurer. Mrs. Edgett, of Fairport, had charge of the school of methods and excellent plans of work were reported and discussed, several departments being represented. This was only a one day meeting, a sort of first half of the convention which would be held later on, when Miss Willard would be with them. The local unions in Monroe county are in a prosperous condition, and in many respects this is still the banner county of the state. Space forbids my giving the full report of this meeting as it has been sent to me, but I have endeavored to do the best I could.

The annual convention of Kings county was held in Marcy Avenue Baptist church and was a gathering of very great interest, as the past year has been one of unusual activity in temperance work. Miss Elizabeth Greenwood, National superintendent of evangelistic work, gave an inspiring Bible reading at the opening, which prepared all for the day. Reports of officers were most excellent, and that of the president, Mrs. Vanderhoef, showed great advance in all lines. Several ten minute papers were read, all bearing upon the work, and in the evening Rev. W. C. P. Rhodes, pastor of the church, gave a brief address of welcome, followed by the Rev. A. A. Cameron and Rev. D. C. Eddy, who gave inspiring talks on the needs of the hour. The second day was filled with reports, papers and general work; many of the city pastors spoke words of cheer. A cablegram of congratulation was sent Miss Willard.

Niagara county W. C. T. U. met in convention at County Line, and held a grand good meeting which will leave a lasting effect for good on the community. All of the officers with one exception, nearly all of the superintendents and about seventy-five delegates were present. The business was done with promptness and many plans of work discussed for the future. Interesting papers were read, good music and recitations enlivened the program, and the children contributed their share splendidly. The speaker of the evening was Mrs. N. H. Hutchinson, president of Tioga county. Many nice things not on the program were introduced, adding to the general pleasure. The second evening was given to a reception, held in the pleasant home of Mrs. George Ressigue, of County Line.

Delaware county convention was held at Walton, a large number being present. Seven pastors responded to the call for short addresses. A model mothers' meeting was a pleasing feature, helpful to old workers as well as new. A tender memorial service was held for the promoted comrades, and again the children delighted all with their songs and recitations. Reports were good, and arrangements made for a two weeks' tour in the county by Mrs. L. E. Bailey, of Michigan. Mary Seymour Howell, of Albany, was present, and gave a fine address at the evening meeting.

The ninth annual meeting of Lewis county, held at Talcottville, was a pronounced success. One new union, active and promising, has been organized since the last meeting, and with the other unions reported good work done. A hearty welcome was extended to all. The president's address was full of helpful thoughts and suggestions, while several papers which were read awakened new interest along the different lines of work. "Physical Education" was ably presented by Mrs. Clara Bacon and a discussion on franchise followed. Mrs. Graves, of Boonville, gave a stirring address on the "Relation of Temperance to Missions," and several of the clergy present were introduced and made brief remarks.

The evening was given to a gold medal contest, the first ever held in the county, all the contestants acquitting themselves with honor. The medal was awarded to Miss Margaret Cone, of Port Leyden.

The unions of Schoharie county reported in convention at Richmondville, and reports showed commendable increase in interest during the year. Mrs. L. E. Bailey, of Michigan, and Helen M. Gougar, of Indiana, were present, adding greatly to the enthusiasm and enjoyment. Two new unions were reported, one of which holds a well attended public meeting every month. Another has recently opened a reading-room. Nine sermons on Sabbath observance were reported. The department reports were mostly verbal, but were very gratifying. Cobleskill union keeps up a Sunday-school, and has a monthly Sunday evening temperance meeting, and several unions supply the voters with literature. An increasing interest is shown in press work and from one union a long roll of names to the mercy pledge was sent in.

Broome county held an interesting conference in the village of Windsor, Mrs. Julia A. Bidwell, county superintendent of school of methods, presiding. Papers on social purity, heredity, Y work, mothers' meetings, systematic giving and press work were read and followed by discussions. The evening session was given to a program, the principal feature being the reading of prize essays on tobacco and the awarding of prizes for the same. The essays were read by students from the Windsor Academy.

The unions of Steuben county have been greatly strengthened and the membership increased by the services of Mrs. Helen L. Bullock, of Elmira. One hundred and sixty-five active, and ninety-nine honorary members were secured and two new unions organized. This county held its semi-annual convention at Avoca, and all conceded it to be the "best on record." The evening was devoted to a gold medal contest, the fourth held in the county. A ten-cent admission fee was charged, which netted them the sum of twenty-six dollars for county work.

Our petitions for prohibition, and the full enfranchisement of woman were presented to the constitutional convention by our state president, Mrs. Mary T. Burt, and created a profound impression; the one for prohibition contained 37,624 names and the other 35,673, a grand total of 73,297 names. When pasted on cloth they measured 472 yards. The great rolls were tied with broad, white satin ribbon, and as they were carried to their respective committees and placed upon the desks all eyes were turned upon them, and there they remained in full view of the convention during its session.

I need not write much concerning the beautiful welcome meeting given Miss Willard on her return to her native land, as THE UNION SIGNAL has already reported it. Suffice it to say that it was one of the most perfect in detail, and most successful in every respect, the credit of which is due largely to the untiring efforts of our beloved leader, Mary T. Burt.

CONVENTIONS—COUNTY AND DISTRICT.

The pleasant hum of convention work is nearly over, Washington, Polk, Mahaska, Louisa, Marshall, Guthrie, Sioux, Clayton and Winnesheik counties have held successful meetings.

The first district convention was held at Letts with a large attendance of delegates and visitors. Our state president, Mrs. Dunham, was there to lend a hand, as she was at every other convention that it was in her power to reach. Work for railroad employés has been made prominent in this district, while other departments have been in no wise neglected. Mrs. F. A. McDowell was elected president, Mrs. Griffith, secretary.

The second district convention will be held soon; time and place of meeting not reported to me.

The third district convention was held at Shell Rock. Mrs. Dunham was in attendance; full particulars have not reached me. Mrs. R. L. Wallace was elected president.

The fourth district convention met at Oelwein, Fayette county, and was thought to be the best ever held in the district. It will be remembered that Oelwein white-ribboners succeeded in closing every one of the thirteen saloons that were running last fall, and, even under the infamous mulct law, they are still closed, but all foul means conceivable are being used to bring noble Fayette county under the saloon curse. Thus far it has been impossible to secure the requisite number of signatures to the petition.

Mrs. Dunham, Mother Benedict and the Bailey singers were at this convention. Delegates were present from Mitchell, Winnesheik, Clayton and Fayette counties while Cerro Gordo, Floyd and Howard counties sent good written reports. Department superintendents gave cheering accounts of work planned and accomplished. Oelwein gave a medal contest for the benefit of the district treasury, which amounted to about eleven dollars.

Mrs. Clara P. White was reëlected president for the tenth time. Mrs. Thera B. True was chosen for treasurer. The fourth is the banner district, but the "big eleventh" is reaching for the prize in loving rivalry, so gather in your state dues, ye treasurers of the fourth district, and get them into the hands of Mrs. Carhart before August 31.

The fifth district convention met at Letts. Mrs. Dunham and other good workers were there. Mrs. R. S. Lichtenwalter was elected president.

I do not know whether the sixth district convention has been held, but do know that its president, Mrs. Mary E. McMillan, is not behind any of her sisters in faithful devotion to our work.

The seventh district met in convention at St. Charles, but no items have been sent your reporter. We may rest assured it was a good one under the leadership of its president, Mrs. M. A. McGonegal.

The eighth district convention was entertained at Clearfield, with twenty-seven delegates in attendance. A gold medal contest was held one evening under the auspices of the Y's, the natural result of which was a balance of fifty dollars in the district treasury after all expenses were met. God bless the Y's! May they come into our ranks by the tens of thousands. Of course Mrs. Dunham was there, and the report reads: "Thursday evening was the gem of the convention, when our state president gave one of the finest addresses ever listened to by any audience."

No report from ninth district, but as its president, Mrs. Naomi Mackey, is planning to devote nearly all her time to the work, we know there will be no cessation of interest.

Nothing has been heard from tenth district, but its president, Mrs. S. J. Plimpton, will allow no stagnation within her borders.

The eleventh district held its twelfth convention at Mapleton, when Mrs. Joanna B. Shesler was reëlected president for the eleventh time. This pioneer worker was the only district president who was not beheaded for "truth's sake" during our nonpartisan difficulties.

Much good was reported by local unions and superintendents. Many new unions have been organized. A gift of sixteen dollars by Mapleton union to the district treasury was received with a rising vote of thanks.

GENERAL MATTERS.

The question of re-districting the state for more thorough temperance work was discussed at the conventions, and while there was a sweet acquiescence in whatever may be best for our cause, there was a sadness even to weeping when old workers realized that they could see each other's faces no more.

The most spirited resolutions against the high license, local-option mulct law were unanimously adopted by the conventions.

While Iowa white-ribboners have much to contend against, their faith and courage are equal to every emergency, for they ever consider that it is in the name of their God that they have set up their banner and by that name they shall conquer.

PERSONAL.

Miss Bertha Bowers, a gifted Y of Creston, is now the publisher and editor of our state organ, the Iowa Signal.

Three of our state jewels have been "set" in favored Illinois. Here are their names: Mrs. M. O. Hoover, president of sixth district, will be found in the vicinity of Chicago. She is the wife of Rev. Geo. K. Hoover, the new national superintendent of the Children's Educational Aid Association. She bravely held the fort in her district under trying circumstances and discouragements.

Miss Eliza Hyndman has resigned her office of president of fifth district and her professorship in the college at Mt. Vernon, and goes to La Harpe, Ill., to study medicine. Who can say but that our Father is preparing this consecrated soul for work among her heathen sisters in foreign lands?

Last of all comes Miss Clara Stephens, the former beloved editor of our little gem, The Iowa Signal, who will be found sending forth her "rays serene" in the business department of the W. T. P. A., away up in the eleventh story of the Temple.

In behalf of Iowa women I commend these three true-blues to the loving confidence of our Illinois sisters.

While we have lost three, we have gained several, one from Illinois, Mrs. Eva Kinney Miller, who may be better known to our workers as Eva Kinney Griffith. Mrs. Miller has accepted the assistant superintendency of social purity work. Minnesota contributes two of her helpers, Mrs. Carrie Knox Godfrey, who has proved her pedigree by becoming organizer and president of a union of twenty-eight members at Lyons. Mrs. Godfrey was one of Minnesota's organizers, also her state superintendent of evangelistic work.

A Minnesota Y, Miss Alice S. Draper, has been the means of organizing Whitney W. C. T. U., nine miles from Lamont, their post-office. The president and secretary of this country union live five miles apart.

Then Nebraska has given us a loyal helper in Mrs. Cora A. Bennett, who has organized unions at Bromley and Clemons.

Mrs. Anna M. Palmer has spent the spring and summer months at work in this state, where many doors for effectual work are open to her. She is engaged in the fourth district at this writing.

Persons wishing the services of our state president are requested to correspond with Mrs. M. J. Whiting, Belmond, who is authorized to arrange appointments and dates.

Miss Anna D. Brown, our Y superintendent of L. T. L. department, sends a cheering report of her work. A new Loyal Temperance Legion at Grimes with twenty-five members; another at Polk with forty-four members, and one at Greenfield with twenty members. A number have graduated and received diplomas. There are now thirty unions in the state. Miss Brown urged her L. T. L. to observe July 21, Anna Gordon's birthday, as state picnic day.

The state superintendent of fair work is making preparations for W. C. T. U. work at our state fair. Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge and other helpers are expected.

Mrs. J. H. Battles, of Nebraska, has been lecturing on social purity, increasing interest and membership of unions. She has spoken in Osage, Rockford, Riceville and McIntire in the fourth district.

POLITICAL.

The Republican party has held its state convention. That it was manipulated by politicians instead of statesmen, is evinced by the fact that its platform is as silent as a tombstone concerning "temperance and morality." The fifty-two Republican mulct saloons in Des Moines gratefully provided an extra quality of liquors for the delegates, and I blush to write that an extra quantity was consumed.

The city council of Des Moines has been deliberating as to whether gambling and prostitution shall be licensed in our state capital. We shall expect the deliberations to end in favor of license, for the horrible trio, drink, gambling and prostitution, must needs troop together.

In the meantime the Prohibitionists are holding up the true prohibition banner with unwavering devotion, and men are getting their eyes open to the treachery of the leaders of the once idolized old party, and deciding to cast their ballots with the only party that dares stand for the defense of the home.

Your reporter is proud to state that Mrs. M. H. Dunham, our president, is on the party ticket as candidate for office of reporter for supreme court, and is sure that our women will "see" that their husbands, sons and brothers vote for her.

CONVENTION ITEM.

Oh, be joyful! One who knows has cheerily sung these delightful notes in my expectant ear: Our National Chieftain and beloved sister, Miss Willard, will be at our state convention (D. V.), which will be held at Marshalltown. CLARA P. WHITE,

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA.

STATE CONVENTION.

Down to "rollicking old ocean" journeyed the white-ribbon host of Southern California on June 12, concentrating at that city of flowers, whereof all have heard—Santa Barbara. To visit such a floral land when nature is at its best, is a rare pleasure, and add to that the ordinary delights of a W. C. T. U. convention, what more could be desired?

At this, our twelfth annual convention, presided over by Mrs. Mary E. Garbutt, state president, we were honored for the first time by a welcome from a mayor, Santa Barbara's official greeting being extended by Mayor John M. Holloway. Then followed Prof. C. Y. Roop, for the public schools; Mrs. S. B. Bell, for the local union; Rev. F. F. Pearse, on behalf of the pastors; Miss Abby Hails, for the Sunday-schools; Mrs. Grace Knepper, for the Christian association; A. A. Oglesby, for the Keeley League; E. M. Burke, for the I. O. G. T.; Mrs. E. J. Thompson, for the W. R. C.; Mrs. M. A. Ashley, for the Cottage hospital; Dr. Belle S. Reynolds, for the Woman's Club, and C. M. Gidney, for the Prohibitionists. To this abundant welcome Mrs. D. S. Leach, of Compton, began her response on behalf of the delegates with the words, "We feel, we believe, we are welcome."

At the first evening's meeting a large audience appreciated not only the bright speeches, but equally enjoyed the fine music furnished by the Schubert Club of ladies and other fine social talent.

The convention organized for business Wednesday morning with about one hundred delegates present. Reports were received from the general officers and county presidents—the latter so replete with good deeds done that the morning hours were too short to hear them all. The treasurer's report was exceedingly satisfactory, combining in one grand sum the amounts (reported) given for the different lines of work in our territory—a total of $12,301.73. Of that amount our Ransom Home received $1,290-.40; our White Ribbon, $354.52, and our temple, $9,681.64. Thus encouraged, the convention, a few hours later, voted to raise $2,500 for state work the coming year.

Pressed for time, as all our conventions are, yet we delighted in the refreshing moments given to precious Bible reading, the first being led by Rev. E. J. Scudder, on "Responsibility to God," and another by Josephine Marlatt, pastor of the Friends church, Los Angeles.

On Wednesday afternoon the president gave her annual address, which thoughtfully reviewed the past and treated of many important topics of the day. From the state superintendents were learned the particulars of the year's harvest in our many departments, and suggestions for better work this year. One item is that twenty-eight little ones were placed in good homes.

Wednesday evening Rev. Amanda Deyo, of San Diego, gave a valuable address upon "What has the Temperance Reform Taught Us?" and emphasized the need of teaching nations to arbitrate all differences. North Carolina loaned us her leader, who treated the important question, "How Does the Holy Spirit Help in our Evangelistic Work?" Unforgotten will be the truth. "The people mourn and iniquity goes on while Congress plays a match game with tariff and free trade," and many other bright thoughts will assist us in remembering the visit of Rev. Mary C. Woody, president North Carolina W. C. T. U.

Quite a sensation was created by the paper of Kate Shepardson-Black, M. D., on "Nervous Prostration." It was an electric shock from which there will be a healthy improvement of public sentiment regarding a "white life for two."

That new venture—the thankoffering envelope—yielded the neat sum of $21.65 in money, besides an amount of thankfulness uncountable. A subscription for our Ransom Home reached more than $72.

Fully appreciated was the loving letter read to the convention from Miss Willard in reply to our words of sympathy.

Those sadly sweet moments given to the memorial service, recalled dear voices, pleasant words and heroic deeds. The service, as conducted by Mrs. Anna B. Southwick, state superintendent of evangelistic work, was very impressive. A few homes have been bereaved, while many comrades have watched by sick beds during the year.

The annual election made but little change; its only result being to cause the president and vice-president to exchange offices. Mrs. Garbutt's ill health would not permit her to try to execute her ideal methods, and she would not do less, so Mrs. N. P. J. Button, who led us for three years, again took charge, with Mrs. Garbutt as vice-president. The remaining officers are Miss G. T. Stickney, corresponding secretary, Mrs. Elizabeth H. Mills, recording secretary, and Miss Katharine Morrison, treasurer.

Cheering news was had of the temperance cause in prohibition Riverside county and from San Bernardino city, the wonderful tidings that of the former forty-six saloons but eight now exist. How was it done, do you ask? A blessed revival in the Methodist church was followed by an equally good one in the Congregational church, which so warmed all hearts that one result was a monthly gospel temperance meeting that is held jointly by the churches, Salvation Army and the W. C. T. U., and alternately in the churches and Army barracks.

Of the temple work, our White Ribbon says: "Mrs. Baright's report of the temperance temple showed a marvelous amount of successful work done, and the blessing of heaven upon it. Think of it, talk of it, together praise God for it—in such times as these that wearisome debt reduced to fourteen thousand dollars, which is covered by pledges that are being redeemed as they mature."

A generous act was done by the Santa Barbara press in giving fine reports of the convention which included an extended notice of Mrs. Frances R. Saunders' paper on "Is the Use of the Secular Press Desirable?" and increased that kindness by donating the sales to the convention.

The Santa Barbara union did "what she thought she couldn't" in careful preparations for the convention and the successful entertainment—both musically and physically—of the same.

AT the W. C. T. U. School of Methods, held in connection with Monona Lake Assembly, Madison, Wis., July 24 to August 3, Mrs. Helen G. Rice was the excellent conductor. This was the first year of the school, and the uncommon interest and attendance insure its future existence. On Temperance Day, July 27, the morning platform address was given by Mrs. Rice, and the afternoon address by John G. Woolley.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

MRS. FRANCES W. LEITER delivered the annual address before the literary societies of Antioch College, Yellow Springs, Ohio, during commencement week in June, subject, "Educational Equipoise." The summer normal having already opened, the teachers in attendance were permitted to hear the subject of physical education discussed. One teacher present said, "That was full of common sense."

THE Drake School of Oratory in Des Moines, Iowa, offers, free, a one hundred and fifty dollar scholarship to one young person, man or woman, in each state and territory who will write and deliver the best oration on the subject, "Shall the Saloon be Nationalized?" This subject must be studied and discussed by the young people of the nation. The young person who can win in such a contest, and then take a thorough training, will be ready for the platform. For more information address the school at Des Moines.

MRS. ELLA GURNEY, president of Jefferson county, N. Y., W. C. T. U. has recently been ordained to the ministry. The following extract from the minutes of the council which ordained her will be of interest: "In coming to this decision the council desires emphatically to record the exceptional conditions which appear in connection with this case:

"First, Mrs. Gurney has by all testimony been approved of God and of the churches she has served as an exceptionally gifted, sound and efficient minister of the Gospel.

"Second, She is the wife of one who has a record of signal success in evangelistic work, and in her public and definite statements holds her duty as a wife and mother of paramount importance.

"Third, It is solely and entirely on the grounds of peculiar providential conditions and indications that we act as we do in this case. Who are we that we refuse to ratify what God has so evidently approved?"

AT a late Sorosis banquet, held in Cleveland, O., Mrs. Mary B. Ingham, a staunch white-ribboner, spoke as follows upon "The Third Uprising":

"The uprising of women throughout Christendom is as remarkable, now, as a quarter century ago. In 1869 and '70 the movement was for the women of the Orient, shut away from the Word of Life in harems and zenanas, our effort proving beyond question that we can enrich treasuries faster and surer than men, adding marvelously to evangelizing forces for the redemption of the heathen. In short, the formerly silent two-thirds of the membership of orthodox churches have come to be a power in the world. In 1874 the resistless impulse to the front was in favor of reforms, solving the problem of how to reach the masses, opening sociological questions to the investigation of the better half of mankind, whose keen insight and sympathetic touch have uncovered to a surprised generation the cause of sorrow and suffering. Temperance and social purity have been lifted into prominence as never before. For the last decade of the nineteenth century is reserved the gathering of our forces for the promotion of intellectual growth and general intelligence. Drawing-rooms, club-rooms, hotel parlors and city halls are filled to overflowing with eager writers and debaters upon every imaginable subject. Besides, in the city of Cleveland, are seven secret orders of women who crowd lodge rooms and upper assemblies with representatives from all walks in life—each pressing to the same goal, knowledge of affairs and a higher mental status. Our schools are astonishingly numerous; schools for physical culture and expression in gesture and oratory; schools for learning cookery as a fine art, kitchen and kindergarten classes for children, instruction in dressmaking and other amateur economics; musica societies for enhancement in melody, art schools and professional teaching of anything that refines and beautifies. Indeed, the situation as now presented, so universally demanding another mode of passing time than in small talk and following the fashions, even an appropriate fitting for life's discipline has in it more of the sublime than these eyes have looked upon in the whole twenty-five years. 'Truly,' Goethe says, 'the ever-feminine draweth on.'"

CONVENTION MATTERS.

The annual convention of the National W. C. T. U. will be held at Cleveland, O., November 16 to 21, inclusive. It will be the twenty-first convention of the organization, at which its majority will be attained, and anniversary exercises will be held. Many inquiries concerning the convention are coming in and it seems well to reply to some of them in this column.

By action of last year's convention on the adoption of a motion offered by Mrs. Hoffman (Page 38, Annual Minutes), all reports must be printed in readiness for the meeting. To accomplish this it will be necessary that they be in the hands of the corresponding secretary by October 16, as a full month will be required to edit, print and bind them for convenient use. As this will be done at the expense of the National, a sufficient number of copies being printed for the minutes of the Convention, it is expected that in the interest of uniformity with each other and with the minutes of previous years, they will be printed by the W. T. P. A., whose superintendent cannot assure their readiness unless received at the prescribed date, October 16.

The plan for two-minute speeches proposed to superintendents, which were to occur on the evening of Tuesday, November 20, after all reports were given, will not be carried out, arrangements for other use of the evening having been made.

Madam Layah Barakat, a Syrian woman of great talent and piety, in this country for the education of her children, who has aroused much interest in missionary circles will, D. V., be in attendance and will, as she always does, enthuse the Convention. Madam Sakurai, who will be remembered as a delegate to the conventions of the World's and National W. C. T. U. in 1893, will be with us again.

We shall be pleased to answer by letter or THE UNION SIGNAL any questions that may be asked by our workers.

Mrs. Marion B. Baxter and John G. Woolley have been in attendance upon the meetings at Glyndon Park Camp, Md., August 3 to 6, and Silver Lake, N. Y., August 10 to 13. They spoke three times at each place. Mrs. Baxter delivered the Sabbath morning sermons, and Mr. Woolley the afternoon addresses, and we learn that the impression made was profound for God and Home and Native Land.

We are told of a most prosperous union at Dunlap, Iowa, where husbands, fathers and brothers are received into full membership. There is no suspension of interest and we listened to an encomium pronounced upon its workers by one of the brethren with much delight.

A little conversation at the lunch table at our Headquarters at the Temple concerning Self-Denial Week—in what way we as a company might show our readiness to sacrifice, led us to think of the vast host the world over, who like ourselves would be considering the subject for weeks to come, until we should enter upon the work which through its sacrifices (the love of God constraining) and its gathered mites, will tell for our own spiritual growth and the glory of God, by the increased opportunities for prohibition work, which additional finance will enable us to accept.

MARY A. WOODBRIDGE.

Treasurer's Corner.

Announcement is made in this number of our Self-Denial week and every white-ribboner is urged "for her own good and the good of the world in which we live," to deny hersels some coveted pleasure or luxury and send the amount to help on the work of our beloved W. C. T. U., half going to the World's and half to the National in each country in which the contribution is made. It will be very interesting if each donor will send with her remittance an account of the personal deprivation that enabled her to give the money. I hope to find many spicy extracts to brighten the "Treasurer's Corner." If only the women who "belong" will bear it in mind and send the result it will greatly aid the work, and I would suggest that each woman, after reading her SIGNAL should send it to some friend who would gladly help us, and yet perchance is not one of us. Mark the various articles pertaining to Self-Denial week, and if convenient write a brief but kindly note to the friend and call attention to our needs. The gifts from such sources would not only help the World's and National, but would tend to interest such givers in our society and its interests. Push the Self-Denial fund even if it requires great self-denial to do it.

Georgia Wood, of Baltimore, thinks Miss Willard very kind, "for in her 'omnibus bill of recognition' we are included, we, who had not done one thing, but 'have generous thought for her' and talk about her, although our hearts and hands were longing to do something to show her how glad we were that she came. We (daughter and I) follow Ishpeming union, and send one dollar as a thankoffering for her safe return."

The treasury has been helped by receipt of dues from Missouri, North Carolina, New Hampshire and Kentucky. I trust every local treasurer will report to her state treasurer the total of the union's receipts of money from all sources and its expenditure for all purposes. Blanks will be sent out for that purpose. We feel sure that locals have never had full credit for the work they have done, which, in the aggregate, if fully reported, would make a good showing. I shall be glad to furnish each state treasurer, free of cost, with blanks like the following, to send out to locals:

How much money have you raised during the year by collections?.....
How much by entertainments?.....
How much by pledges?.....
How much by dues?.....
How much by donations.....
How much by other means?.....
How much money have you expended during the year for lectures?.....
How much for literature?.....
How much for charity?.....
How much for expenses of delegates?.....
How much for State dues?.....
How much for County and District dues?..
How much for all other purposes in local work?.....

Please include in this report every dollar raised for any purpose, and expended in any way—rent of halls, expenses of delegates, UNION SIGNAL subscriptions, etc.
Please return before Oct. 10 to.....

HELEN M. BARKER.

Our Library Table.

THE PULLMAN STRIKE is a publication that is first attractive because of its timeliness. It is from the pen of Rev. W. H. Carwardine, pastor of the First M. E. church, Pullman, Ill. While the strike was at its height, Rev. Carwardine preached a sermon upon the subject then uppermost in the minds of all, giving a fearless expression to his convictions concerning the situation. Through the press the sermon went far and wide and returned to its author such a flood of comments, criticisms and questions, that he wrote the book in hand believing there was a demand for just such an unprejudiced statement of facts. The author has lived and worked in Pullman and thoroughly understands the "system" in all its bearings. His book gives a satisfactory explanation of many statements and facts regarding the reliability of which, the public has been divided. While no sympathy is shown for the peace-destroying element ample reasons are given why men in whose veins course free American blood were driven to resist the conditions under which they were employed and the methods by which they were reduced to virtual slavery in the "model town" of Pullman. The book gives every evidence of hasty preparation, but the matter it contains is superior to its dress and will be eagerly read by those who have followed the utterances of the press upon this latest unpleasantness.

Chas. H. Kerr & Co., Publishers, 175 Monroe St., Chicago. Price, paper, 25 cts.

THE WEDDING GARMENT, A Tale of the Life to Come. By Louis Pendleton. This is a queer bit of fiction founded on fancy—the fancies being evidently the outgrowth of some strange beliefs and theories concerning the life beyond. The author's views are some of them old and some decidedly original, and the reader cannot refrain from wondering if THE WEDDING GARMENT at all embodies Mr. Pendleton's hope for the future. But it is a story pure and simple, and an interesting one, however "improbable" or "unorthodox."

Roberts Brothers, Boston. Price $1.

"WANTED." By "Pansy." The list of "Pansy books" is steadily growing longer, but it is none too long for the compass of her admirers. The heroine of the above named volume is charming from her naturalness—a girl who thought no one "wanted" her, but who remaining true to her own womanliness was led to a higher spiritual experience and finally, being more fit for use, found she was really wanted and filled a large place in suffering lives. The book has the well-known tone of uplift and helpfulness that characterizes all of Mrs. Alden's works.

OUR WORLD'S FAIR SERIES.

All the Magnificent Views Within the Reach of All.

In another column will be found our announcement of a plan to supply our readers with full sets of 256 World's Fair Photographs on easy terms, viz.: 50 cents a month. The entire series of 16 parts is now ready for delivery. This is an unusual offer, and one that ought to interest every one of our readers, not only those who visited the great World's Fair, but also those who failed to go.

The World's Columbian Exposition was the greatest event since the world began, and it is hardly likely such another will ever transpire again. Surely mementoes of such an event must grow more and more valuable as the years go by. We have been extremely fortunate in obtaining the collection we did of the World's Fair views. There has never been anything equal to them produced yet, and there never will be. Our photographs are the very best that can be had from any point of view. And, independent of the interest they possess for the present owner, which must be great, the future generations will find them intensely interesting and of inestimable value.

Our views include the full list of all the important structures and the different scenes of beauty about the grounds. We have what no one else secured — various views of the same buildings, each one calculated to show off their architectural features to the best possible advantage, and give a thoroughly accurate idea of every building. So fine is the work in the reproductions we offer that the smallest symbolical figure and most delicately traced ornamentation comes out with perfect clearness. To accomplish all this to our entire satisfaction, we have employed the most expert artisans for the mechanical part of the work, and the grand results we have achieved fully compensate us for our outlay of money and time. We make no exaggerated statement when we say we give all who patronize our enterprise such pictures of the World's Fair as it will be utterly impossible to obtain by any other process than the one we have adopted.

Our portfolios each contain sixteen photographs, 8x10 inches in size, and the entire series is sent when the first payment is remitted. See our announcement elsewhere.

IN an East-end clothing shop is a card announcing, "Perfectly fitting garments. Every article sits as well as a hen."

TEMPERANCE reformer: "Have you ever taken the pledge?"

Toper: "No; but I've taken everything else."

MR. MCCORKLE was showing some visitors over the house. Arriving at the nursery, he remarked: "This, gentlemen, is the bawl-room."

DOCTOR: "I will leave you this medicine to take after each meal."

Mike: "And will yez be so koind enough to leave the meal, too, docthor?"

"FELLOW-CITIZENS," said the street-corner orator, standing on a barrel, "my position upon this question is a peculiar one." And just then when the top of the barrel caved in and let him down in the shape of a letter V, gripped by the neck and heels, the crowd rather thought it was.

TEACHERS in public schools have very frequent illustrations of peculiar association of ideas in the minds of their pupils. At a recent examination in geography in one of the public schools, the teacher asked: "What valuable things are taken out of the earth?" Much to her amazement one young hopeful immediately replied: "Clams and mummies!"

"I SUPPOSE you are still collecting wonderful things," said the visitor to Walter. "Yes," said Walter, "I'm getting new things all the time. I've got a piece of the Atlantic Ocean up stairs in a bottle."

LITTLE Flo, upon being censured by her mother for some small mischief she had been engaged in, sat "thinking it over" for some time, finally said, in a complaining tone, "Everything I do is laid to me."

"I DON'T care," said the little girl who had not been invited to the party. "I don't care. I will get even with them!" "Pray what will you do, my child?" asked her mother. "When I grow up I'll give a great big party, and I won't invite any one."

Teacher.—Name some of the most important things existing to-day that were unknown a hundred years ago. Tommy.—You and me.

Tommy.—There's a girl at our school, mamma, they call 'Postscript.' Do you know why?' Mamma.—No, dear. Tommy.—Because her name is Adeline Moore.

TALKING about busy men, who leave their homes early and get back after dark and never see their children, a man of that sort was hurrying away one morning when he found that his little boy had got up before him, and was playing on the sidewalk. He told the child to go in. The child wouldn't. Man spanked him and went to business. The child went in, howling. The mother said, "What's the matter?" "Man hit me," blubbered the youngster. "What man?" "That man that stays here Sundays."

BERTRAM'S TACT. Mamma—"Oh, Bertram, here you are again all covered with mud from head to foot!"

Bertram (in tears).—"It isn't my fault. I war sailing around on a plank, when Willie Meigs gave me a push and over I went."

Mamma.—"Well, what are you crying so about? Is it painful to be covered with mud?"

Bertram.—"No, it ain't, mamma; but I thought if I came in laughing you would whip me."

"SIR," said a master in his parting address to a distinguished alumnus, "your fellow students think highly of you, the tutors and professors think highly of you, I think highly of you; but no one thinks more highly of you than you do yourself."

"CAN you remember nothing of what took place? Try to recall some of the circumstances." "I have tried, your honor, but I can't. My mind is a perfect blank." "You may step aside but don't leave the court-room. We may need you for a juror."

JIMMIE MOORE was most anxious to sing "Rule Britannia," because he "knowed the words." This was his rendering. Mrs. H. M. Stanley tells us in her recent book, "London Street Arabs"—"Rule, Britallion, Brittalion ruins the whales; True-'earted Brittuns never—never shall be, shall be slain!"

DR. PILLSBURY: "Well, Mr. Sceptic, did you follow my prescription?"

SCEPTIC: "No. If I had I would have broken my neck."

DR. PILLSBURY: "Why, what do you mean?"

SCEPTIC: "I threw the prescription out of the window."

She who Runs may read. No woman, if she can read, can fail to know about Pearline. Then, if you're worn out with hard work or find your clothes going to pieces, you've only yourself to blame. You'll have to choose your own way of washing. You can use soap and the washboard and tire yourself out, and rub your clothes to tatters. You can use so-called washing-powders, imitations of Pearline, and have easier work, though they're eating up the clothes. Or you can use Pearline, wash in the easiest way, and be absolutely certain that there isn't the slightest harm. 425 J. PYLE, N.Y.

ANNUAL FAIR NUMBER.

The next issue, August 30, will be our annual Fair number, gotten up to be a special pleasure and help to the agricultural population of this broad country. Hamlin Garland, the Jeremiah of the farmers' cause, has promised a contribution, which, it is safe to say, will bear the practical sympathy that has characterized his vivid portrayal of the disabilities and wrongs of our rural workers. John G. Woolley is booked for one of his veritable sword-of-Saladin thrusts. There will be a word from the standpoint of Granger and grist-mill; something for wives and daughters from many pens, which in prose and verse will start a wave of larger hope. Mary A. Lathbury will send a breath of divine comfort from "The Psalm Country," while those who look to the ballot-box for remedies may find a hint. Everybody who needs this number of THE UNION SIGNAL will feel as surely as we do that the salvation of our nation lies with those who follow the plow from sunrise to sunset.

Price $1.50 per 100; $12 per 1,000.
All orders must be accompanied by CASH.

ATTENTION! BOYS!

See our display advertisement which cannot fail to interest you. This opportunity is not for your mother or sister, but for you only. We do not offer many premiums but we are confident this nickel watch is just what you need, just what it claims to be, and for the effort it will cost, you can not obtain a better time-keeper. It is really a clock movement in a nickel case, manufactured by the Waterbury Clock Company, small enough to fit in your vest pocket. The smallest boy can wind it and tell accurate time by it. It is not a toy watch nor as small and delicate as your father's, yet will keep perhaps better time than his. Read our offer and notify us at once that you wish to work for one of these watches and we will be ready to fill your order as soon as it reaches us.

Signal Notes.

THE Nazarenes are a sect who resemble the Quakers in some respects, entertaining strong scruples against war in any form. They have many members in Hungary, Transylvania and the Danube valley, and suffer many hardships because of their refusal to bear arms. One of their number was recently court-martialed at Kragujevatz and sentenced to ten years hard labor in chains.

Two advantages (!) from the use of opium are claimed by a Chinese devotee. One is that the opium user is a light burden for his pall-bearers, since opium shrivels the body so. He added, "one who uses opium will never lose his sight or hearing, because he will not live long enough. Loss of sight and hearing are defects of age, but as those who take opium die early, they will escape those evils!"

THE Maux legislature has passed a bill granting license to all boarding-house keepers with a property appraisement of £40 or over. This doubles the number of licenses, and in Douglas gives one license to every fifty-eight of the resident population. The increase is made on behalf of a certain portion of the summer visitors (numbering three hundred thousand during the season), who turn the quiet capital into a place of rowdyism and dissipation, driving away the respectable contingent.

THREE thousand six hundred school teachers are employed in Chicago and about four hundred new ones are needed each year. Half of these are selected from among experienced teachers of all parts of the country. The teachers in primary grades receive salaries ranging from $500 to $800 according to their years of experience; High School teachers from $850 to $2,000. While this is a larger sum than in smaller places it must be remembered that the expense of living is proportionately higher.

SIR JOHN HALL, in his telling address before the woman's suffrage mass-meeting at Queen's Hall, London, told of the woman's franchise in New Zealand, giving large credit to the franchise department of the New Zealand W. C. T. U. Where the temperance question was at stake, he found the woman's vote had a very strong influence. Comparing the proportion of men and women voters, the percentage of the latter who voted was largely in excess of the former. The elections were very quiet, and the returning officer said: "I would rather poll two hundred women than seventy men."

A PAMPHLET has been issued by Professor Litta, a Sicilian statistician, who states that 20,000 Italians residing in England, "of whom the vast majority are not robust, independent bread-winners, but children scarcely emerged from infancy, hired from their parents, or, more truly, sold by them, to pirouette and gambol through the European cities to the sound of tambourine or hurdy-gurdy, and by the compassion they excite to draw from the thoughtless almsgiver the dole from which their hard taskmasters earn a profitable livelihood." Of these undesirable residents America has its quota. With the rate of taxation in Italy at twenty-one dollars a head, small wonder that her careless, indolent people are so ready to receive the blood-money of the rapacious foreigner.

A NEW ZEALAND correspondent in the Christian Commonwealth writes: "One of the best social movements in this country is the Young Woman's Christian Temperance Union. At a meeting of this society, held recently it was decided, (1) That it be an indictable offense for any woman under twenty-one to be found in a brothel or earning money by prostitution. (2) That steps be taken to enforce the Act already on the statute book suppressing brothels. (3) That the age of consent be raised to eighteen. (4) That women be urged to vote for pure men before party men for Parliament. (5) That the women of this colony demand that their law-makers be law-keepers. (6) That steps be taken to have such an Act placed upon the statute book as shall make it compulsory to establish the paternity of illegitimate children. These planks in the platform of this society show the stuff that our women are made of."

THE OLD DINNER HORN.

A Farm Reminiscence.

BY JOEL SWARTZ, D. D.

I have heard many strains that have thrilled me with joy,
But none, let me say, since the day I was born.
Has pleased me so well as that when a boy,
Appealed to my soul from the old dinner horn.

The tube was of tin, a yard or so long,
And was blown for the boys, at noon and at morn;
Its monotone din was a "Welcome, come in:
Come in, my dear boys to the call of the horn."

A mother's fond lips pressed the trumpet of tin,
She blew her full soul through the barley and corn;
"The dumplings are boiling, the apples are in,
The cream is all here," said the musical horn.

With appetite keen, near the noon of the day,
Whether making the fence or plowing the corn,
Or reaping the wheat or tossing the hay,
Ah, sweet to my soul was the sound of the horn.

But the harvests are reaped, the fences are made,
And gone are the boys who once furrowed the corn.
And all save myself in the graveyard are laid
With the dear, precious mother who winded the horn.
But the trumpet of tin—oh, the precious heirloom!—
Though dented and battered and homely and old,
I keep as a token of mother and home,
And boyhood's bright hours, more precious than gold.

"I ain't one to put my finger into other folks' pies, or to volunteer advice, as you well know, ma, but Ezra Gibbs and his ways were just too much. A man hasn't any business being a pig, if he does have a chance. I think Villa's some to blame for standing it, but you know yourself her way, just bear things and turn sour, instead of having a regular pitched battle and changin' 'em."

"There's men that no battling would change," said plump Mrs. Jenks, looking over her spectacles at her fair and comely daughter. "But Villa's like her father. He was forever a-grumblin', but he never hustled around to make things different. Some folks are built that way."

"That's Villa," replied Luella, as she deftly spread out the folds of her blue muslin and applied the hot iron. "She felt abused, and looked it, but Ezra wasn't a-going to see it, for to change things would cost money. When I got there she had a crick in her back, and every drop of water had to be got out of an outside pump, three steps down, and of course three steps up, and every drop of waste water had to be backed down those three steps. There was a beautiful spring not a quarter of a mile away, that spread out into a pond, and they might have had ice; but no, not a pound, and for coolness Villa had to put the butter down the well. It was one of the sort that goes with a big stone, enough to break your spine. Her kitchen had two south windows, and one west one, so she had a broiling sun all day in summer, and precious little draft, though there was plenty of space for two windows looking north; and she hadn't a sign of an oil or gasoline stove, and there was three men to cook for besides Ezra, all with appetites like alligators, and it midsummer and a six-griddled range full of fire to do it by.

"As for sewing, she hadn't any machine, and her twin boys are masters for stramming out things; and it was just so down into the little things like tin basins and iron spoons. You had to wash things to get around when you was stirring up a johnny cake or a custard, and yet she made thirty weight of butter a week and kept hens and bees, and you may be sure that Ezra see to it she tended 'em. But out in the tool-shed there was everything under the sun to make his work easy, from a sulky plow to a harvester and binder, and the second week after I got there he was all full of buying a cider press. He said it would save the apples he didn't want to feed the stock, and the cider would be worth more'n he could sell the fruit for; and more than all, there was a barrel-factory man who owed him money, who'd pay him that way quicker than any other—and so on. Moreover he was going to show off a team of bay colts he wanted to sell—bays, with long, black manes and tails, kind as could be, but skittish.

"Villa had saved up the butter money, and the egg and honey money in an old sugar bowl that was his mother's, and the day afore the fair opened he drove to town, so he said, to put it in the bank, saying, 'It wan't no ways safe to leave it in the house if we all go to the fair, and I suppose we all might as well, since, to get in the horses, I have a family ticket."

"Did he say those words?" interposed Mrs. Jenks severely.

"Yes, ma'am, and I made a note of 'em, and grew more determined than ever to be ready to get the better of him if I had a chance," replied Luella.

"You don't have to go out to Ill'noy for men," said Mrs. Jenks with a significant gesture, "New York state has its share. Now here we've had water and gas in this village going on fifteen year, and Alonzo Beal owns stalk in th' bank, besides his lots in Buffalo, but his wife has to git along, I can tell you. But I've interrupted. Go back to Villa and Ezra Gibbs."

"Well, Villa and me was up with the sun the next day, for we must carry luncheon, it bein' all Ezra could do to buy coffee and lemonade, and we was pretty well beat out, I can tell you, when we clim in the democrat with Lem Snow and the boys. Lem was to drive the old team and us in the democrat, and Ezra had the buggy with his team to show off. That kind of riled up Villa down to the quick, for he'd promised her the buggy should be hers always, the democrat not bein' very easy in the springs, and she let out to me that besides buyin' the cider press he was bound and determined to have more land. 'And that means,' said she, 'more men for me to wait on, for it's our neighbor Rudd's wheat lot he's after, and stid of puttin' that money in th' bank yesterday he got more, and he's a-goin' to buy it this very day.'

"It was hot. When it's hot out to Wilna it seems as if the heavens shut down close to the earth, and there was clouds of dust, for everybody was a-goin', and all you could do was just to endure, and wait till the end. There is an end to everything, that's what kept me up. Well, there was the usual sights. We went to the women's pavilion and saw no end of canned fruit, and patched quilts, and feather and corn flowers in frames; and the boys got lost, and when we found 'em were all dirt and cross as they could live, and there wasn't any time to think of Ezra and his doings till it come noon, when he come around for his bite.

"It was plain he'd been sampling all sorts of things from home-made cake to spruce beer, home-made wine, and sweet cider, and cider brandy, for he kept rubbing at his nose which was fire-red at the end, and sniffing, and trying to act natural, and when a man tries to act natural, you may know he don't feel so. Of course Villa saw it, and she told me after he was gone that old man Gibbs, Ezra's father, was one of those men who just keep pickled, and 'ud drink vinegar ruther'n nothing, and says she, 'It don't seem to me I can have a press with the twins a-growing up, and him with that hankerin' sort o' born in him.'

"Well, after a little we found a place that was shady, and where we could see 'em shootin' at the poppets for a nickel a chance, and Villa she got out her knittin', for Ezra's that close she's got to knit cotton socks for the boys and him, and th' band was a-playin' 'Th' Sweet Bye and Bye' for 'em to go by on the track, when all of a sudden up comes Lem Snow as white as a man tanned could be, and sez he, 'Come, quick, Mis' Gibbs. Mr. Gibbs is all broke to pieces inside and out, but the doctor said as you must be calm.'

LETTERS FROM THE "PSALM COUNTRY."

I.

"Where Dwellest Thou?"

BY MARY A. LATHBURY.

Do you live in the "Psalm country"? If so, you will recognize the old landmarks and highways as a pilgrim describes them. If you know the country, you will not only live over again the days in the desert and the valley, on the mountain and on the sea, but you will recall the wayside springs, the rose in the desert, the sheltering rock, the "table in the wilderness."

If you have only gone on exploring expeditions through it, or if you have only surveyed it with theological or professional line and level, you know very little about it—you must have lived in it to know it. And if you have lived there long you have learned the language of the country so that you think it as well as speak it. One may live in a land a long time, and very comfortably, with only a phrase-book knowledge of its language, but to know a language and its literature—that is a very different thing.

The literature of that land is not large—it may be bound in a single volume—but it is very rich. "It is full of imagery," is a saying of the superficial, "and originated among Oriental peoples, from whom it borrows its fervid and poetic coloring." But if you are a citizen of that country you know that though its language and literature may have many channels, it has but one source; that it was begun far back in the history of our race by One who wrote for all time and for all peoples, and is, therefore, written in a universal language. "The natural creation and the history of men and nations are made to tell the story of the spiritual creation and redemption—to serve as patterns of things in the heavens"—as "figures of the true." "For the invisible things of Him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made."

There is a wonderful account of a journey through the deserts of the Psalm country in the seventy-eighth psalm. In the opening verses are these words: "I will open my mouth in a parable; I will utter dark sayings of old which we have heard and known, and our fathers have told us." Then follows the story of the bondage in Egypt, the deliverance, the wilderness journey, the conquest of Canaan, and through all the goodness of the Lord to a rebellious people. It reads like history, and it is, but the one who makes the record declares it to be a "parable" which, according to Cruden, is "a similitude taken from natural things to instruct in the knowledge of things spiritual." So the natural creation from lowest to highest forms make that "elder Scripture" which is a language for all peoples and all times. God is within and pervades Nature. It is His garment and He speaks from it as our spirit speaks from the body.

Let us go back to things spiritual in our own life journey and see if we have not walked with Israel a little way. Perhaps some of us were so young when we came out of Egypt that we do not remember all the oppression and the bondage but we know about it, and we remember the sea of temptations that would have overwhelmed us but for the Lord who rebuked it and it fled. We remember, too, how tenderly He led us through those early years; how He tempered the strong light and heat of the new day with His cloud and lighted up the dark with His presence. And when we would have fainted by the way He brought forth living truth from Himself—the Rock of our Salvation—to refresh us. When we were hungry and knew not where to turn for food in the new state into which we had come, He rained down the heavenly manna upon us and we "did eat angels' food" and longed no more for the savory things of Egypt. How often did we "grieve Him in the desert," and limit the Holy One of Israel! "But He being full of compassion" forgave "our iniquity and guided us in the wilderness like a flock and brought us to the "border of His sanctuary." The long struggle with evil that marked our endeavors in the divine life seemed to cease when we realized that we were no longer led by Moses—the law—but had come out of the wilderness with Joshua, the Lord, our Redeemer.

Yet in that land of rest and plenty for the satisfying of the soul there were left some enemies to overcome that we have been helped to cast out "by little and little" as the years have gone by. Some of them, perhaps, are yet intrenched within us in their cities "walled up to heaven," and are constant reminders that a subtle self remains to be revealed and yielded up to Him who alone has the power to deliver from evil.

The story of deliverance from sin and redemption from its power is told over and over again with infinite variation to suit every soul making the journey from Egypt to Canaan. Every phase in nature is drawn upon to convey counsel and blessing to the pilgrim. Who has not read his own story in the one hundred and seventh Psalm, and joined in the grateful refrain, "O that thou wouldst praise the Lord for his goodness, and for his wonderful works to the children of men," for it is the "redeemed of the Lord" who say so, "whom he hath redeemed from the hand of the enemy."

Do you not remember the "solitary way" in the wilderness when "hungry and thirsty" your soul fainted in you? When all you had thought yours had vanished—even your faith in friends and in creeds—you cried unto the Lord and He delivered you out of your distresses, and led you forth—not by the old way, nor by a way of your choosing, but "by the right way," that you "might go to a city of habitation," the "holy city" that comes "down from God out of heaven" to us as soon as we are ready for it.

Happy are we if we do not foolishly double upon our ways in the wilderness, or prefer to "sit in darkness and the shadow of death, spiritual being bound in affliction and iron." But even there His word ("He sent His Word") can break "the gates of brass and cut the bars of iron asunder," if only there is a "cry unto the Lord" within. There is no prison in the land—no external condition so hard—no literal truth so difficult to understand, that the Lord cannot enter. Melting by His love, or cleaving by His truth the way before Him. "There is nothing inexorable but love."

If we "go down to the sea in ships" and do business on the wide, uncertain waters of the world, He is there also. He it is who "raiseth the stormy wind, and lifteth up the waves." Then, when we are "at our wits' end," and "all our wisdom is swallowed up," (margin) we "cry unto the Lord" and "He maketh the storm a calm," and brings us into the "desired haven." A time of stress and danger, and apparent ruin, such as we have seen and are passing through, is a blessing to an individual or a nation, if it produces a cry from the soul to its Saviour. "The sea is his and he made it;" shall He not make it a way to Himself?

"The dry land is also His." If the lot in life to which we are assigned is neglected, and we fail to do our little part, or if we choose another field for which we have no fitness, then the water springs of divine truth will fail and the land will be barren; but if our lot is cast in a desert, and we have the will to work it, then will the springs burst forth and rivers run, and it shall "blossom as the rose." Then will the Lord make His "hungry to dwell" and then the holy "city"—heaven within—shall rise, and "fields" and "vineyards" shall yield the fruits of the spirit increasingly.

And if, when we are blessed and multiplied greatly, self-love is increased, then are we "minished and brought low," that we may know that a prince may be a beggar, and that the pure in spirit alone are blessed. Do you remember the story of Margaret Hope, related by Dr. McLeod in "The Gentle Heart"? When the plague was in Scotland, and Margaret tried to stay her soul on the ninety-first Psalm, she was greatly distressed and ready to faint in her spirit because she saw that the evil and the good alike were stricken, and the promises to those who trust in the Lord, what could they mean? for the plague did come nigh their dwelling, but one day when very low in her mind she turned the page and read the opening of the ninetieth Psalm, "Lord, THOU hast been our dwelling-place in all generations," and the whole place was lighted with the light of heaven to her soul, and when she turned back again there was the confirmation she had not seen, "Because thou hast made the Lord . . thy habitation, there shall no evil befall thee, neither shall any plague come nigh thy dwelling."

"Whoso is wise, and will observe these things, even they shall understand the loving kindness of the Lord."

THE FARMER.

BY ALEX READY.

State Lecturer for the Illinois Grange.

I am greatly pleased to see that you are going to devote a number of your grand paper to the interest of the farmers. There is a very mistaken idea prevailing everywhere and among all classes on the relation of the farmer to all other classes. The idea seems to be that the farmer is an ignorant, uneducated, uncouth being, good enough to do the world's work, to produce the food necessary to sustain the life of a higher order of beings who congregate in cities, those who fill the professions and those who are in business. A large class of people are really honest in this belief. They think because a farmer is clad in homespun (which by the way, is likely paid for) and is not "up to" the ways of fashionable society, that he must be a boor and of the lower strata.

Few persons stop long enough to consider that all wealth is dug out of the earth in one form or another, and that the farmer is doing most of the digging. Few seem to know that true education is not all obtained from books, and that schools are not all kept within the walls of colleges, seminaries and other "institutions of learning." The average farmer is not entirely devoid of book lore, though he may not be a finished scholar in what the world is pleased to call "learning." In place of this he has a store of information culled from the great book of nature, unadulterated by constant contact with the ever-present slums and festering sores of the city. He is equipped with a large fund of common sense, broadened by his intimate association with his own expansive field, forest and farm lands.

The farmer has been creating the bulk of the wealth of this great nation; but while he has been toiling on in sun and storm another class has been busy absorbing the results of his labor.

The whole business system has been arranged without regard to the farmer or his interests, the product of his farm is made the basis for the most gigantic gambling system that has ever been devised, and it has so far been utterly impossible to get legislation which would control the iniquitous business. In addition a horde of useless men are supported in luxury by grabbing from the stream of produce as it passes from the granary of the farmer to the pot of the consumer. Another army of useless men stands along the line between the manufacturer of farm supplies and those who consume them. This system must be broken up and the route shortened and cheapened before we can hope for success on the farm.

Another great wrong which farmers themselves perpetrate and perpetuate is in the field of politics. They have long been called "the voting stock" of the parties, the largest class, with more real interest in the welfare of the country than any other; and yet almost ignored at the ballot-box. Lawyers constitute seventy-five per cent of the law makers, farmers almost nothing. If farmers would look to their own interests instead of following blindly the lead of political "bosses," we would soon see a different state of affairs, not only on the farm but in all lines of legitimate trade.

The remedy we would suggest for all this would be an intelligent organization of the farmers of America, an organization in which the farmer and his full partner—his wife—his boys and girls and his hired help can meet on a common level to discuss the questions of importance to them. This organization should be thoroughly equipped for its work, non-partisan in politics, alive to all questions of political economy, non-sectarian, and the Golden Rule its creed, education its foundation stone. It should be a social center for the farm, business methods should be taught, legislation, both national and state, should receive close attention. In a word, its chief aim should be to make the men and women of the farm better and happier, to implant a love for the farm and farm life in the boys and girls bred in it to the end that the best and brightest of them may be saved from rushing into the cities to the already overstocked professions and trades and kept for more and more intelligent cultivation of the soil.

Legislation and business methods are very much against the farm, but it is only because farmers sit still and permit it to be so; they have the power to right all these wrongs if they will only do it. If this republic is ever saved from the fate of old world democracies it will be by the level-headed, reflective (ruminating? some say) farmers. They hold the balance of power between capital and labor; reaching a hand to each, they may demand that neither shall suffer at the hands of the other. The Grange and other farmers' organizations are nearly a unit against the saloon, believing it to be the curse of curses, desolating the home, the state and the nation—ruining more lives than all other blighting influences combined. The saloon must go or the republic is a failure.

SUCCESSFUL FARM WOMEN.

BY H. B. KELLS.

So much is said of the hardships of farm life, it is refreshing to find there is a bright side to it, as revealed in the following histories of marked success. It cannot too often be repeated that "the hearth-stone is the corner-stone of the nation." No people can be built up into worthy power without the simple, manly virtues which inhere in those who coax from the soil its vital treasures, and who are daily learning the divine secrets turned up in every furrow. The farmer is the only individual absolutely indispensable to the race, and the knowledge absolutely indispensable to this nation is how to make its vast territory of the plow the heritage of every man and woman who is sustained by it, and to make these feel it is their birthright. To turn back the influx toward the cities so that it shall cover the fields, to overcome the isolation of the farm-home, to establish communal interests and advantages, is the first problem the American people need now to solve. The ballot-box will furnish certain solution of some conditions, but the inspiration of opportunity and success is another, of which the following stories are suggestive.

Mrs. Annie Bidwell, of Rancho Chico, Cal., states that one of her neighbors, a certain Mrs. Walsh, at her husband's death, found the ranch encumbered by a forty thousand dollar (near about) mortgage. In about four years she had paid the entire debt, by personal superintendence of even the sale of every thoroughbred calf and bushel of wheat.

Mrs. Bidwell also tells that Mrs. S. V. Salmon, another neighbor, commenced business in 1878 on two hundred and sixty acres of land, with some stock on it, all valued at five thousand dollars. At thirty-eight years of age she was left a widow with six children. On her ranch she raised stock, hogs and mules, fruit and grain. Six hundred acres of good land have since been added to the farm, worth to-day eighty thousand dollars, and town lots in Chico valued at three thousand dollars have been purchased. Mrs. Salmon in the meantime has educated her children well and given them five thousand dollars. She says, "There is no use in saying a woman can't make a living." At the time Mrs. Salmon took charge of her business she had to fight trespassers (who were trying to rob her of sand sold for railroad uses) off her sand and gravel lands with an old sword, which she wielded to such purpose that every man fled and never again dared appear; then she recovered title to these lands which had been dishonestly sold to the railroad.

Mrs. Robert Peet, the widow of an Episcopal clergyman, several years ago purchased about forty acres of land near San José, Cal. Her first step was to have her soil analyzed, which she did by taking samples in four strata from the top. These were sent to the State University for examination, with the question, "To what is this soil best suited?" The answer was, "Prunes." So prunes were planted, and great success attends the investment under the energetic superintendence of a highly educated and refined woman, who always loved trees and fruits and flowers.

Mrs. E. P. Buckingham, of Vaccaville, Cal., is a remarkably successful fruit grower, and a member of the Fruit Growers' Association. Left a widow, with one thousand acres of land on her hands, she put in about three hundred acres in plums, peaches, apricots, etc., and dries and preserves them, as well as ships alongside the men fruit growers, managing all her business herself. In two years she has sold off her own land $125,000, and besides meets all the duties of a cultivated society woman, who dresses à la mode.

Mrs. Phelan, another California woman, with seventy acres of land, has cleared off a debt of $23,000, and achieved an independence.

The world expects California to do the big things, but that great state does not do all that is done. A delicate little woman, Mrs. Ella Rowan, was left a widow ten years ago on a farm in Claiborne county, Miss., with little besides a few head of sheep. These she has improved till they number hundreds. She personally superintends their pasturage, shearing, counts the pelts, bales and sells them, and her lambs as well, thus providing an ample independence.

Another widow of the same locality, after the first shock of bereavement, made up her mind that it would be better to lose several thousand dollars learning to manage her own affairs than to be always a helpless victim. Her first step toward independence was a thorough course of arithmetic. For fourteen years she has manipulated, improved and increased her planting interests, and her business judgment is sought by the soundest business men of her neighborhood.

Hon. John McC. Martin, of Port Gibson, Miss., sends the following:

"In THE UNION SIGNAL of August 19, 1893, my eyes have fallen upon your article entitled, 'Woman on the Farm.' It has been my good fortune to know something of what women have done on the farm. In this section of Mississippi the close of the late war left many large estates hopelessly involved. Scarcely a home could be found that was not at the mercy of creditors. Most of existing debts were contracted under conditions which were entirely changed by the issue of our civil conflict.

"It is said that a country usually buries all marks of war, except such as are left on the maimed and scarred participants, inside of twenty-five years. It will take, perhaps, a century to accomplish this for the Southern states. The instantaneous change in our social system, habits, form of labor and agricultural conditions, all contribute to keep fresh the traces of the war on our domestic, civil and industrial relations. No people in the history of the world have been called on to face the difficulties and problems encountered in the South.

"The greatest responsibility in nearly every quarter has rested upon women. Right bravely have they met it. They have not hesitated about facing the financial, economic, industrial and business questions crowded on them. The guiding mind of a father or brother, giving place to age, disease or death, has been forced to yield in the struggle, while the wife, daughter or sister has renewed it successfully.

"Among the many who deserve to be mentioned for the determined and successful struggle, is Mrs. Elizabeth R. Montgomery, the daughter of Col. D. S. Pattison. Her home, 'Bannockburn,' on part of which the town of Martin stands, with its several thousand acres of field and forest, was, in former years, the seat of ease, plenty, and large-handed hospitality, the resort of scholars and statesmen. At the close of our Civil War, like nearly all the adjoining plantations, 'Bannockburn' was loaded with debt, contracted on the faith of property and on the value of lands which were utterly destroyed. Under such conditions Mrs. Montgomery assumed control of the 'Bannockburn' plantation. Suits were soon commenced, judgments and foreclosures impended, but with heroic resolution she faced all. No end of energy secured success. Out of a decaying property she has managed to build one of the finest places in this section.

"In the midst of all her trials the scourge of fire fell upon her home—the old mansion that had been the scene of so much that contributed to human happiness. Distressed, but still resolute, she met the new condition of things. Near by the site of the old home she reared a humbler dwelling for herself, daughter and father, and continued the work that seemed about to spin out to life's end. Meanwhile her father conveyed to her a plantation, distant some miles from 'Bannockburn,' known as the 'Spindle Place.' It, too, was encumbered with a large debt. Its rent roll had dwindled to almost nothing, while the fences, cabins and dwelling on it were rapidly going to decay. Now everything shows thrift, superior management, improvement, and a diligent tenantry. Inside of a few years Mrs. Montgomery had effected a reorganization with an outlay of only a few hundred dollars. She has managed the complicated business of two large plantations, equaling nearly, or quite, four thousand acres.

"The writer thinks that the lesson of perseverance, firmness and resolution this sketch teaches will be its justification. There is hardly another woman in this, or any of the states, who has made a braver or more heroic fight, culminating when life's course is almost half run. Notwithstanding the daily duties devolving upon her, Mrs. Montgomery has found time to contribute to the entertainment and instruction of the public. Her gifted mind has furnished many interesting contributions to the great field of learning, while her nom de plume, 'Quien Sabe,' is familiar to nearly every reading person in this section. My excuse for inflicting this letter upon you is, that what our noble women are doing, and have done, should be matter of state pride, and the memorial of it ought to be preserved."

LUCY STONE.

"Can man be free and woman be a slave?"—Shelley's Revolt of Islam.
"And did you once see Shelley plain?"—Robert Browning.

She was so gentle she disarmed reproach
With one soft smile, wherein a white soul shone
Unconscious of its loveliness,—as flowers
Wax purer for proximity to mire.
She was so noble that she could not scorn
The thorny weeds that frayed her simple robe;
With such serenity in eyes and brow
That envious natures paled to meet her calm.
She was so brave, yet meek in her great strength,
The wrong abashed recoiled before her mien.
She was so sweet, the venomed sting of hate
(Drowned in the honey of her mellow speech)
Turned on itself, while she, like the wild rose,
Smothered in perfume the attacking foe.
She was so loving that all human kind,
Sad little ones who blushed for their soiled rags,
Drawn to her side pressed close to kiss her hand
And felt the touch angelic that redeems.
She was so fruitful of high thoughts and deeds,
Oppression, cowardice, in very shame,
Shrank from her presence as the darkness flies
Dawn's radiant, rosy, silent messengers.
She was so just she awed the venal judge
Who voiced dark evil in the guise of law.
She was "about her Father's business" here,
And dedicated her one lamb to God—
In tireless service to her sisterhood.
She was so true that none were false to her,
So wedded to the good she held divine,
The base and selfish kept aloof, nor pierced
Her pure atmosphere like that of stars.

Oh, tender wife! Oh, mother! toiler! saint!
Once have I thrilled to thy absolving kiss!
Hence consecrate to thy great purposes—
I follow, if unworthy, to the gates
That wide in music swing to welcome thee
Who woke to harmony discordant minds,
And wrought in quiet power such miracles
Of peace and blessing to downtrodden souls,
Such broad uplifting of the common lives,—
With even justice struck the balance fair
Betwixt the false distinctions of this world
And God's eternal covenant with right.
We marvel not He beckoned, "Come thou higher."

CORRESPONDENCE

CHAUTAUQUA TEMPERANCE CHIMES.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Temperance is a keynote frequently struck on the Chautauqua scale, and scarcely a key can be sounded in the gamut of the Assembly's rich and varied program that is not tuned to the ear of the white-ribboner. When Hon. Carroll D. Wright—that eminent statistician, whose investigations and yearly reports from the United States Bureau of Labor are read and pondered the world around—said that "the greater part of the misery and poverty in this and other countries is due to the use of intoxicating liquors," he sounded the prevailing chord in the anthem of reform. This irrepressible strain has intoned many a devotional service at Chautauqua this season, sounding in many social, scientific and philanthropic topics, and culminating in the splendid address of Hon. Anthony Comstock, the beloved of the good and hated of the evil. Said this undaunted opponent of intemperance and impurity:

I am proud to put myself by the side of the W. C. T. U. that was organized at Chautauqua. In the art gallery at the Centennial Exhibition in 1876 there was a masterpiece of art which represented a woman, a Bible character, standing in sackcloth spread upon the rocks; before her were seven gallows, upon which hung the dead bodies of Saul's seven dead sons. This brave heroine stood there sword in hand, with a look of determination in her face, keeping back the beasts and birds of prey from devouring those dead bodies, and encircling over their heads were vultures, condors and other birds of prey. This picture was typical of the W. C. T. U. and the New York Society for the Suppression of Vice, with this difference: This stood for the dead. We stand for the living.

His earnest appeal that no Christian man go into partnership with the rum business brought responsive applause.

Temperance and missions are themes closely attuned, and it was not strange that your correspondent sought the gatherings of mission workers from many lands convened at Chautauqua during August. The most notable figure among these foreign visitors was that of Bishop Thoburn, esteemed by white-ribboners for his brotherly helpfulness in aid of our temperance movement in India and to our round-the-world missionaries. In appearance he resembles an alert army chaplain, of medium height, with hair and beard somewhat tinged with gray and a skin warmed by India's sun. His message concerning the native Christian converts of India, coming at the rate of fifty a day, and his convincing though optimistic view of the early evangelization of the world, were most inspiring to the immense audience assembled in the great Chautauqua amphitheater on that perfect August Sabbath.

In regard to the temperance work of India he frankly told me in a private interview that he did not think India needed it as much as we! Yet it is a happy thing that the temperance evangelization of the East is included in the far-reaching labors of this earnest apostle. In his absence from home, the bulk of his duties is assumed by Mrs. Thoburn, who is as well qualified for the labors of this broad field as the good Bishop himself, and acknowledged as such. When asked if he had ever addressed as large an audience as assembled on this occasion, the Bishop told of an audience in India, a mile long and half a mile wide that he addressed in different sections, from horseback, for three hours!

At the woman's missionary meeting also, the temperance chimes were rung. Attention was called to the fact that "Mother Thompson," leader of the first woman's praying band, had gone out from a missionary meeting to the saloon. A receipt for a successful missionary society, which might apply to a successful temperance union as well, was given: "Enthusiasm plus information; minus self; multiplied by activity; divided by each member, equals a successful missionary society."

The second meeting of the woman's club series which treated "The Temperance Work of To-day" was attended by an interested audience, many of whom bore the visible token of their total abstinence convictions in the knot of ribbon white. The varied aspects of the temperance work of to-day were touched upon by Mrs. Miller, leader of the club; the many indirect temperance methods were referred to and the broadening and deepening of the work through the years. The speaker deplored the frequent lack of tact and wisdom on the part of temperance workers in the presentation of their work. "Cultivate tact," she said, and all inwardly voiced "Amen."

She gave lack of knowledge as the reason why many are not interested in this "admitted truth." The saloon is the foe to the home and to the working man in its social and democratic features, and the establishment of coffee-houses and reading-rooms was advocated. Work among children (especially by providing breakfasts for the children of the very poor that they may be able to attend school); scientific temperance instruction, training and teaching of domestic servants as home-makers by telling them of the bad effects of alcohol, were among the indirect temperance efforts which the speaker urged. Her remarks were closed by a few earnest words on social influence. Temperance women should not only be examples but exponents.

Mrs. Wetmore presented the work of Demorest medal contests, giving the particulars of the introduction of this work in a rural district, where the novelty of the entertainment first attracted and where afterwards a great good was accomplished by this means. Parents came to see their children and heard good temperance truths; a father and mother came with their eight children to hear their daughter contest and afterwards became strong temperance people. PROHIBITION IN MAINE.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—A letter comes from a white-ribboner of Wayne county, Pa., (requesting an answer through THE UNION SIGNAL to help others as well as herself) asking if it be true that through some technicality in the prohibitory law it is legal to sell liquor in cities in Maine—adding "some male friends declare it to be so."

It is illegal to sell liquor anywhere in Maine except in towns which choose to have "an agency" where it may be (under strict regulations) sold only for medicinal and mechanical purposes. There can be but one such place in a town, and comparatively a very few towns choose to have even this. It is true that liquor is sold in some communities in violation of law, which could not be done were the officers whose duty it is to enforce the law true to their oath of office. Every one who sells liquor in Maine except through the agency as above explained, is a criminal under the law of the state, as well as in the sight of God, and is liable to arrest and fines and imprisonment.

The "male friends" who tell such "stories" about prohibition are of the same class as the man who was sitting back of me in the cars yesterday. He was evidently an out-of-state man, giving information to the lady in the seat with him. He attracted my attention by saying, "They have a prohibitory law in Maine but I never saw so much drunkenness anywhere else; it simply makes drunkards." About this time the brakeman called out "Woodfords," and he explained to her that Woodfords was the upper end of Portland, that Portland was a pretty city, the third in size in the state, Bangor and Augusta being larger.

Somehow I could stand it no longer to see a woman thus misled, and begging pardon I said pleasantly, "You are probably strangers in Maine, but I have always lived here and so you will allow me to correct some mistakes you have made. Woodfords is not a part of Portland. Portland is not the third in size, but our largest city, and it is not a city of drunkards but of unsurpassed prosperity and thrift, largely due, no doubt, to the benefits of the Maine Law."

We can but deplore that this law, like other laws, is often violated, but the great majority of Maine people appreciate its benefits, and if the women people could have the right of franchise, no doubt it would speedily insure better enforcement. I do not believe Maine will ever take any backward step along the line of prohibition.

ANOTHER "GRACE OF COMMENDATION."

DEAR EDITORS:—Since reading some words of commendation in a late number of THE UNION SIGNAL, it has occurred to me that some of us who have little strength, time or money to give toward making the world better, may help humanity by practicing the "grace of commendation." I hope we shall begin with our husbands and children, or the immediate members of our household, but let us not stop there. I have been instructed and inspired by THE UNION SIGNAL for several years, and have often expressed my appreciation to other people, but never to the editors. Now, please allow me to say that I know of no other paper so broad and deep in its sympathies, so progressive, and yet so level-headed. I have been especially pleased to note its attitude toward the labor problem. Is not this the next step in the "do-everything policy" of the W. C. T. U.?

It is not the manual laborers alone who are suffering because of our present industrial system, but our brain workers, every class of workers, and especially the mothers and children of the workers.

Children cannot be well born and well bred until mothers are well fed, well clothed and housed and free from anxiety and overwork. Who will speak for the mothers and the children of the masses of the people? I pray God that the W. C. T. U. may not fail, in the present industrial crisis, to follow the One who said, "The spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the broken-hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised."

I have lately received a copy of "A Great Mother" and one of "The White Ribbon Hymnal." The "Great Mother" has given me a spiritual uplift at a time when I was almost overcome by doubt and discouragement. The Hymnal is one of the four best collections of hymns I have ever seen, and the best for reform meetings. It contains choice and inspiring words, choice and elevating music. I thank God for THE UNION SIGNAL, the W. T. P. A. and the W. C. T. U. IDELLA NICHOLS GARDNER.

HER CHOICE.

STRANGE, strange to herself it seemed, for a moment's time,—no more,—
As he turned to smile from his plough in sight of the cottage door,
And she smiled back, and went in under the woodbine leaves,
And sang at her work with the bird that wove a nest in the eaves.

It was not the man of her dreams, out there in his coarse farm frock,
Sturdy and firm on the earth as an oak or a lichened rock,
With an eye sun-clear in its health, and a cheek red-bronzed with tan!
No; that shadow shrank into mist, and fled from this living man.

She had shaped a pretty ideal, as a child might fashion a doll;
She had clothed it with such perfection as never Heaven let fall
On the shoulders of mortal wight; but slowly, one after one,
From her idol fluttered away the shreds by fantasy spun.

And what of him then was left? There seemed to scatter in air
An eyebrow's curve, a weak lip with a delicate fringe of hair,
And a town-bred curl of contempt for the boors who till the land,—
She shuddered, to think how empty sometimes is a wedded hand!

And this had been her first love! To her forehead rushed a flame,
As memory taunted and laughed,—the blush of a matron's shame
At her girlhood's shallowness. Ah, the poets falsely sing
That the loveliest blossoms of all are gathered in early spring.

The high sun deepens the scent and color of slow blown flowers;
Intense with the white warmth of heaven, glows earth, in her mid-noon hours;
The more life, richer the love, else life itself is a lie,
And aspiration and faith on the gusts of April die.

And—there the furrow he turned,—her husband, whose cheerful years
Looked out of his eyes with a light that conquered her foolish fears
Of the coming loneliness, when the world would be chill with rime;
Staunch friends and honest were he and his elder fieldmate, Time.

For she had not wedded a clod whose heart was earthy of earth,
Whose cattle and acres and crops were the measure of his worth;
He knew the ring of a truth, and the shape of a royal thought,
And how at integrity's mint the wealth of a land is wrought.

He labored with mind and strength, and yet he could wisely rest;
He toiled for his daily bread and ate it with wholesome zest
At the world-wide human board, the brother and friend of all
With whom he could share a hope, on whom let a blessing fall.

She had chosen a working-man; never idler at heart was she;
And her possible fate had been the fate of a homesick bee
In a butterfly's leash, driven on amid scentless and useless bloom,—
What drudgery were not bliss to inanities of that doom?

Woman's lot at the best is hard; but hardest of all to share
No growth into larger thought, no struggle, burden or prayer.
And again she caught his smile, and silently, proudly said,
"This man, with the love of my heart and the life of my soul, I wed."

A REFRESHING.

BY MARY F. BUTTS.

Mrs. Browning awoke that morning with a feeling of profound discouragement. There seemed no reason in the world why she should get up except that she was obliged to do so. There was nothing that she cared to do or be or say. To just shut her eyes and lie perfectly still for hours and hours would be so delicious, it seemed to her.

Though in happier moods she could remember much in her life that was bright and joyous, and was ready to admit that she had had her fair share of good times, yet depressed as she was at that moment, the past seemed a dreary, uphill road, and the future held no hope bright enough to tempt her on.

"How do men and women keep going till they are ninety?" she asked herself.

Mrs. Browning was barely thirty-seven, but she felt very old and worn just then, and she thought with wonder and curiosity of her aged neighbor, Aunt Thankful, who was as cheery as the sunshine. Would she, Mrs. Browning, travel the same old stupid road for fifty years more—dress and undress, eat and sleep, talk nothings with people for whom she did not care, buy gowns and boots and bonnets, and wear them out and buy more? Oh, the sickening monotony of it all!

But was there not some way out? What was the meaning of the command to live in the world and not of it? Did it mean that while the hands and the feet, the various physical organs performed the duties for which they were needed and to which they were adapted, the part that loves and hates, rejoices and grieves, the sensitive part, the soul should live in a realm for which it was adapted? And where had Mrs. Browning read this exhortation: "Come to thine own aid." She spent five minutes in idly searching her memory for an authority. It must have been Marcus Aurelius, she concluded at last. "Come to thine own aid." The soul, the regal part of us, must come to the aid of the tired, physical machinery. The soul? Is it not a part of the divine? Is it not the very child of the Heavenly Father? Why then should it not partake of this power?

From this point Mrs. Browning went on to ask: "What am I, body or soul? If I am a soul shall I be fettered by the house I live in, or shall I take the power and the privilege of souls, while using this wonderful house of the body?" Mrs. Browning arose and dressed herself. Tom, the hired boy, was building the kitchen fire. There was a sound of children's voices in the room above. The sunshine flashed cheerily in through the window-panes. A song sparrow was singing his good-morning to the world.

"Has not a woman as good a right to be glad as a bird?" asked Mrs. Browning of herself. "Have I not enough for to-day, even strength enough? Why should I look beyond? I will do what I can. I will rest all I can. I will live a real life and not a life that is half death. But that I may live in very truth I will 'come to mine own aid.' I, the woman that can rightfully claim heirship in all that God has made will not cringe to petty circumstances. I am not the servant of these things about me. I am the child that is being educated by work, by disappointment, by trial."

Mrs. Browning was making the breakfast rolls as these thoughts filled her mind. The oven was hot on time. The rolls arose to the desired point of lightness, and the children appeared on the scene. Mrs. Browning had snatched a moment to put on a fresh, light wrapper to do honor to the breakfast table.

Mamma looked so bright and pretty that little May toddled to her side for a kiss. Mr. Browning thought in his partially dessicated heart that he guessed he would ask Mary to go along to the village with him when he carried his grist that afternoon. She looked so like old times that he really felt as if he would like to have her company. All the tears in the world wouldn't have brought him to that conclusion.

Mrs. Browning had come to her own aid in a very practical way. She was no longer in her work. She was above it, guiding it, controlling it, from the vantage point of spirit. Her soul sang while her hands worked. She was no longer the servant, the drudge, but the child in her Father's world. Since she was in her Father's house what matter in what room she worked?

The ride to the mill filled a happy afternoon. The husband was cheered and uplifted. When the two returned in the cool, fragrant gloaming, the sight of home, the voices of the children, the noisy greeting of the dogs, the faces of the friendly cows pressed against the bars, all gave them a keen pleasure. They had come to life from apathy and desolateness, because a few drops from the divine overflowing had fallen upon their opened hearts. "Come to thine own aid."

THE WINE THAT CHRIST MADE.

BY J. M. COON.

The Sunday-school lesson of August 26 naturally raises the question as to what kind of wine Christ made at Cana. Some interpreters take the ground that it was intoxicating. In one lesson help it is strongly urged that the question should not be discussed; and then, with strange inconsistency, it assumes that it was intoxicating.

It is manifest that the warrant for any assumption and natural inference is altogether on the other side. Let us see what there is besides assumption. There are two possible positions—either that the wine Christ made was not intoxicating, or that conditions are so changed now that what was right then is wrong now.

The latter is a very dangerous position to take, for it introduces a variable element into Scripture that would work pernicious results in many ways. The first position is much preferable, and the following considerations may be urged in support of it:

1. The wine of the common people was largely unfermented; and the best wines were least intoxicating. 2. Freshly made wine would necessarily be unfermented. This was freshly made. Because the process is swifter than usual does not allow the inference that it was intoxicating. 3. Such an inference would require the creating of alcohol, which is contrary to the governing principle in miracles, namely, not to assume more than is necessary. 4. Many good authorities hold that this word always means unfermented wine. 5. There is a wine of health and life, and another of intoxication and death.

Can we, for one moment, believe that our Saviour would change the necessary water into a drink that would intoxicate and enslave? Rather with Dr. Henson, "we may be sure that the wine our Lord made out of water was not such as intoxicates." To suppose that Jesus Christ made a beverage with the devil of alcohol in it is unnatural, unreasonable, unnecessary, unscriptural, un-Christlike and abhorrent to every Christian sense.

DELICIOUS DRINKS.

BY MRS. J. G. HAUSER.

STRAWBERRY CORDIAL.

This is a most refreshing summer drink for the healthy as well as for invalids, and especially late in the season, when we are less familiar with the strawberry flavor. Have four quarts of strawberries in a stone jar. Dissolve two ounces of citric acid in one quart of water and pour over, and set in a cool place for twenty-four hours. Then strain and add to the liquid as many quarts of sugar as you have of liquid. Then simmer for ten minutes, skimming off all impurities as they rise. When cold it is ready to bottle. It should be lightly corked for three days, then closely. To use, stir a couple of spoonfuls into a tumblerful of cold water.

INDIA STRAWBERRY SHERBET.

One and a half pints of strawberry juice and the juice of two lemons. Boil together one pint of sugar, and one and a half pints of water for twenty minutes. Add the strawberry and lemon juice, strain and cool or freeze.

GRAPE SHERBET.

Sweeten one quart of grape juice to taste. Add one cupful of sugar to two cupfuls of orange juice, and stir until the sugar is dissolved. Add the grape juice; turn into a freezer and freeze. When nearly frozen remove the dasher and beat in with a spoon the white of one egg beaten light with two tablespoonfuls of powdered sugar. Beat well, pack, and stand away to ripen.

HOT LEMONADE.

Dr. Vigouroux recommends a glass of hot lemonade every hour, or half hour as an easy, agreeable and efficient treatment for diarrhœa.

A DRINK PREVENTIVE OF CHOLERA.

The best drink preventive of cholera, says Dr. A. S. Schofield, of London, is sulphuric acid lemonade, made simply by sweetening any amount of boiled water, and pouring in a few drops of diluted sulphuric acid until pleasant to the taste. This was not only a safe drink but a preventive.

RASPBERRY VINEGAR.

Four quarts red raspberries, vinegar to cover, let stand twenty-four hours; scald and strain, add pound of sugar to pint of juice; boil and bottle. Use one large spoonful for glass of water.

ORANGE SHERBET.

Boil together one and a half pints of sugar and three pints of water for twenty-five minutes, then add the juice of ten oranges. In the spring, when oranges are not very acid, add the juice of a lemon. Strain and cool or freeze.

LEMON SHERBET.

One pint and a half of sugar, three pints of water; boil these together twenty-five minutes, add the juice of ten lemons and strain, and cool or freeze.

COUNTRY LIVING AND COUNTRY THINKING.

Life has just one product that lasts, and that is—character. Even in this world everything else perishes, and in that which is to come character alone survives.

Probably character means adaptation to the noblest environment, and anybody who will, may win this adaptation. But the noblest environment of which we can conceive is that of truth and kindness; to be adapted to that is to have acquired the highest culture and to be fit for the best company.

But the common sense of mankind concedes that Christianity is the most complete school of truth and kindness that the ages have furnished; its text-books are the Bibles of Revelation, of nature and of the human heart, and according to the general experience of our race, the most successful students of these immortal text-books and pupils in this choicest of schools, have been of country birth and breeding. From this it follows as an undoubted conclusion, that the really high-bred people of the world are those who live on farms.

"Plain living and high thinking" is a proverb full of philosophy, and nowhere are its conditions met as in the quiet and the peace of country life. It is equally proverbial that the most original and independent characters are country bred. The men and women who forge to the front by reason of their inherent vigor in body and soul, are, as a rule, those who had Dame Nature for their nurse and "mother wit" for their guardian. We have always remembered the saying of a Parisian lady, as she watched her little girls skipping along the asphalt of a brilliant boulevard, "Poor things, how much they miss whose feet must always press pavements instead of soil!" She felt that the fable of Antinous, who from every step upon the ground derived fresh energy, had in it a great truth.

So little do we comprehend the finer forces of nature that we can not yet adequately explain why country life not only brings a bloom to the cheek but to the intellect; not only makes the smile more frank but the spirit more ingenuous. Life is real out under the great sky; the anthem of the forest utters the name of God; the rustle of the corn whispers of an unworldly life. As one of our own poets has said of the seasons,

"These, as they change, Almighty Father, these, these,
Are but the varied God; the rolling year
Is full of Thee; forth in the gentle spring thy beauty walks,
Thy gentleness and love."

It is a hard lot to be bereft of the ministry of God in the world that He has made. No amount of fashionable veneer can make up for the absence of that real grain of the wood that comes slowly but surely, as the pith and fiber to a tree, and "near to nature's heart" must ever be the method of the most genuine development.

In these days farm life has been able to take to itself much of the advantage that comes to the aggregate life of cities. We were recently in a country home, where a piano, violin, flute and guitar were played by sons and daughters; a center table held the principal magazines—The Atlantic, The Century, Harper's and Scribner's, while a great New York daily lay side by side with THE UNION SIGNAL, The Woman's Journal and The Voice. The women of that family were expert at riding and driving, tennis and golf, and we predict that they will soon be so at bicycling, while the sons were typical specimens of manly strength and beauty. The mother's flower garden was a delicious fount of fragrance and loveliness, and the golden fields and restful forest were the father's glory. Family prayers in the morning at that home were a sweet and hallowed testimony to the refining influence of Christianity no less than the virile virtues that center around the cross.

This is but one instance among ten thousand that multiply with each new year of those citadels of power and peace, "far from the madding crowd" that form the impregnable defenses of the republic from anarchy on one side and plutocracy upon the other. Heaven bless the homesteads of this land and of the wide, wide world, for in them are the hidings of power for temperance, purity and liberty, according to law.

COUNTRY HARDSHIPS.

There are many farmers' homes which meet all the conditions of ideal living—homes where comfort and luxury go hand in hand, where culture finds its richest soil and surest growth, as our leading editorial article depicts. But, in such homes, especially of late years, it is almost of necessity true that the farm is not the only means of livelihood. A farm and a bank account present possibilities of comfort unknown to any other condition. A farm minus the bank account is quite another matter. Alas, that in so many American farm homes the minus sign should dominate the plus!

We have in thought more than one farm-house known well in other years; New England farm-houses where the crops must be coaxed from stony soil; where, often, the whole of nature's forces seemed conspired to retard and destroy the result of man's patient toil. Some of them, alas! bore that most unyielding crop—a mortgage—and bore it to the exclusion of comfort and peace of mind. We remember our childish wonder at the hard conditions surrounding those lives; the early rising, with breakfast by dim candle-light; the hurried rush of the days; the numberless steps that were taken; the absolutely unremitting grind. We remember that the conditions surrounding the toil were such as to make it of necessity the hardest possible. The well seemed set, of malice prepense, at the farthest point from the house. The woodpile was a perpetual mountain of attack, and the "baskets of chips" to be brought in were simply without limit.

We remember the insatiable appetite of the harvesters, and the ceaseless thought and toil which went to its assuagement. We can see in thought the long rows of pies decking the "butt'ry" shelves; we hear the swish of the churn; we sniff again the fragrance of the drying apples and the curing hams.

We recall, with pain, the careful calculation and well balancing of possibilities which must precede any unusual outlay, though it were of the smallest. We remember one home where the parlor carpet was the result of the careful savings—"scrimpings" were the better word—of years; where a new set of dishes was only made possible by the most rigid self-denial in other directions.

We remember the difficulty with which help was secured, even when it was possible to pay wages, and we think, with a sigh, of the physical weariness with which husband and wife, sons and daughters sought their rest as soon as night declared that the toil must, for a little time, intermit. There seemed not one minute in those busy days for books, and, if there had been, there were no books for the minutes. A weekly paper was at best all that one dared in the way of mental dissipation. Music, laughter, song, the brightness of joyous leisure, all these had no place in the weary round of toil.

Why do we paint so dark a picture? Because we know that in these perilous times there are as surely such farmers' homes, and that in large number, as there are of the brighter, freer, fuller sort. The life of a farmer—a real farmer—one who himself farms—is not one of ease; the life of the farmer's wife is too often sadly lacking in cheer.

What then? We surely would not show this darker side if we did not believe that there is a possible brightening. Mortgages will not lift themselves; a living cannot be wrested from the earth without hard work and much economy; but there is a way to lop off extraneous matters in toil as well as in pleasure. For example, we would reduce that row of pies to the minimum, if we did not decree its absolute annihilation. We would set before our family good, nourishing food well cooked, but not of a nature which decrees that the cook shall be offered up, a perpetual oblation, in the cooking.

We would take out of the farm-house, and out of other homes as well, a desire for what is so manifestly beyond one's means that the economy which makes its purchase possible is a sinful economy—a cutting off of the higher for the lower. We would put in a principle which should value leisure for thought more than it values dollars or show. We remember hearing a sturdy old Scotchman once say of the farms in a certain neighborhood: "Top buggies wrecked those farms!" What did he mean? That the young men were not content to ride as their fathers had ridden, and that the purchasing of a "top buggy" before it could be really "afforded" carried with it a train of consequent acts which resulted in disaster.

There is a wisdom in spending as in economizing. The American nation, more fully, perhaps, than any other, needs to learn both. "There is that which withholdeth and it tendeth to poverty," is in no other sense so true as in matters which tend to the higher needs of life.

When we, as a people, shall count the unseen as greater than the seen; when we shall deem the ultimate end of all work to be for the spirit rather than the body, then we shall know that, whatever else is omitted from life, there must not be omitted a little leisure for books and thought; and when books and thought shall take their place as life's absolute necessities, then the industrial problem will begin its final solution, and the conditions surrounding toil and toilers will become easier, because higher and holier.

Be glad, oh, farmer and farmer's wife of to-day; in the very hardness of your life and your consequent unrest, may lie, if you will, your salvation.

SELF-DENIAL WEEK.

September 22–28 has been fixed upon as Self-Denial Week. It begins on the birthday of our First Round-the-World Missionary, and ends on that of our World's W. C. T. U. President. During that time each person (man, woman and child) who believes in the white-ribbon cause—a pure life, a protected home, a regenerated Republic—is asked to do without something that costs money in order to save and give that money to the World's and National W. C. T. U. in equal parts, to help on their work. The exact use to be made of the amount sent can be indicated if any so desire. Local unions will be furnished with Self-Denial envelopes at five cents a dozen or twenty-five cents a hundred on application to Mrs. Helen M. Barker, National Treasurer, The Temple, Chicago.

THE MUSTER ROLL.

Numbers are not all, but they are much in the peaceful war we wage. Compared with the great world, the white-ribboners will be always a sort of Gideon's band, but comparing one year with another it would be harmful to have a falling off. And yet, financial stress and distress decimate the ranks of temperance and lengthen those of the saloon. First of all, their philanthropies; last of all, their luxuries—this is the people's way.

If we are wise we shall make it as easy as possible for old members to renew, intending members to join and unintending ones to be modified in mind, this year of the tariff, the strikes and the Coxeyites. Mahomet must go to the money mountain now if ever. Its vis inertiæ was never more complete.

If we admitted members as the Christian Endeavor societies and King's Daughters do, on a voluntary fee, or on no fee at all, we should have twice the number that our books have ever shown. A ten cent admittance fee winnows an audience—of those who most need to be there! Our fifty cents a year bars out a whole army who think they can not pay—a mistake clearly, but as a woman thinketh in her heart so is she.

Some good folk have been severe upon us because we do not deem the treasurer's books the final authority as to our strength in membership. They are literalists in mental build, and literalists are an excellent class of people and most important to have about. But there are others who "believe more than they know," and to them the truth seems more important than the fact, so they insist that we should estimate as carefully as may be the women who were members last year; those who are ill or absent; those whom we have reason to think would have paid their dues had they been personally waited upon by the treasurer; in short, our "following" not afar off.

But since we base our representation in the annual meeting of each state and of the nation, on a fixed sum duly accredited, it is vitally important to us to hold our own and make substantial additions to our membership each year, and as everybody's business is nobody's, we have recently urged upon our local unions, through the state presidents, the desirability of having a Membership Secretary—a bright, genial, optimistic woman, whom her neighbors would be glad to meet, and whose invitation to "come with us" would be received upon its merits, and not discounted to the extent of the personal equation. We earnestly hope that the italicized paragraph at the head of this editorial on the preceding page may be carefully noted by every white ribbon woman. September 22 to September 28 inclusive has been set apart as Self-Denial Week, and each one of us is bound in loyalty to do without something—perhaps a pair of gloves, a book, a ride, a table delicacy—that the amount thus saved may be sent to help strengthen and extend the W. C. T. U. in state and nation. But the culmination of that week is when we ought, each one of us, to secure at least one added member, real or honorary, and to "gather in" the membership fee and give it to the local treasurer. Every officer at the Woman's Temple has promised to set a good example by doing this, and the editors desire that suggestions be sent at once for a postal card symposium on "How to make Self-Denial Week and Membership Day the success they ought to be."

Now let us lay our plans in good season and carry them out so successfully that we shall give a strong impetus to the cause, lengthen the muster roll and replenish the exchequer.

GRAPE JUICE.

There is no more pleasant and nourishing temperance beverage for all the year round use than grape juice, and this is just the time to make it, before the grapes get too ripe. It is very important that grape or any fruit juice should be put up in small cans (never larger than one pint), as it should be speedily used after the bottle is opened, lest alcohol should form. We append four recipes, all well tested, and varying slightly.

GRAPE JUICE NO. 1.

Select your grapes—not too ripe—then put them into a kettle with a little water, and slowly bring them to a scalding heat, stirring them occasionally. Then put them into a cheese-cloth bag and drain over night. Express the juice and strain through another, thicker bag, and add sugar to suit the taste; then bring to a boil, skimming frequently; bottle and cork. The corks should be long and perfect, the juice fill the bottles, except just space enough to insert the cork at first to make it air tight; then, as the juice cools press down the corks so that no space is left between the juice and the cork, or can the juice the same as fruit. If any is left scald, bottle and cork as before.

GRAPE JUICE NO. 2.

The grapes should be of the best quality. Wash them thoroughly, after stripping from the stems, and discarding any that are imperfect. Throw them into a granitized kettle with half a pint of water to every three quarts of fruit, skim when they begin to boil, and cook very slowly for ten minutes. While still boiling hot strain through a jelly-bag, squeezing the skins and seeds into a separate receptacle, as the juice from them will be apt to be discolored. Return the liquid to the preserving kettle, and after boiling half an hour seal in heated glass cans like fruit. The juice from seeds and skins may be bottled separately. It can be safely kept till grapes are again ripe, if packed in a cool, dark place. The absence of light is as imperative as the absence of heat.

If grape juice cannot be kept in a very cool place, add one cup of sugar to every quart of juice at the end of half an hour, then boil ten minutes longer.

GRAPE JUICE NO. 3.

Pick the grapes from the stalk, crush them slightly, put them in a boiler without water, and boil until the skins sink; strain the liquor three times through flannel bags (as jelly is strained), and bottle. Next morning place the *un*corked bottles in the boiler with cold water to the necks; when the water boils, cork and seal. This is a pure wine, not a syrup, as there is no added sugar. Age produces a sediment, which clarifies and thins the liquor.

GRAPE JUICE NO. 4.

Crush grapes slightly, cook for a few moments in a porcelain kettle, strain as for jelly through muslin bag. To one cup of strained juice add two of water. Bring to a boil and add one cup of sugar to one quart of liquid. Boil five minutes and seal hot in glass cans.

THE WOMAN'S SIGNAL.

We rejoice and are glad that the great home protection cause has an ally so powerful as the Woman's Signal, known by the great public as "Lady Henry Somerset's paper," but by white-ribboners as the exponent of the modernized British Women's Temperance Association. No paper of equal ability is now in the hands of English women either at home or in the Colonies. The circulation is rapidly increasing, and the paper has "come to stay." Lady Henry's versatile pen embellishes its columns every week, and her associate, Miss Annie E. Holdsworth, gives a literary touch to the paper that is unmistakable, and endears it to that great class of thoughtful women who center in the women's clubs. Our own editor-in-chief has been, from the first, an active force as a contributor, and is now announced as "Corresponding Editor." Miss Florence Balgarnie gives each week a most interesting article on the doings of Parliament, and Mrs. Sarah A. Tooley, the best specialist as a woman interviewer of whom we have knowledge, writes almost every week. During Lady Henry's absence, Mrs. Mary B. Willard, the first editor of our own UNION SIGNAL, and one of the most capable pen holders of the time, is engaged on the columns of the Woman's Signal, and Mrs. Elizabeth Wheeler Andrew, another of our editors, is also a frequent contributor. Mrs. Rossiter-Willard, the business manager, is developing a skill and ingenuity in the handling of the business department that reminds us of our own Mrs. Grow. THE UNION SIGNAL sends every good wish to the Woman's Signal. The emulation of these two great white ribbon papers will be helpful to both, and each occupies too distinctive a field to trespass in the least upon the others' territory.

"ALL round the world the ribbon white is twined," and all round the world may be heard the heroic beat of the Salvation Army drum as it rallies sinners to hear the gospel. Our foreign mail has lately been enriched by a pamphlet entitled, "The Salvation Army in France and Switzerland," a report of the work for the past year by Arthur and Catherine Booth-Clibborn. The story of the work reads like a romance, more beautiful than any fiction, all its attractions enhanced by the blessed knowledge that the tale is true. It tells how the superstitious, the infidel, the fanatic who gathered about these happy-spirited reformers to scoff remained to pray for forgiveness, and how the one gospel fits the needs of every nation and every condition of their individuals. Here is one whose "duties required him to present his compliments to President Carnot in person on New Year's morning, but one hour later he was found mounting to a fifth story in full uniform to salute the Maréchale and thank her for the marvelous change which had taken place in his soul since Christmas night." Another reached by this all-embracing gospel was "an infidel, a victim of morphine and a would-be suicide." God speed the workers and give this peaceful army victories in every clime.

JOSIAH W. LEEDS, of Philadelphia, writes: "I believe it will interest, and I hope encourage, the large number of members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union throughout the land who have faithfully labored to displace the Police Gazette and the two other vicious publications of the same stamp from barber shops, railway cars and other public places, by the substitution of wholesome reading matter, to know that the judicial condemnation, followed by the prompt orders and warning of the police authorities of this city three months ago have been thoroughly effective. Not only is not a single paper of the sort named to be seen anywhere, but the highest official in the police department testifies that endeavors to purchase them 'on the sly' have been unavailing. Formerly they were to be found in nearly every barber shop, but now the patrons who used to defile themselves with such printed filth are informed that they cannot be furnished. The inquiry is being made in many quarters, why should any city in the land tolerate this kind of indignity to womankind?"

ARREST of thought is the secret of that conviction whose legitimate climax is conversion. Human ingenuity fashions arrows of devious pattern and sends them flying hither and yon in the hope that some may pierce the armor of the soul and arrest it on its downward way. A keen little weapon that meets our notice is a business card, purporting to represent the firm of "Satan, Liquor Dealers and Co., Manufacturers of Poverty, Crime, Distress and Damnation." On the back of the card are facts showing the great success the firm is having, with thanks to government officials and voters for assistance rendered. These have been designed by Rev. W. A. Bowyer, an evangelist and temperance worker in West Farmington, Ohio, who has a whole quiver full of these unique arrows for those who will use them.

Two probable reasons of the lack of success so often experienced in winning advocates for a cause are, first, the wholesale method of approach, and, second, ignorance concerning the temperament of the individuals to be won. The Gospel may be preached to congregations week after week with but little result, but when supplemented by the personal appeal of one who is not only consecrated, but has made a study of temperamental peculiarities, it is a force not often combated. Do not take it for granted that one polite or formal invitation to your friend or neighbor will win her to the white ribbon cause. On the other hand do not test her good-nature with ill-timed and importunate appeals. There is a middle ground on which to fight this peaceful battle of voluntary surrender to total abstinence truth. Sow the seed prayerfully, cultivate it tactfully, harvest it joyfully.

Our Methodist brethren in England handled the case of "the first lady delegate" with a tact that their American confreres failed to manifest. Miss Dawson was allowed to sit with the "legal hundred" of the conference and a committee (of which our friend, Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, is one) was appointed to report to the conference next year a definite plan of action. Thus the controversy assumes definite shape and its outcome will be—sooner or later—the full ecclesiastical enfranchisement of women, for "the flowing tide is with us."

"Some of these days all the skies will be brighter—
Some of these days all the burdens be lighter,
Hearts will be happier—souls will be whiter—
Some of these days!

"Some of these days, in the desert upspringing,
Fountains shall flash, while the joy bells are ringing,
And the world with its sweetest of birds shall go singing—
Some of these days!

"Some of these days! Let us bear with our sorrow;
Faith in the future—its light we may borrow;
There will be joy in the golden to-morrow—
Some of these days!"

An account of the origin of the famous and well-nigh indispensable Chautauqua salute has fallen under my eye for the first time. During the seventies, in the early days of the Chautauqua Assembly, Professor Green, a deaf mute of Bellevue, Ontario, gave a pantomimic lecture in the grove to a delighted audience. The subject of his lecture was "Incidents in the Life of Christ." These he portrayed so vividly by means of the unique and thrilling gestures of the educated mute, that the audience frequently broke into rapturous applause. Chancellor Vincent, who was presiding, realizing that the man could not hear the applause, being entirely deaf, suggested the waving of the handkerchief. The audience quickly saw the advantage and in a trice thousands of white handkerchiefs were waving like a huge bed of blooming lilies. The adaptability of the Chautauqua salute was readily discerned, and its use is almost universal, the white ribbon assemblies being particularly partial to it.

One of the three women lawyers of New York city, Miss Katharine Hogan, delivered an entertaining lecture at Chautauqua this summer on women in law. Among many other good things she said: "There are thousands of serious women throughout our country—women who have the means and the wish to benefit their kind, but who from deficient business knowledge either remain inactive, or bestow their gifts on some institution founded for men only. If any of you, being wealthy and public-spirited, think of establishing an extra chair at Harvard for the study of Assyrian antiquities, permit me to say don't. Equip rather a little expedition of women to go through darkest New York or Chicago. Let them go through streets more dangerous at night than the jungles of Africa. Let them seek their sisters in the dives and cellars, and with words of hope let them force them into the light of day. Some one has suggested that since there is in every municipality a public prosecutor, there should always be a public defender for those unable to protect their rights. I would suggest that those women to whom God has entrusted riches should in every large city support a free bureau of legal information for the poor and wronged, and also have agents in the court rooms whose business it would be to look after the interests of women, who by the vicissitudes of life found themselves friendless and penniless in the clutches of the law." ON DUTY.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

MICHIGAN.

SCHOOLS OF METHODS.

The summer schools of methods in Michigan, as elsewhere, are the order of the day. A program of the one at Lathrap Hall, Hackley Park, is before me, neat and full. Its leading text is, "Yet, I show unto you a more excellent way"; its leader, Mrs. Morehouse.

Model lessons in physiology, model department work, model business meetings, parliamentary drills with addresses upon "Some of the Causes and Some of the Preventions of Crime," by Mrs. Kinney, and "The Industrial Situation," by Mrs. Emery, were among the good things.

Mrs. Magoon gave a practical talk on "How to Use and Distribute Literature," her closing advice being, "have method, do not distribute in an aim-at-nothing way."

Mrs. Benjamin discussed the educational group as related to the main issue, giving history of the origin of department of methods. It began in 1880 and in 1883 the superintendents were classified. There were thirty-five departments then. Besides her drills she gave an address on total abstinence and prohibition, also led the Sunday afternoon meeting in Mrs. Lathrap's absence.

Mrs. Stannard discussed the evangelistic group. Spiritual power is the mainspring of the great watch of time. It is the steam in the Corliss engine of moral advancement, the sun's rays of God's strength, the dew of heavenly sweetness. Social purity in this group was ably treated from the law standpoint.

Mrs. Parish discussed the legal group—legal because the development of our effort has led us from personal appeal to the seller and drinker to the law makers and voters. We want the ballot that we may fight the evil where it lives—in the political field.

A model union was conducted by Mrs. Morehouse; her whole plan of this school of methods, of which she was the able leader, was illustrated by a large chart, the central circle of which was total abstinence and total prohibition. The six divisions around this center were so linked with the center and with each other that it was a forceful object lesson of the dependence of all department work upon the main or central issue. One glance at this chart would put forever at rest the mistaken notion that independent department work is possible.

Dr. Stannard read a fine paper, subject, "The Effect of Alcohol upon the Stomach, Liver and Kidneys." Mrs. Merrill conducted a meeting in the interest of the flower mission. Mrs. Morisette brought her L. T. L. to the hall. Mrs. Fowler gave several exercises in physical culture. At the auditorium John G. Woolley gave an "apostolic message." The Good Templars held a diamond medal contest.

The second summer at our "house beautiful" was a glorious success. All honor to Mary T. Lathrap, whose brain has planned and helped for this outcome. All honor to the splendid rank and file who have done so nobly; it is almost our own. As this beloved worker is laid aside for a little and cannot be in the front of the battle as heretofore, comrades of the nation, pray with us.

Our editor of the Michigan Union says Michigan may well be congratulated on the two successful W. C. T. U. summer schools—her own at Hackley Park and the Bay View Institute, under assembly management. Mrs. Rounds has been invited to conduct the Bay View Institute another year. The two schools prove that we are on the up grade.

GEORGIA.

DR. CANDLER'S ATTITUDE.

Do not think because you have had no news from us, that we have been idle, or indifferent. For we have been literally "fighting the world, the flesh, and the devil;" yet notwithstanding that and Rev. Dr. Candler's threat of annihilation if we did not accede to his demand that we should secede from the National, we have managed to survive and press onward. As at last year's convention, we pledged again this year—in the face of his threat and fierce opposition—our loyalty to the National union, and have entered into new plans of work, determined to be more active than ever before. One of these plans is to inform and urge upon the women of Georgia to take advantage of the protection the law gives them against the saloons and gambling, in forbidding liquor to be sold to minors and drunkards. In some instances these protests have been kindly met with and proved effective, so we will press the movement forward.

Juvenile work received much attention and was given a new impetus by the splendid reports at the convention. One district president brought down, in a body, a large delegation, about forty-five, of Loyal Temperance Legioners, all enthusiastic, wide-awake young mountaineers, eager for the work. It was refreshing and inspiring to see and hear them. Reports were encouraging from nearly all of the unions; and where there were hindrances to much progress, there was no lack of interest or inclination to fall away in any of the consecrated workers.

The Oxford union, composed of the wives and daughters of those connected with Emory College (of which Dr. Candler is president) has suffered from his opposition, till the work of those noble women, prominent in all good works in his church (the Methodist) and well known throughout the state, has been hindered and crippled till it is now of little worth. Before he took charge of the college they had kept up a constant agitation and interest in the temperance question, delivering annual gold medal prizes for the best temperance essays, and pledging hundreds of the students to total abstinence, thus helping to spread the temperance doctrine throughout the state and into other states. God will surely call him to account for hindering so good and grand a work!

Professor Scomp, whose wife was president of the Oxford union, has been compelled to resign his position in Emory College, from the persecution he has undergone because of his refusal to withdraw from the Prohibition party and discountenance the W. C. T. U. at Dr. Candler's bidding, whose animosity to the W. C. T. U. knows no bounds, and seems to feed upon itself as it is exercised. "Platform screamers," "short-haired female agitators," "Jezebels," etc., etc., are some of the terms he chooses to denounce us with, declaring that our main object is woman suffrage; "than which he would prefer to have a saloon on every other fence corner with bawdy houses between!"

He is welcome to his preferences! It has been said by some that his fierce opposition to woman's speaking in public began with his celebrated rencontre with Emma Abbott, the actress, who arose in church to reply to his wholesale denunciation of the women of her profession. This may, or may not be, but he seems to be dreadfully afraid of woman's speaking in meeting; so much so that it appears as if he would stop the good old privilege given the Methodist women, if he could. He has made various threats against the W. C. T. U., and it was at his instigation and misrepresentation that the North Georgia conference, once our staunchest friend and supporter, refused last year to longer endorse us. Since then it has rescinded that action and again pledged its friendship.

These are some of the difficulties we have had to contend with. You can have no idea how they have tried us, unless you have had similar experiences. We are, however, not only holding our own, but progressing most satisfactorily under the circumstances, all obstacles but placing us on our mettle and causing us to draw nearer to the throne of help.

We rejoice that we have our dearly beloved and honored National President back again with us, and wish all success for ensuing work.

OKLAHOMA.

A BUNDLE OF NEWS.

Our president, Mrs. M. H. Switzer, delivered the Fourth of July address at Cherokee, one of the new towns in the western border of the territory. Mrs. Hector, of Cherokee, who had formerly been state superintendent of peace and arbitration for Kansas, met Mrs. Switzer at Pond Creek, and they started alone across an almost trackless prairie for a drive of forty miles, on the morning of the third of July which was an intensely hot day. Near the end of their journey they missed the right way and night overtook them. They wandered around for several hours calling for help; those who heard them supposed they were hearing the usual cry of mountain lions and wildcats; but these two intrepid women finally reached their destination at half-past ten o'clock. The celebration of the Fourth was under the auspices of the young people, assisted by Mrs. Hector and Mrs. Laura A. Coppock, (white-ribboners). Mrs. Switzer delivered an able and well received address, others made short speeches. An old man said "he had been attending Fourth of July celebrations for seventy years, but never listened to a better speech than our president made on that day. In the evening Mrs. Switzer organized a union with seven regular members and eight honorary. Is it not the first union organized with more men than women? She also organized a Y of seven members.

As Mrs. Clara C. Hoffman returned from the Texas state convention, the Oklahoma City and Guthrie unions prevailed upon her to deliver her logical and convincing address, "The Problem that Faces Us," in each of those cities. In Oklahoma City the members of the union met with Mrs. Hoffman in the daytime for an informal talk. She gave them useful and encouraging counsel. Her address was delivered in the opera house to a fair audience.

The Guthrie union spared neither time nor money in advertising Mrs. Hoffman as the best orator west of the Mississippi; but the twenty-five cent tickets failed to be sold. The day of the lecture the union decided to make it free, put on whip and spur, and go at it as if it was a "Derby" race. Printers' ink flew, bills were struck countermanding the twenty-five cent admission, and scattered broadcast over the city. The dailies were filled with notices, and posters put upon the oil wagons that were constantly going to all parts of the city. But the cutest of all was a little Shetland pony, with a little wagon, such as Tom Thumb used to ride in, decorated with bills and flags. A tiny boy with a drum, another as a driver, paraded the streets all afternoon, crying, "Mrs. Hoffman's great lecture free. Come out and hear her." The result of this energetic advertising was that the largest church in Guthrie was filled to hear "The Problem that Faces Us." The press of the city gave favorable comments upon the lecture. At last accounts a red-hot Republican paper was still quoting her. She was cheered by all the pastors, and many are clamoring for her return.

The grand encampment of old soldiers met at Guthrie recently. Mrs. Emma Miller carried greetings from the W. C. T. U. to the Woman's Relief Corps, and asked them that while they were keeping green the memories of the brave defenders of our homes and firesides, they would join the W. C. T. U. in keeping the homes pure, and the young men pure in body and heart and life, that they might be ready for any future crisis of their country.

The territorial recording secretary, Mrs. M. A. Copland, has been called to "pass under the rod" in the death of her fifteen-year-old daughter, Ora, who was a white-ribbon girl, and wore the emblem to the grave.

Miss Alice Beitman, who is the nominee of the Populist party of Oklahoma county for superintendent of schools, is making a vigorous campaign. She appears with the other candidates at the various rallies, is accorded time to speak, her speeches dealing with the educational and moral reforms. She is a fluent and logical talker, and great respect is shown her upon all occasions.

In Oklahoma a thrill of unspeakable pleasure ran through the loyal subjects of our great Chieftain when we knew that she was once more treading her native soil with vigor and health, and we think of her in her Eagle's Nest planning great things for the W. C. T. U. host.

NEW MEXICO.

A GLANCE AFIELD.

While some of our Eastern sisters, notably New York, are being "stirred up" over the "full enfranchisement of women," one-half of New Mexico is working itself into an intermittent fever about the questions of "statehood," "the land grant," "silver" and "wool," and a portion of the other half is anxiously trying to prevent the growth in popularity of the saloon. (Two wholesale liquor houses in Albuquerque within the past few months have gone into bankruptcy.)

In this beautiful land of sunshine, where the skies are the bluest, the flowers the brightest—where all nature unites in its efforts to make man happy, it is a constant wonder to me that he will spoil his body and distort his soul by drinking a poison which makes life here one disastrous failure, with no prospects of a better existence beyond—a victim, indeed, of his own faults, and not of the fates.

In this territory of "magnificent distances" and vast areas, (Lincoln county alone comprises as much land surface as New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, Delaware and New Jersey together) it is somewhat difficult to marshal our white ribbon forces into battle array, nevertheless each band in its own locality is patiently staking the picket lines of total abstinence and prohibition.

Albuquerque and Las Vegas have the largest unions. Albuquerque numbers about seventy members. Its efficient and estimable president, Mrs. M. P. Stamm, is untiring in her efforts to bring the cause of temperance to the front in that beautiful city of the Southwest. Their most important work is the sustaining of an orphan's home which is proving to be an undoubted blessing to friendless little ones. Professor Hodgin is wielding an influence among the school children which is having a telling effect for temperance.

Prof. Chase, for several years having charge of the Indian schools at Santa Fé, says the Indian is very susceptible to teaching in total abstinence.

Prof J. A. Wood, of Las Vegas, has planned to give to scientific temperance a definite place on his daily program.

At least two-thirds of the teachers in this territory are faithfully teaching scientific temperance.

The Territorial Teachers' Association allows, each year, a place on its program for the presentation of the temperance question.

In our pretty Meadow City (Las Vegas) the particular work of the W. C. T. U., since its reorganization at the beginning of the year, is the maintenance of a public library. Mrs. Clara Carruth leads well the little group of white ribbon women who believe that temperance is not only good, but good for something.

Right well are they striving to unfurl the temperance banner to the breezes of this Rocky mountain region; and while "society" in its gayest mood proffers to man and woman the glass of ruby wine, the W. C. T. U. woman extends to him who was created in the image of God, made a little lower than the angels and crowned with loving kindness and tender mercy, the clear, sparkling, brimming cup of Salvation from which if a man drink he shall never thirst.

OFFICERS OF THE TERRITORIAL UNION.

CONVENTION COMING.

Through Mrs. M. M. Givens I am informed that the state convention will be held at Paducah in September.

Mrs. H. L. Adams is in the state lecturing and organizing, in some places reorganizing unions. Up to August 6 she had spoken eleven times and organized two new unions and is doing very effective work for the W. C. T. U. Mrs. Adams is a courageous, faithful, steadfast worker, and more than any one we have ever seen, practically illustrates the old adage, "Where there's a will there's a way." She expects to be in the state till October, and we predict for her success. She has been in the work since the inauguration of the Crusade. Mrs. Beauchamp has also organized unions at Russellville, Pembroke and Pisgah, and several other places have been organized, by whom, I do not know, but the work goes on.

EASTERN WASHINGTON.

PRESSING FORWARD.

After the Coxey army, after the disastrous floods, after the terrible railroad strikes, the W. C. T. U. still lives in Eastern Washington, and expects to hold a live convention at Dayton, September 12 and 13.

The Whitman county convention which has just closed at Colfax, was largely attended, and one of the best ever held. Mrs. M. E. Claus, recording secretary, wrote, "Mrs. Delle C. H. Cox was especially helpful. Our convention was a season of refreshing from the Lord."

Mrs. Cox, despite many hindrances and discouragements is pressing forward and compelling victory in the name of the Lord. Her efforts in Kittitas county were greatly blessed. Several new unions were organized, which are now busy planning to hold a county convention at an early date. Mrs. Mamie F. Edgington, formerly an active W. C. T. U. worker in Kansas, is now settled near Ellensburgh, and is devoting her energy and loving thought to the development of the white ribbon cause in her town and county.

The gold medal contest recently held at North Yakima proved a triumphant success. The program was exceptionally good, and the receipts over forty dollars. This aggressive union has determined that there shall be a public fountain centrally located in their rapidly growing town and will give the city council no rest until it is a fact. Gospel temperance union meetings held monthly have filled the opera house on Sunday afternoon for nearly a year, and have proved a real blessing to the community.

Rev. David Tatum, the venerable Quaker preacher, has rendered good service to the temperance cause. He spoke in the court house square, in Walla Walla, on a recent Sunday afternoon to a large audience. His utterances gave forth no uncertain sound. If heeded and acted upon by the voters, what a reformation would speedily follow!

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

HERE AND THERE.

At the last Merrimack county convention, held in Concord, the department of securing homes for homeless children was presented in most persuasive manner by our National lecturer, Miss Lucia E. F. Kimball. It was the one interesting feature of the convention, though there were good and able papers upon other subjects by various ladies in the county. Good work seems to have been done in many of the unions, and we were glad to know that the little band of L. T. L. workers at Henniker was so full of zeal and eagerness for more work to do. Mrs. Flanders, of Warner, read a paper. In the evening Miss Kimball spoke to a full house. Her easy, attractive manner drew the attention of her audience at first; soon they forgot the speaker in their interest in her subject, which she handled in her usual masterly manner.

The heart of our state superintendent, Mrs. M. A. Calef, of Tilton, for this department, has been greatly cheered by the words of encouragement and the financial aid Miss Kimball's recent four weeks' tour has brought her. During this lecture trip she gave thirty-five lectures, besides conferences and talks. Her audiences were large, and were not confined to ladies of the W. C. T. U. Others are realizing the great need of providing suitable homes for these poor little waifs. She spoke in ten or twelve of our largest towns and cities; also at four county conventions. In every place where there was not a superintendent of homes, etc., she either found one or received the promise that one should be appointed.

NOTES.

Miss Kimball organized a Y. W. C. T. U. at New Hampton, composed of twenty-two members, many of them lady students at the institution there.

Wolfboro, N. H., has lost a valued member of its W. C. T. U. in the death of Hallie Gridley. Resolutions were passed and sent to the husband.

At the Baptist grove meeting at The Weirs the W. C. T. U. occupied the entire day Saturday, July 21. Miss C. E. Rowell, our state corresponding secretary, delivered the opening address. In the afternoon Mrs. Josephine Nichols, of Indiana, delivered an address.

The Belknap county W. C. T. U. held their last meeting in the Baptist church at New Hampton. The unions in the county were well represented and the meeting proved to be one of great interest. After these good reports came addresses from several of the zealous, earnest women of the county. Mrs. Dr. Batchelder, a returned missionary from India, gave some very interesting details of her life there. Their next meeting will be in Meredith in September.

Lakeport union is to keep a tank of ice-water in their postoffice the same as last year.

Laconia W. C. T. U. has started a library at the county farm. Meredith is using the Monthly Advices in its schools.

Tilton union has had thirteen Demorest contests—twelve silver, one gold, and are preparing for their second gold contest. They have sent fifty dollars to the Temple fund at Chicago.

New Hampton W. C. T. U. has the sympathy and coöperation of the board of education in introducing scientific instruction into their schools.

Alton union has given sixteen dollars to a needy family beside much other work.

KANSAS.

NEWS FROM THE FRANCHISE DEPARTMENT.

The white-ribboners of Kansas have no cool mountain resort where they may rest and recuperate during the season of heat and drought which is now upon us in all its strength, and, during the heated campaign for equal suffrage, they find it somewhat difficult to always "keep cool" and "sweet" under the fire of the opposition kept briskly burning by our enemies, the blaze of which is fanned by the hand of David Overmeyer, Democratic candidate for governor of the state.

His chief points of attack at all times are the "prohibitory law" and the "suffrage amendment," but not all his labored efforts will keep many of the intelligent men of his party from giving us their votes.

The Republican State Convention failed to indorse the amendment, notwithstanding the fact that Miss Anthony, Miss Shaw and our own Mrs. Johns nobly championed the cause before that august body. It was a great disappointment to many who had hoped so much from them, and it is currently reported, and generally believed, that the reason of their non-indorsement was the threat of the league of foreigners, who are bitterly opposed to it—another proof that "ballots count, not woman's tears."

The state convention of the Populists, besieged by the same suffrage committee, after a lengthy discussion pro and con, added a "suffrage plank" to their platform. What a pity they did not go still farther in reform and adopt a "prohibitory plank" also, for we find that "eternal vigilance" is the price we must pay if we retain our highly prized law upon our statute books.

When the Democratic convention assembled it was given an opportunity to redeem itself from all past charges by adopting "our plank." Naturally enough they refused to do so, instead, coming out as opposed to the amendment and asking for re-submission of the prohibitory law.

There was one political convention held where it was not necessary to plead for help to secure woman's enfranchisement; of course, I refer to the Prohibition party. We knew beforehand where it stood, where it has always stood, a champion of equal rights to all, and the firm friend and ally of the W. C. T. U. They nominated a woman, Mrs. A. Allison, as their candidate for state superintendent of public instruction.

As the campaign advances much earnest work is being done, the state is being thoroughly organized, our white-ribboners are "afield" and working with their might; indeed, we are putting a large part of our efforts in that direction, and will continue to do so until after election. Not a W. C. T. U. convention of any kind is held where the amendment has not a prominent place on the program.

The president of the fourth district, Mrs. Haynes, writes me that she traveled over one thousand miles in June, a large per cent of it by wagon, buggy or cart, speaking every day or evening, organizing campaign clubs, and making many votes for the amendment. She is a "host" in herself.

The Assemblies at Ottawa and Winfield each gave a day to the suffrage cause. It was said of these meetings at Ottawa that "not a prayer-meeting, not a normal class, not a conference passed without mention being made of woman's cause, and the all-absorbing theme was 'equal rights,' everybody and everything being decorated with the yellow badge."

Suffrage speakers are to be furnished for our county fairs, as many voters can be reached in that way who would not go to hear a lecture on "woman's rights" at any other time or place. I had forgotten to make mention of an interesting fact connected with the Democratic convention. When the resolutions committee brought in its report adverse to the amendment, Mr. Cree, one of the delegates, who deserves to be remembered by all womankind, presented a minority report, he alone being its signer.

The failure of THE UNION SIGNAL to put in its appearance for two weeks was regretted by many, proving that we would be lost without our weekly visitor; indeed, I don't see how any one can do white-ribbon work and not be a subscriber to both state and National organs of the W. C. T. U. It would certainly be very difficult to keep "in touch" with the work or workers.

Winfield union wishes it known that it is in a chronically healthy condition, has an excellent president, Mrs. Lee, enrolls twenty-five paying members, is square with the world financially and has money in its treasury. The last payment on their one hundred dollar pledge to the Temple has been paid; say they think it better to pay their debts than to let any one persuade them to dishonesty, and they hope the building will yet all be paid for by the W. C. T. U. They have also voted thirty dollars to the suffrage club, which is the banner club of the state, and numbers three hundred members.

At both Ottawa and Winfield assemblies the W. C. T. U. was given two hours each day, at which times, to large audiences, our prominent workers presented carefully prepared papers, or gave extemporaneous instruction. Mrs. Ella W. Brown, of Holton, and Miss O. P. Bray, of Topeka, ably assisted President Smith in conducting the "schools." Miss Ida Clothier, National Y organizer, was a most unexpected, but very welcome, visitor, rendering valuable assistance in her department work. Mrs. Chace, formerly president of Arkansas W. C. T. U., was also present. Miss Mary Chenowith was hostess of "headquarters" at Ottawa, and at Winfield the local union cared for all "visiting sisters." The topics discussed were: Organization and municipal government an element in reform work, by Mrs. E. W. Brown; evangelistic work, Mrs. St. John; railroad work, Mrs. Kemp; juvenile work, Mrs. Strickler; press work, Miss Bray; suffrage, Mrs. Thurston; Sunday-school work, Mrs. J. C. Reed; heredity, Dr. C. H. St. John; the cigarette, Mrs. L. B. Kellogg; the home center, Mrs. Holsinger; Christianity's woman, Rev. Edith Hill. One hour was devoted to considering what young people can do and are doing for the temperance reform, conducted by Fred Simpson, secretary of the Y. M. C. A. Mrs. St. John spoke on rescue missions.

Shawnee county held a school of methods at North Topeka. Papers were read on flower mission, social purity, Sabbath observance, press work, juvenile work, foreign work and railroad work. The subjects were all freely discussed, and much information gained for future use. The state president gave an address both afternoon and evening. The evening was devoted to suffrage, in which several participated.

Lyon and Coffey counties held a joint session of school of methods at Burlington. There were full delegations from both counties in attendance, some riding forty miles "overland," in the heat and dust, and arriving ahead of time beside. There were present President L. B. Smith, the presidents of both counties, one state superintendent and three district superintendents. Mrs. Castle, president of local union, welcomed the convention on behalf of the society, responded to by Miss McGinness, of Waverly. The pastor of the Presbyterian church where meetings were held, Rev. Mr. Barber, welcomed all to his church, while Mrs. M. M. Coman, president of Lyon county, responded. The sessions continued two full days. Mrs. Smith gave her address on "The American Boy" the first evening, and the second was a suffrage symposium, at which time a very valuable paper was read, entitled "A Review of Efforts Made for the Enfranchisement of Women," compiled by Mrs. S. L. Ruggles, of Emporia. There were also several recitations, and the reading of "Betsey and Joe." Rev. Mr. Barber expressed "conversion," much to the joy of the suffrage workers. Rev. Mr. Worrel, of Waverly, attended with the delegates from that place, and Rev. Mr. Scarrow, of Burlington, was present. Memorial services were held one afternoon for two deceased sisters of the Waverly union, while the names of the husband of one of Lyon county's local presidents, recently deceased, also the daughter of another member, were remembered in the services. Mrs. Smith fervently praying that strength might be given the living to bear their sorrow. Altogether the joint session was a great success, one regret being that Lyon county is soon to lose its president, she being obliged to leave the state on account of the ill health of her husband. Kansas cannot afford to spare such workers as Mrs. Comans.

A Demorest contest was held at Parsons, in which the contestants were six colored young women. Miss Carrie Barnes won the prize.

The state convention is to be held in Baldwin, September 26, 27 and 28.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

MRS. MARY M. CLARDY, a well-known Texas white-ribboner, is at present residing in Fredericktown, Mo., and is giving our work there a helping hand.

MRS. ELIZABETH EMERSON, of Parsons, Kan., writes: "In 'The Grace of Commendation,' in issue of August 2, Mrs. Grubb has expressed—so much better than I possibly could—my sentiments in regard to UNION SIGNAL that I send this as my indorsement of her article."

ANOTHER friend, Altie W. Phillips, of Kingsville, O., says: "I say amen to Mrs. Grubb's commendation, and would add that I find nothing so helpful as THE UNION SIGNAL in my preparation of the temperance Sunday-school lesson."

REV. DR. CYRUS HAMLIN, founder of Robert College, Constantinople, and ex-president of Middlebury College, Prof. Geo. Wm. Knox, for many years resident of Tokyo, Japan, and Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt, of national and international fame in temperance circles, are guests at Joseph Cook's summer home, Cliff Seat, Ticonderoga, N. Y.

MISS BELLE KEARNEY has accomplished a remarkable amount of work in the South this summer, although she has been ill much of the time. In five weeks she visited fifteen towns, delivered fifteen addresses, held twelve business meetings and organized three W's, four Y's and one L. T. L. She has engagements for the entire month of September in Virginia, and will attend the state conventions of Delaware and Maryland.

THE women of Maryland W. C. T. U. are to be congratulated upon their "brand new" White Ribbon Herald. As we examine it, the wonder grows how so large and so good a paper could be published for twenty-five cents a year. Mrs. Margaret A. Lake, the state corresponding secretary, also special correspondent for THE UNION SIGNAL, is the capable editor. The place of publication is 6 South street, Baltimore, Md. Surely, no white-ribboner of Maryland will fail to send her quarter for this indispensable state organ.

MR. WOOLLEY visited New Castle, Pa., last spring and gave a successful series of meetings, one of his main points being to urge the young people to take immediate action; some of the young men concluded that they had a higher ambition than loafing around street corners, and as a result the Young People's Christian Temperance Union was organized with fourteen members. To-day it has over one hundred and is rapidly increasing. This union is prepared to organize others, and all young people desirous of having such an organization in their city should apply at once for particulars to J. H. Bauman, president.

MRS. E. H. GRIFFITH, formerly corresponding secretary of the New York state W. C. T. U., and president of Monroe county, will have the warm sympathy of hosts of white-ribboners in the Empire commonwealth, when it is known that her beloved husband passed away August 18. Mrs. Griffith's present home is at 5656 Washington avenue, Chicago, but the most of her temperance work has been done in the East. She was for many years a prominent leader of our cause in Chautauqua, N. Y., and many visitors to that delightful resort will remember her pleasantly and extend their warm sympathy in this hour of bereavement.

FROM Pemberton, New Jersey, comes the following suggestion: "Mrs. Matthews, an English temperance organizer, said in a speech at the Ocean Grove school of methods, that what we needed here was 'a little more demonstration,' stating that we women got all the votes, except the Imperial vote, by demonstration. I think we have held one, but why can't we hold another National Convention at Washington, D. C.? It is the representatives of the people there, who need to be taught by our two hundred thousand women why the rum traffic is dealing such deathblows to us here in America. We hold great conventions, but the news is not read at headquarters. Let us give Congress 'a demonstration.'"

THE Dixon Chautauqua assembly is delightfully located on Rock River, Ill., near the pleasant city of that name. It was established six years ago by the Lutherans of the vicinity, but it soon outgrew denominational lines and attracted large numbers from all parts of Northern Illinois. The W. C. T. U. always has a place on its program. This year Mrs. Mary L. Brumbach, state superintendent of scientific temperance, presented her department work in an able and impressive way. A large audience attended and signified in many ways their approval of this line of work and their willingness to help push it to the front. Colonel Bain, who was one of the assembly speakers, followed with a hearty indorsement and words of encouragement.

MISS WILLARD has recently had a letter from "Temperance Jack," who is one of the first fruits of Chicago Central W. C. T. U. in 1876. The letter is written from a Montana ranch, and says: "I want to write to my old Christian friend that Jack is still true blue, though I lead a rough, wild life. Jack never closes his eyes at night before he communes with his God in prayer. In the life I lead I see daily God's wonderful works. I pray that the work of truth and temperance will still advance and prosper."

D. S. EVANS, of University Place, Neb., writes: "For weeks I have been laboring over a question that I believe the Lord sent to my mind, viz, How to unite this great body of men and women into one organization. I believe the fulness of time has come for us to unite, never more to be separated. This morning, while busy with my housework (W. C. T. U. women are generally busy), my heart was lifted to God in prayer for help; for I had tried to throw off the burden, but the Lord only sent the conviction more strongly than ever. I stopped a few moments for rest and taking up 'our paper,' THE UNION SIGNAL, my eyes rested on 'Railroad Ties,' by John G. Woolley. As I read on I almost shouted for joy. An answer to my prayer so soon. It seems as though he has taken my very thoughts and given them expression, and I want to say to him, 'Go on, brother, I am unable to express my thoughts in language appropriate, but I can pray God to help you to do this work for Him. He does not find fault if I make a grammatical error in my petitions to Him.'"

SCHOOLS OF METHODS.

On or before the 16th day of October, all reports of National Superintendents must be in the printer's hands. A few of the Schools of Methods have sent me very full account of their "doings." The majority are yet to be heard from. Will you, my sisters, in accordance with my request in THE UNION SIGNAL of July, send me at once a report of just what you did and how you did it, especially the how? Will all local, county, district and state unions report immediately all parliamentary work of whatsoever name or nature. Please say, too, if you have used the Responsive Reading for July. It would save me very much work if each state superintendent would collate and send me in best form the full report of her state, not later than October 1. All such will receive honorable mention, but as some states have no superintendent, I ask all unions, hoping thereby to at least approximate correct and full report of the work accomplished. Do not delay if you expect to be counted in in the National Reports.

Yours for results,

WORK AMONG RAILWAY EMPLOYES.

DEAR CO-WORKERS:—The date at which your respective reports must be received if they are to be incorporated in the annual report of this department is September 25. Please make Plan of Work No. 2 the basis upon which work is reported, observing carefully the order as followed therein. Work done in the interest of railway men in states where the department is not organized should be reported by local unions or workers to the state corresponding secretary immediately, with the request that the same be forwarded to the National department.

PENAL AND REFORMATORY DEPARTMENT.

May I claim a little space, not to make a frantic appeal for reports, but to remind the superintendents that I would like very full reports from all before the first of October? As in some states the prison and police station work has not been yet consolidated I shall need reports from both. I am told to have my report ready for printing for distribution at National Convention. I have sent out letters and blanks to every one, I believe, but sometimes changes are made and I am not notified. Any one seeing this notice will be reminded of her duty to her state and to me.

Cor. Secy's Notes.

The third annual convention of the Georgia W. C. T. U., No. 2, was held at Athens. The president, Mrs. Georgia Swift King, is a woman of education, refinement and exceeding perseverance in our work, and is rewarded by a union which shows appreciation of its auxiliaryship to the National union, by faithful prosecution of National lines of work, and the payment of its dues. We extend to them our congratulations and wish for them great blessing.

The annual circular letters issued by Mrs. Louise S. Rounds, president Illinois W. C. T. U., and Mrs. Emma Powers Cranmer, president South Dakota union, are models, being concise, pleasant but emphatic reminders of the duty of their constituency, with encouragement of assured blessing and success in its fulfillment.

A circular has been received from Boston setting forth, so far as printer's ink may do, the work of Mrs. Helen G. Rice, National superintendent of L. T. L. work, whose office by no means indicates the scope of her labor. While her superiority in that direction is acknowledged, she has knowledge and long experience of every department, acquired by years of service in the Central union of Boston. We heartily recommend her for public addresses, Bible readings, conferences on various phases of our work in state, district and county conventions, schools of methods and local unions. Her office of state recording secretary keeps her in general touch with the work.

A letter and program from Mrs. L. H. Mills, recording secretary Southern California W. C. T. U., tells of a most successful school of methods under her charge August 8 to 11. A prize was offered to certain contestants which was necessarily divided, the merit of two being so nearly equal as to render choice impossible. Dr. Rachel Reid, of Pasadena, and Mrs. Zeigler, of Long Branch, were the recipients.

We extend our sympathy to Mrs. Delle H. Cox, National organizer, who has been doing noble work in Washington, though compassed by floods, strikes and drought. She has suffered a severe nervous shock, having been thrown from a carriage and picked up in an unconscious state, but is again in the field and hopes to be in attendance upon the National Convention.

We are moved in the interest of our colored constituency to write of our sister, Mrs. F. E. W. Harper, who is at her home 1006 Bainbridge street, Philadelphia, Pa. A speaker of rare eloquence, pathos and power, to whom it is ever a delight to listen, we most heartily commend her as one who might do great things for her race were she called to places where unions might be organized among colored people. We have a department for the furtherance of that work, with which Mrs. Harper has been associated from its organization.

The following invitation has been issued: "The Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Indiana requests your attendance at the dedication of their Girls' Industrial School building, Friday, August 17, 1894, at Hadley, Hendricks county, Indiana." We greatly regretted our inability to accept, and have received no report of the exercises, but trust and believe that great success will attend the home. The amount of money raised this year to launch it forth has proven that there is money in the country, and Indiana women know how to secure it, themselves nobly sacrificing for the cause.

MARY A. WOODBRIDGE.

Treasurer's Corner.

The treasurer's books will close November 1. All dues should be in the hands of treasurers before that date. Let local treasurers see that every dollar of dues is collected and sent to state treasurer in ample time for transmission to the National, so that each state may have full credit on this year's books. The report must be printed for distribution at convention, November 16, and November 1 is the latest date that will give time for this.

Arkansas, South Dakota, Oklahoma and Tennessee have sent dues since last letter. Ten-cent remembrances have come in as follows: One dollar from Mineral Point, Wis., brought by Mrs. A. R. Yates, gift of ten white-ribboners; 40 cents from Alice E. Lord, Roxbury, Mass., while Mrs. Amelia Cram from Hillsboro, Ill., sends $1.60 from the unions at Farnia, Litchfield, Lake City and Brighton, all in seventeenth district.

I trust preparations have already begun for Self-Denial Day and that the women will especially invite those who are not members but are friendly, to deny self and help our good cause.

TO OUR SUBSCRIBERS,

DEAR FRIENDS:—We are receiving some notices for discontinuance which tell a piteous story of want, struggle, longings for the dear paper which is loved "Next to the Bible." To some of these sufferers we grant extension of time, and we rejoice to say that we can still provide for a few from our philanthropy fund. If any white-ribboner will add fifty cents to this fund the W. T. P. A. will agree to send THE UNION SIGNAL for one year to any one selected by the donor, or to some one from the long list waiting to be supplied from this fund.

Can you more surely advance the temperance cause than by widening the influence of the SIGNAL?

Yours sincerely,
CAROLINE F. GROW,
Business Manager.

FROM OUR CORRESPONDENTS.

"I can never lose interest in the SIGNAL and managers even if I could not have it. Since 1830 and before I have been a temperance worker (am now in my eightieth year) and must remain so as long as my Heavenly Father permits me to live. God bless you for your kindly thought of me in this emergency, and give you success in your good work."

"I have just read with tears of gratitude your kind and loving offer. It gives me fresh encouragement to press on in this, my life work, knowing now that I will have my dear SIGNAL again to help me on, and if I am able another year I shall never again be without it."

WHAT DO YOU KNOW
Of Our Responsive Readings?

Not much, we fear, or our shelves would not be so well stocked with such valuable matter.

Read the list for this year:

TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

Take heed, brethren, lest there be in any of you an evil heart of unbelief, in departing from the living God. For we were made partakers with Christ, if we hold the beginning of our confidence (faith) steadfast unto the end.—Heb. 3: 12-14.

It is a remarkable fact, and one worthy of note, that the great bulk of the money received for the Temple has come, not from our great cities but from rural districts and towns, showing that the heart of the people in the country, even among women, is more attuned to temperance and righteousness than those in large cities. If the wealthy people who count themselves among the followers of Christ, in great cities, would help with an equal liberality, according to their means, how quickly the desire of all our hearts, in regard to the Temple, would be realized.

Mrs. Hattie A. Carlton, president Grange county, O., W. C. T. U., sends $12.15 from the Burton union to be credited on Grange county fund, making in all $87.35 paid toward the county pledge. "The times are so hard," writes Mrs. Carlton, "with our little union it has to be by personal contribution that we redeem our pledge, but our prayers and heart are ever with you in your grand, God-given work." At the W. C. T. U. convention of Hennepin county, Minnesota, last May, it was voted to place the name of the worthy county president, Mrs. Frances Neal, on the Minnesota tablet in Willard Hall; $25 has been received from the county treasurer for this purpose.

The Demorest, Ga., W. C. T. U., a new union, recently held its first parlor meeting. The collection taken was $5, which was promptly forwarded by Mrs. H. E. Smith to the Temple. We hope the union will keep up its gathering until a sufficient sum is secured to place its name on a state tablet in Willard Hall. Mrs. Smith, county president, writes: "I shall push Temple interests just as fast as practicable, but Georgia is not Massachusetts. It is a pleasure to do what I can for a cause so commendable, and in which I have fullest confidence."

We call the especial attention of our brothers-in-law in the W. C. T. U. to the following letter. We ask them with most tender, sisterly regard after they have read what Mr. Wheeler has to say to go and do likewise. Charles E. Wheeler, New London, Conn., writes: "I accepted a mite-box several months since to be filled at the rate of a penny a day, for the purpose of assisting in liquidating the debt on the Temple. I find to-day that the box has not even received the first installment. Just like a man! you exclaim. I now propose to improve upon the past by sending the full amount, so please find $4; the overplus will help pay postage." If all our brothers-in-law would remember the Temple in the same way how quickly the indebtedness on it would disappear; besides, they would receive a beautiful silver souvenir teaspoon, which would make a most appropriate Christmas gift for wife, daughter or sweetheart. Brothers, aid us. Who will be the first to respond to the call?

Here is what many of our white-ribboners say. It is a well-known fact that women have generous hearts, but men hold the purse-strings. Mrs. Fannie S. Luke, East Haverhill, N. H., writes: "I enclose stamp for mite-box. I have the Columbian souvenir, and prize it highly. Now I hope when my box is filled to have a Temple spoon. If I had the money to do it with I would be so glad to pay the whole debt now resting on the Temple, and so lift the burden from Mrs. Carse's shoulders; but I have to content myself with doing the little I can, and pray God to open the hearts of those who have a full pocketbook."

Our Library Table.

HAND BOOK OF THE BIBLE. A Compendium of Facts and Curiosities. By Rev. William Turner. Published by Thomas Whittaker, 2 and 3 Bible House, New York City. Price $1.

A valuable stock of information is contained in the two hundred and more pages of this book, which Bible students of whatever grades of education will find helpful and interesting. Genealogies, chronological classifications, geographical helps and a fund of facts and statistics, carefully and comprehensively arranged, render the book a most companionable one in hours of Bible research.

THE SUNDAY PROBLEM. Its Present Day Aspects, Physiological, Industrial, Social, Political, Religious. James H. Earle, Publisher, 178 Washington St., Boston. Price $.50.

Though rather late in reaching our TABLE for review, the book itself is as timely as ever, since Sabbath desecration is a matter of increasing anxiety to those who hold dear the most sacred institutions of our country. The volume was compiled and published under the direction of the Executive Committee of the International Congress on Sunday Rest, and is composed of the papers read at the Congress. These form a valuable collection from some of the most prominent writers and speakers of the day.

THE UNIVERSAL NAME, or One Hundred Songs to Mary. Selected and arranged by Mrs. E. Vale Blake. Charles Wells Moulton, publisher, Buffalo, N. Y.

The author states in her preface that "there have been more poems written, addressed to Mary, than any other name known to literature." Mrs. Blake has made a choice selection from these poems, and the one hundred and four presented in her unique little volume are as varied as doubtless were the bearers of the sweet, old-fashioned name, and many of them as rarely beautiful.

HOME TALKS ABOUT THE WORD, For Mothers and Children. Emily Huntington Miller. Cranston & Curts, Cincinnati; Hunt & Eaton, New York. Price $1.

It is seldom that writers succeed in so presenting the story of Jesus as to make the recital truly beautiful, but Mrs. Miller's grace and force of pen have even been enhanced in handling the sacred theme, and whether mothers read aloud, or children's eager eyes pore over the old story, it will carry with it its own blessed influence for love and truth. The book is an outgrowth of a series of papers published at one time in the Christian Union based upon the International Sunday-school lessons.

LEGAL STATUS OF WOMEN IN IOWA. Compiled by Jennie L. Wilson, LL.B. Published by Iowa Printing Company, Des Moines.

A most readable and very valuable volume is the above, and on laying it down the natural thought is, "There should be a corresponding volume in every state." The first chapter is devoted to a synopsis of common law, and the reader cannot but rejoice that the day has come when woman is no longer "so absolutely and entirely one person with him (her husband) that she had henceforth no life in law apart from him." There is no longer bliss attached to the ignorance of woman concerning her legal status, and the women of Iowa, at least, are happy in the possession of a well-written and reliable reference book concerning themselves. A marginal, topical arrangement, together with an exhaustive index, renders the finding of specific points an easy matter.

GRANDPA'S WAY.

My grandpa is the strangest man!
Of course I love him dearly,
But really it does seem to me
He looks at things so queerly.

He always thinks that every day
Is right, no matter whether
It rains or snows, or shines or blows,
Or what the kind of weather.

When outdoor fun is ruined by
A heavy shower provoking,
He pats my head and says, "You see
The dry earth needs a soaking."

And when I think the day too warm
For any kind of pleasure,
He says, "The corn has grown an inch—
I see without a measure."

And when I fret because the wind
Has set my things all whirring,
He looks at me and says, "Tut! Tut!
This close air needs a stirring!"

He says, when drifts are piling high,
And fence posts scarcely peeping,
"How warm beneath their blanket white
The little flowers are keeping!"

Sometimes I think when on his face
His sweet smile shines so clearly,
It would be nice if every one
Could see things just so clearly.

THE TEMPERANCE FARM.

BY ADA M. MELVILLE.

Pine Tree Farm was one of the most beautiful places in all the state of Wisconsin. "One can't help being at least half-way good here," they said. "They" stands for the children who lived there and they were seven,—Claire, Andrew, Warren, Mamie, Helen, Jefferson and Etcetera. Rather a queer name that was for the youngest, but Amanda, her proper name, had scarcely been heard since some one called her Etcetera in fun when she was very little.

There are dozens of good stories that could be told about these jolly boys and girls, but this time there is only room for one and that must be about how they distinguished themselves at the county fair last year.

First you must know how Pine Tree Farm came to be called a temperance farm. It was a very large place and its nearest neighbor was seven miles away "by the road." There was not a saloon nearer than ten miles where the little town of Cottone was, and it was there that Claire had once seen a drunken man and Andrew had seen one man shoot another in a drunken fight. Now, Mother Pine Tree (that was not their mother's real name, of course, only a "pet" name), had always worn a white ribbon, and every one of her seven children from Claire down to Etcetera had signed a pledge never to touch, taste nor handle alcoholic drinks.

"You may not be tempted nor even invited to drink strong drinks, but if you are, the pledge you signed with father and mother will help you."

The summer before all the happenings related in this story, the children begged Mother Pine Tree to organize them into a temperance society. At first it consisted of just the seven and they called themselves in fun, "The Young Ones' Temperance Society," but one by one they reinforced their numbers until the circle included every "hand" on the farm, Mother Pine Tree being president and Father Pine Tree, treasurer.

"We don't need a secretary, because we won't want to be writing all about ourselves, and we don't need any other officers than mother,—whatever she says we'll do."

Well, they did lots of things; saved two boys who worked for them in harvest, and who had learned to drink and were fast ruining themselves; kept a little mission Sunday-school in Cottone supplied with temperance literature; sent many a box of fragrant flowers away to the city for flower mission work, and for themselves read and studied about the great evil of intemperance.

This summer they had a new scheme on hand, and that was to carry their temperance principles and practices to the county fair and see how much they could do to "down" King Alcohol. They spent every spare minute getting ready, and when the time came for father to carry the first delegation away (for they were to take turns in attendance) there was much excitement.

"Sure you've got enough lemons, Andie?" "Are the flowers in a safe place, father?" "Oh, Claire, do watch out for the pies and don't let Etcetera get her feet into them!" But at last they started safely, and reached the grounds in good time.

Andrew's lemons were for two lemonade stands—lemonade at only three cents a glass (since Mother Pine Tree donated the sugar), and a temperance tract to be given away to each customer.

"We won't make much money at this," grumbled Andrew, but Etcetera looked at him reprovingly out of her big, brown eyes and said: "I thought mother said you'd make sentiment."

"All right, Etcet, here goes for making good temperance sentiment—lemon-ade—here's your fine lemon-ade—only three cents a glass—come on now!"

Claire was stationed behind a three-cornered shelf on which were arranged the daintiest of all dainty bouquets, each one knotted with white ribbon, a text-card attached. A placard bearing this announcement explained the nature of the business:

"The Pine Tree W. C. T. U. is selling these flowers so they can send flowers and fruit to the city hospitals."

"Since when have you folks been a W. C. T. U.?" asked the farmer's wife who was their seven-mile away neighbor, "and who all belongs?"

"We all belong, just now," answered Claire, "but mother means somehow to make it take in you folks, if you will, and more. It began with us children first, then mother said there were enough of us, counting every one on the farm, to make a real society, so we've sent in our dues and now we're 'in it.' You'll join, won't you?"

"Maybe I will. Sam's got to going into Cottone too much for my liking lately. How much is your posies?"

"Only a nickel,—say, take this one to Sam; he and I used to be good chums."

But where were the pies all this time? Etcetera's father had charge of an exhibit, and seated by a table near him, prettily dressed in white, was the little girl. The table was covered with a white cloth and on it were displayed such pies as only mothers of hungry children can make! They had a sign over them, too, and it read this way: "If you would like to help Pine Tree Farm W. C. T. U. make the world better, buy a temperance pie." At the foot of the card was written in a child's hand, "I picked all the berries."

You would have thought every one wanted to help "make the world better," for Etcetera's pies sold "like everything," as she said afterward, and many a big farmer refused the change she carefully counted out for him. It was buzzed all over the grounds that the Pine Tree Farm (which had the best exhibits, and took the largest share of prizes on the grounds) had "gone temperance," and they were deaf or blind people who did not hear or read something about W. C. T. U. work.

Yes, Sam got his posy. He had had a drink of lemonade at Andrew's stand, too, but he would not take the leaflet offered to him. "I've had enough preaching for one day," he said, and showed the text-card which had been on the flowers Claire sent him.

"Better go over and see Claire," said Andrew. "She's been hurt because you've sort of neglected her of late."

So Sam went, and he was glad he had been drinking lemonade instead of beer. Claire gave him the heartiest welcome in the world and asked him to stay and sell her flowers while she paid a visit to Etcetera for a few minutes. Can you think how he felt? But he stayed, and he had to stand a good many sharp words from those who knew he sometimes drank in Cottone's saloons. It did him good, however, and made him think.

By and by Claire came back and began telling him all about the work done at Pine Tree, and before he knew how to get away she was urging him to sign the pledge. He waited a long time, and then said: "I'll sign it if you'll find those words in the Bible. I don't believe they are in it," showing her the printed text.

"Why, Sam, I thought you knew the Bible better than that. Yes, I'll find them. Mother put her Bible in my bag this morning; she said I'd need it. There it is, Sam, Proverbs, twenty-third chapter, from the twenty-ninth to the thirty-second. Sam,—isn't it all true?"

"Yes, Claire, it's true—I wish I did not know how true. Here, I'll sign, and I'll know what's in the Bible after this, too!"

If you should visit Pine Tree Farm now, you would find one large room entirely given up to W. C. T. U. work. Flowers and fruit and fresh vegetables are packed there to send to city hospitals and missions; meetings are held there in fine weather, attended by all who are near enough to go; Andrew has a printing press, and he and Claire and Sam print the Farmer's Temperance News, which has a large circulation. Cottone only has one saloon now, and the owner says "he thinks of selling out—too much temperance."

And all this because a family of boys and girls did all they could to make the world better.

Chicago, Ill.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—Packing my "grip" and bandbox one bright summer day not so very long ago, and leaving some big envelopes marked "Our Children," your aunt slipped away from her Cozy Corner for a little outing—even aunties need a vacation, you know! You didn't miss me, I am sure, for there are other aunts just as interested in you as the one who signs her name in this column each week, and they took care that you lacked for nothing.

I can't begin to tell you of all the pleasant times I enjoyed; first in that happy summer assembly on Lake Chautauqua and later at lovely Skaneateles lake, in the country home of Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, a lady who loves children just as dearly as she does the older young people whom she leads in temperance work.

While skimming over the broad farms and stopping at the villages on the route, I rejoiced to see the children at the doors of the farmhouses and in the fields—the happy country boys and girls who own such vast quantities of Nature's wealth—for it is a great fortune in itself to have been born and brought up on a farm.

I wondered if any of those I saw were Cozy Cornerers and my ears were "pricked up" to hear an "Hello! Aunt Jane" to show that I was recognized. I did hear it once from the lips of a Philadelphia niece who was in the same Chautauqua cottage, and who has promised to write the Cozy Corner about her good times.

In a later letter I will tell you about the children at Chautauqua and how they spend the summer time.

Your

NEPHEWS AND NIECES.

As I have never seen any letters from here I thought I would write one. In our L. T. L. we have sixty members enrolled. Our leader's name is Mr. Preston. We have concerts every little while and have very good times.

Battle Creek, Ia. MABEL BUSH.

Of course you have good times with a good leader. We hope your Legion will grow to one hundred next winter.

I would like to join your Cozy Corner. I am a little girl of about eleven years. My mamma takes THE UNION SIGNAL and I like to read the Cozy Corner letters. I have but one sister and five brothers. They are all far away from home except two brothers. Please write to me.

Waubeek, Ia. CORA BELL ABBOTT.

Some one of our Circle who is proficient with her pen will see and answer your request for a letter, little niece.

AN interesting case in court just now is the bill of Attorney-General Moloney against the Pullman palace car company. Some time ago this attorney instituted quo warranto proceedings against the Pullman company for exceeding its charter privileges in manufacturing and selling articles that do not pertain to its business. Now he proposes to deny in court its chartered right "to peddle drinks" in cars. The Pullman "saloons on wheels" return a large revenue to this corporation and we are delighted that the Attorney-General has undertaken to carry this infringement of the charter to an ultimatum. His petition comprises twenty-one pages.

OUR National President, with her guest, Lady Henry Somerset, visited Chautauqua, N. Y., three days last week. They were present on Grand Army Day, August 25, when a remarkable oration on Abraham Lincoln was delivered by a young minister, Rev. S. Parkes Cadman, and Wallace Bruce recited his fine poem written for the unveiling of the great emancipator's statue in Edinburgh, Scotland. Bishop Vincent, replying to Miss Willard's inquiry, said he should be glad to arrange for a National W. C. T. U. school of methods at Chautauqua in 1895, and this was accordingly agreed upon. Our leaders did not speak as Lady Henry is under pledge to her British comrades to do no public work, but their three days' study of the famous Christian camp of new ideas was highly profitable.

IN this issue begins a short series of selections from that wonderful book, "More than Kin," by James Vila Blake. He calls it "A book of kindness—things gotten of life and fostered of thought, in which the author is more obliged to a dear and noble other one than to his own wit." In style it carries the quaintness and tenderness of George Herbert, but for wisdom and life-giving its words were traced with the very blood of Christ. It is the most all-compelling incitement to simply "Be good," the most delicate perception and expression of the eleventh commandment modern thought has yet acquired. If every pulpit were fired with a holy zeal to so possess and dispense a law of "true religion and undefiled," men would soon "know the Lord." The "Master, I will," that this little book forces from every reader makes us long to put a copy in everybody's hand. The "new earth" we hope for—so distantly, and reach out for so yearningly, after the Bellamy, the Henry George, etc., ideal, is not far away if we would all learn truly how "kind is more than kin."

So long as reform views are held merely as theories they excite no opposition, but when, in view of the terrible labor and financial difficulties of the world, the advocates of a reconstructed society begin to urge their doctrines with earnestness, they arouse at once the anger of those whose maxim in life is "hold fast all that is old." Nothing else could be expected, for any radical change in existing conditions, however beneficial the change may be when made, involves during the transition period inconvenience and loss, and, to a few, permanent injury. Human nature is selfish and ease-loving, and prefers to endure present ills rather than the discomfort and annoyance incident to change, especially when the change will benefit others rather than themselves. The greater the privileges enjoyed by any class the greater will be the opposition of that class to any modifications of the existing system. In the present case, the opposition of those who have secured the prizes in our present civilization can be expected to grow more bitter and more violent in proportion as the development of events and the growth of public sentiment threaten them with the dire prospect of general progress. We are in a crucial period. Changes as great as any the world has passed through are before us, and the social reformers of to-day, like all who have preceded them, will have no pathway of roses.

THE Labor Commission appointed by the President, after fourteen days' work at Chicago, adjourned August 30, to meet in Washington, Wednesday, September 26. The public is satisfied with the eminent fairness displayed in the method of investigation—the American Railway Union, the railroads and the Pullman Company having, by request, each suggested their own witnesses before the Commission. Evidence was taken in one hundred and seven cases, beginning with Mr. Debs, president of the American Railway Union, and ending with the mayor of Chicago. The day-laborer and the millionaire had an equally patient hearing, and valuable testimony has been skillfully elicited with little verbiage. The main special results of the investigation seem to be, first, the proof that the destruction of property during the strike was not at the instigation of the railway managers, as was freely charged, but was the work of the irresponsible mob-element always present in times of disorder; second, that the American Railway Union not only advised against violence, but sometimes helped to quell it, and did not sanction the few individual cases of unlawful acts by strikers; third, whatever may be the right of capital to protect itself, and to conduct its business for its own interests, there will always remain in the public mind the damaging testimony of the Pullman Company that it has acquired since its organization a $25,000,000 surplus, besides an average annual eight per cent dividend paid to stockholders, while the amount paid to its workmen in the same time has been but $32,000,000, and with this condition existing hundreds of striking Pullman employés have been rescued from starvation by public charity. A general result of the Commission's work is a recognition by the public that there is a controversy between capital and labor, and that it must be settled on the principles of justice to both and favor to none before there is quiet and prosperity in this uneasy land. Another result is a general trend of public opinion toward the settlement of contests between the corporation and labor elements by arbitration, in all questions which affect the general weal, and toward the government ownership of railroads; a broader realization of the justice of profit-sharing by the producer in the surplus produced, and that corporations should bear their full share of taxation. But a chief gain is the direction of public attention to the necessity of devising some method of adjusting economic and social questions without anarchy from labor and oppression from capital. The report of the Commission will be awaited with more than interest. It has performed a valuable service and the country hopes it will have equally valuable suggestions to make. In concluding its work the chairman, Hon. Carroll D. Wright, stated that at its Washington session "the Commission will be glad to receive in writing any suggestions as to the solution of questions involved in the late controversies. It will at that time hear any parties who may desire to be heard relative to the facts involved, and it may, after a careful examination of the testimony which has been offered at this hearing, conclude to call further witnesses to supplement any testimony which has been given on either side." There is no evil under the sun for which there is not a remedy, if the nature of the disorder is perfectly understood. Our faith in the ability of the American people for self-government is so fixed that we look confidently for such an unprejudiced and discriminating study from all sides of our social diseases, that the cure will yet be found in a white-souled as well as a white-faced ballot. As the individual's, so the nation's eternal life depends on the evolution of its powers of self-government. In a fully developed democracy the weal of one is the interest of all, and under it industrial liberty must come. The governments of the earth must thus demonstrate that the religion of Jusus Christ is the just religion.

A COMMON LOT.

BY MRS. S. L. OBERHOLTZER.

I hear a wail on the midnight,
The burden of child-bed pain;
Released, the child and the mother
Lapse into silence again.

I hear the prayers of the mother
Ascend for the boy she bore,
While her other children wonder
What blessings are still in store.

I see her nurture and follow,
With love that is half divine,
The boy and his restless struggle
Her vision cannot define.

I hear a moan on the midnight,
The ache of a thousand tears,—
The heart of the mother is breaking
With disappointed years.

The boy laughs out with the reckless,
But his feet are on her life.
I see from the tangle of birthright
This matricidal strife.

I hear the wail of the orphans,—
The neighbors wonder apart.
But the boy, he knows—and the angels—
She died of a broken heart.

MISS LUELLA JENKS' INTERFERENCE.

BY ELIZABETH CUMINGS.

(Concluded.)

"It was dreadful, no mistake, when we got up there to the track. There was Ezra as limp as a rag, and not knowin' a thing, and when I got to him th' first thing I noticed was a great roll of money a-stickin' out o' his vest pocket. Without thinkin' I took it and clapped it in my own. But he wan't broken as Lem said, only dreadful stunned, and the doctor said it was a wonder his head wan't split open, being flung so, for the colts had turned the buggy quicker'n a wink 'a-shyin',' they said, at an I-talyun with a lot o' toy balloons outside the fence. But they acted real good for they didn't run, only turned, and if Ezra'd had all his wits about him no harm'd been done, but what with the cider and the rest, he wan't himself, and out he went as if he'd been pitched out.

"He lay like a log all that night and well into the next day, and when he did come to, he didn't sense anything or know himself, and the doctor said he might be that way for some time, and Villa, she says to me, 'What on earth shall I do?' It come to me in a flash, and sez I, 'Fix over the house with that money he was going to spend a-buying the wheat lot an' the press. The doctor says he won't be fit for heavy work for a long while, and his farm is plenty big enough.'

"It took a sight of talk to bring her 'round, but at last, seeing as she was going to have everything in doors and out to look after, and must save herself steps, she let me persuade her, and I did the running, and inside of a month we had soft and hard water right in the kitchen, and a drain laid so it would carry the waste just where it was needed, and north windows, and a wide back porch, and a slat summer kitchen at one end of it with a great, big gasoline stove of the best make.

"We had an ice-house put up, too, and I drove to Zoar and bought a sewing-machine and lots of granite ware, and I made Lem Snow move the pig-pens away from just behind the kitchen to the rear of the barn, and I had the rooms over the wood-shed fixed for the hired men, so Villa could put up a quilt if she wanted to in the wide room over the kitchen, and work at it as she had time."

"Well, Luella Jenks, and what did Ezra say when he come to himself, and found it all out?" asked the mother with evident admiration of her daughter's cleverness.

"He didn't say anything at first, but just looked and looked, and he sometimes didn't look pleasant, but one day when I give him a dish of ice cream, he said to me kind of humble-like, 'It ought to have been done before, Luella. I expect it was you who interfered.'

"'Yes,' sez I, 'Ezra Gibbs, I interfered, and it was time. If Villa's only my step-sister, she's all the sister I've got, and an awful good woman, and not made out of cast steel, either. But more ought to 'a' been done.'

"'I s'pose you run out of money,' sez he, his voice grating like a pencil on a slate.

"'No,' sez I, 'we had some left. But what we want done is to stop this sampling of stuff that addles the head at the fair. It may be against the law to sell liquor outright, but you got something.'

"'Luella, I'm not going to make a drop of cider,' said he after a long pause. I guess he didn't want to tell what he got. 'There's been a long time I could think by minutes, then things would slip away. Cider vinegar is a good thing, and I could sell it, but the stock need the fruit, and if we don't have cider around,—why, there won't be any temptation,—and I'm going to try to take more comfort.'

"Sez I, sharp like, 'You always did. It's been Villa that's had no comfort.'

"'I meant Villa,' sez he. 'I'm goin' to hire help hereafter. I've seen a good deal since being in the house so much, and I'm not going to buy any more land.'"

"Well, I guess it's paid for you to go out there and stay eight months though it has seemed long to me," said Mrs. Jenks meditatively scratching her head with a knitting needle.

"Time will tell," said Miss Luella. She held the blue muslin before her an instant then hung it on a convenient hook, for it was ironed.

"Ezra will always be Ezra, of course, but he can't undo what has been done, and I really believe that fall on his head has improved him."

Again a chuckle shook Mrs. Jenks so her vast bulk trembled like a jelly bag. "I don't know," said she shaking her head, "unless his old maid sister keeps up her interferin'."

THE SALOON IN POLITICS.

An English Parallel.

II.

BY JAMES WHYTE.

Secretary of the United Kingdom Alliance.

It is obvious enough that all the evil influences (recorded in last article) to which the publican is subjected strengthen, support and intensify each other. Shakespeare speaks of a man's nature being "subdued to what it works in, like the dyer's hand." We have seen what the saloon-keeper works in. Can he, alone among men, "go upon hot coals and his feet not be burned"? Have the ordinary laws of causation been abrogated in his favor? If not, what manner of man must the average publican be? That is a question worth returning to again and again; for, as has been said, he is what the "trade," as it exists and operates under the licensing laws, has made him; and, "with all his imperfections on his head," he has had confided to him, as a means of making a living, the mightiest instrument for the production of sin and misery that exists in this country.

Now to affect to believe that, with their "all" at stake, men of such a character, and so placed, will not act much more corruptly in electoral matters than their neighbors who are not so deteriorated and have no such temptations and inducements to wrong-doing, is sheer hypocrisy.

Of course, there are exceptions to all such rules as those in question. There are doubtless some retail liquor-dealers who may compare not unfavorably with their neighbors. But what is dealt with is the class as a whole. And, further, what has been said of the publicans and retail dealers is not intended to apply to all the persons connected with the trade. Wholesale dealers, liquor grocers, keepers of hotels properly so-called, great wine merchants and brewers and distillers, are much less frequently brought into personal contact with the grosser horrors of the traffic than their dram-shop brethren; and this saves them from so much personal injury. They are, as the registrar-general informs us, healthier in body, and as we may ourselves infer, also in soul, than the unfortunate retailers. Of the "aristocracy" of the trade, who themselves do not come much into contact with "the drink," a not inconsiderable proportion are unquestionably "respectable," some in the conventional sense of the term and others in its real sense. It is unnecessary to add that these are likewise, as a body, rich, many of them remarkably so; or that their riches and respectability are the refuge and strong tower of the trade.

These wealthier ones are sometimes princely in their munificence. They build churches and chapels and restore cathedrals. Grateful municipalities receive gifts of libraries or picture galleries or parks from their generous hands. They buy great estates and build magnificent houses. They give banquets of the most sumptuous description and balls of oriental gorgeousness. Christian work, too, in the form of missions, either to home or foreign heathens, receives much of their countenance and support. They are, besides, the pillars of many churches; and, too often, through their influence, the ministers are dumb on the evils of the drink traffic. In politics they are often "inner circle men," whose words are words of power, and whose giving or withholding of the necessary check makes or mars the candidature of many a man. And there is good reason to believe that it has been while shooting or fishing with some great brewer or distiller that politicians have come to realize the utter futility of Sir Wilfrid Lawson's (or some other great temperance advocate's) proposals. It is to a great extent because of all this wealth, all this magnificence, all this open handedness and all this respectability, that the trade has so many religious, respectable and other highly desirable and influential apologists. For, as Bassanio says:

"The world is still deceiv'd with ornament.
In law, what plea so tainted and corrupt,
But being season'd with a gracious voice,
Obscures the show of evil? In religion,
What damnèd error, but some sober brow
Will bless it, and approve it with a text,
Hiding the grossness with fair ornament?
There is no vice so simple, but assures
Some mark of virtue on its outward parts."

It is a portentous fact that this huge drink interest is in substance a great political party, whose ground of union is the defense of the privileges and monopolies of the trade. It boasts that it can make and unmake governments; a combination of holders of law-conferred privileges—which are peculiarly liable to abuse, in fact, are constantly being abused, to the great detriment of the community—boasts that it can, at will, set up one government and set another down. This party commands enormous wealth, and has, besides, under its control the most powerful and efficient engine of corruption in existence—the public house. And it is itself corrupt through and through. Political corruption consists, does it not, in the selling or bartering of political support or influence for private gain? Under all its forms and disguises this is its very soul and essence. The drink party, therefore, in so far as it is political, is utterly corrupt. Indeed, the political point of honor of its members is that they shall vote, when their own privileges are in question, in support of their interests irrespective of party convictions or political objects; in fact, that they shall vote corruptly.

Here is an incident, by no means of the worst sort, which exemplifies the manner in which liquor men, as politicians, are influenced by their trade. Mr. Hugh Hoare, M. P., a Liberal and a brewer, who, it appears, had voted for the second reading of the Budget Bill, found it necessary to send a letter to the publicans' paper, the Morning Advertiser, virtually apologizing for having done this. The character of his apology reveals the rigidity of the control exercised over its members by the party of "our trade, our politics." "What we want," wrote Mr. Hoare, "is that the proposal" [as to the 6d. per gallon on spirits and the 6d. per barrel on beer] "should be withdrawn altogether. If this is not done I shall vote against it and resign my seat." Could anything more clearly show his conviction that his first duty is to his trade? He will vote, he says, against the bill and then resign his seat. In the name of common sense, if there is occasion for resignation why should it not take place before he casts a vote of a character to demand that, because of it, he should resign his seat? He has very obviously no sort of right to so misrepresent those who elected him as to cast a vote in the interests of his own trade, which he knows ought to cost him his seat.

He goes on: "The budget contains two valuable provisions in the interests of the trade; first, the graduated death duties. These will bring in four millions annually from a class who can afford to pay,—namely, the rich. This constitutes, it is plain, a substantial barrier against the further taxation, in future years, of an already overburdened trade." Here, plainly enough, Mr. Hoare has the trade and nothing but the trade in view. He proceeds: "The second valuable item in the present budget is the increased abatement in the income tax on incomes not exceeding five hundred pounds a year. There are comparatively few licensed victuallers who will not benefit from this. Even with the tax at 8d. they will pay less than they do now with the tax at 7d.; and, when the penny is taken off again, the gain will be more apparent." Here, once more, we have the trade and nothing but the trade. Yet again, he writes: "It may be added that the budget, in increasing the taxation of the rich, prepares the way for further reducing, in years to come, the taxation of the working classes, who, in my opinion, are taxed far too highly. It will make possibly a reduction in or an abolition of the duties on such necessities of life, as sugar and tobacco, not only for a year, but permanently, thus increasing the spending power of the classes on whom the trade mainly depends for its living. To defeat these parts of the budget, therefore, would be a very great calamity for the trade." There really seems to be no ground for charging Mr. Hoare with having done anything whatever for the public. His vindication of himself seems complete, and it may be taken that he has clearly demonstrated that all that he did with reference to the budget was done in the interest of the trade, and nothing whatever in the interest of the public. Commenting upon Mr. Hoare's action—the Morning Post says sympathetically: "He is setting an example which we are convinced only needed to be set to be promptly followed; and there seems good ground for hoping that the trade is returning to that unity which must make it irresistible."

But here is the difficulty which temperance reformers are bound to face fairly and squarely. "The publican in politics," it is argued, "may, indeed, be a great evil; but his being there is not of his own seeking. The evil, such as it is, has been caused by the temperance fanatic. All that the publican desires is to be let alone, and to be permitted to attend to his own business. The temperance party, by its meddling, has compelled him to go into politics to defend his own interests, which are being constantly imperiled by projects of legislation promoted by the temperance party." And it is asked, "Why not leave him alone?" Now, the fact is, it was not the temperance fanatics, usually so called, who brought the publican into politics. This was done by "practical" men, with woefully little of what is designated "fanaticism" about them. The licensing system, as it at present stands, is mainly the work of these men, and that system has come into existence almost exclusively with the object of safeguarding the public against the more clamant and obvious of the evils which the sale of intoxicating liquors in the community always brings. The system is a network of restrictions on the freedom of action of the liquor-seller; and it was with the object of minimizing such restrictions that the liquor-sellers, as such, meddled with municipal and parliamentary matters. Their interference in politics is as old as the licensing system. But for generations their influence was used to repress the reforming zeal of both of the great political parties. And, ever since elections began to interest the general public, the liquor shop has been the chief instrument as well as the chief vehicle employed in the corruption of the electorate of the country. Hence, the keepers of such places have gravitated to the side of the politicians who have availed themselves most fully and most frequently of their corrupt help; and those who have desired purity of election have from time to time endeavored to curtail the abuse of the privileges of the saloonists in relation to electoral matters. It is, however, true that those who are usually designated "temperance fanatics" have been chiefly responsible for forcing the Liberal party to take up the position which they now occupy with respect to the liquor traffic.

But the point as to who is responsible for bringing the publican into politics is of but little practical importance. He is there now, and is likely to stay for a time. What is really of moment is to determine whether he can be let alone, and if not, to what extent he must be interfered with. The conflict between the temperance party and the liquor interests is an irrepressible conflict which is being waged with increasing vigor and fierceness on both sides, throughout the whole of Anglo-Saxondom. And not only in English-speaking communities is this war raging, but in many others. In Scandinavia, Switzerland, Holland, Belgium, Germany, and even in Russia, the struggle has been begun and continues with more or less of energy and determination, year in and year out. In fact, the movement for restricting or abolishing the drink trade is one of the most widespread of all the movements which are specially characteristic of the present age.

SOME OF OUR WOMEN.

I.

Ella G. Ives.

BY FRANCES E. WILLARD.

The readers of THE UNION SIGNAL have been regaled from time to time with short bits of verse, and now and then a sonnet, which must have remained in the minds of the more thoughtful by reason of the comprehensive character of the matter and the skill and charm of the style.

Miss Ella G. Ives, whose name has thus become familiarized and endeared to a great group of good women in many lands, is a native of Bridgeport, Conn., but was reared in New Haven, the seat of Yale College, where she was a pupil in Miss Lindsley's private school, going from there to Mount Holyoke College, from which she graduated with distinction, and immediately began the career of self-discipline and training that can be had only by a first-class American school-teacher. The high school in New Haven—one of the finest in the nation—was the scene of her first efforts; from there she went to Chicago, and became principal of the Oakland School, and afterward associate principal of Dearborn Seminary, that famous school for girls, which has sent out graduates that are now central figures in the really "best society" of the great city by the lake.

The success of Miss Ives in all of these positions resulted in a reputation so genuinely good that her services were sought by some of the best educational institutions in the country; but though so eager and aspiring in spirit, she was not physically strong, and has had the wisdom to gauge her work and health so that she has uninterruptedly maintained her high standing as an instructor, though in more quiet surroundings than would have been her choice. For the past nine years she has been associated with her college classmate and almost life-long friend, Dr. Louise C. Purington, in the care of a private college preparatory school at Dorchester, one of the chief suburbs of Boston. Here Miss Ives has had opportunity for advanced study and for writing; she has been making a study of birds during her summer vacations among the hills of New Hampshire, and several first-class magazines have printed some of her bird poems. Her department in the school is that of psychology and literature, from which it will be seen that she has achieved a varied culture.

Miss Ives is in the midst of her career, and with a heart that from childhood has cherished the highest aims, manifested the most devoted loyalty in friendship and affection and exemplified the love of a true disciple for our Divine Master,—the incarnation in her life of the old, old story that has transformed the world.

THE TARIFFITES.

BY C. B. BESSE, D. D.

1. A CHESTNUTY CROWD.—The Globe-Democrat is authority for the statement that tariff history began with the government and has passed through "five great periods." Think of it! Over one hundred years of this kind of politics, and no nearer a solution than ever! How long are the people going to put up with that kind of a display? Isn't it about time for the curtain to fall and a new act to be put upon the stage? Why not turn the question over to a non-partisan commission after so long and tiresome an exhibition of political incompetency? Why elect another candidate on this musty old tariff issue? Voters, are you not tired? Do you want another one hundred years of this old rubbish?

2. A HOODWINKING CROWD.—You listen to Republicans and you would suppose that all sound tariffites are in that party; then you listen to the Democrats and they only are genuine. But cannot the people see that, whichever is in power, they get nothing? Changes in the "bill"—oh, yes, but no solution of the question. The parties loosen the harness in one place and tighten it in another; they never take it off. In truth, they never can; and for this reason it should never be a political question, but be tightened and loosened according to business principles by a purely non-partisan, business commission. The Globe-Democrat again says—and others will agree—that "if the Republicans regain power there will be no radical changes in the present tariff law." Hear that? Please listen! "Exclusive of a few drastic alterations . . . the Wilson-Gorman bill does not make any serious assault on the McKinley law." . . "No savage attack on the act of 1894 may take place when the Republicans regain control of the government." Of course not. For some time we have known that it is not an issue between the two parties. Then why make it so?

Say, voter, why do these parties, having no issue on the tariff, seek to raise one? To "throw dust in your eyes," that's all. It is a whisky trick to keep your gaze from the pressing question. Lincoln is reported to have said: "You can fool all the people some of the time, and some of the people all of the time, but you cannot fool all the people all of the time," but it almost looks as though you could. We have been fooled for three generations. How much longer must it continue?

3. AN UNPATRIOTIC CROWD.—So far as revenue is concerned there isn't much for the government in the tariff question, whichever party is in power. Isn't this true? So far as the business of the country is concerned the uncertainty consequent upon its being a partisan issue is both depressing and distressing. No patriot will press it to the front and keep it there. Base, unworthy, unpatriotic motives underlie all such effort.

There are questions in which there are millions for the government and millions for the people which are clamorous for attention. The relegation of these questions to the rear by the persistent agitation of this question means the enthronement of monopoly, the impoverishment of the people, and the development of great and perilous social and political evils. There are many who see this and are sounding a note of alarm, but they are not the tariff agitators; and it is high time that the people open their eyes to see in every such agitator an enemy to our country and a man to be voted into oblivion.

DR. BUCKLEY ON EQUAL SUFFRAGE.

BY ALICE STONE BLACKWELL.

Rev. Dr. J. M. Buckley, in the August Century, opens his argument against equal suffrage by an appeal to precedent. "With inconsiderable exceptions," he says, "the common sense of the human race, as expressed in civil government, has confined its prerogatives to men." With inconsiderable exceptions, the human race, until within the last one hundred and fifty years, confined the prerogatives of government to kings and privileged classes. Even so late as the last century, republican government by men, on any large scale, was as unprecedented, and seemed to most people as impossible as equal suffrage seems to Dr. Buckley to-day. Moreover, if an appeal is to be made to the "common sense of the race" (by which Dr. Buckley apparently means the opinion of the majority, whether sensible or otherwise), the argument would prove too much. For among the majority of the human race women are still treated after the fashion of India and China, and the opinion prevails that to treat them otherwise would subvert the foundations of society.

Dr. Buckley cites the exclusion of minors as a proof that the exercise of suffrage cannot be absolutely universal, and must be conditioned on the general good. Granted; but where is the proof that the general good requires full grown women to be treated, in one important respect, as if they were still minors? Minors are not merely excluded from suffrage. They are not allowed to control their own persons, property or earnings; they may be subjected to whippings and other ignominious punishments without trial by jury; and they occupy in general an entirely different status from adults. The legal position of a married woman used to be almost identical with that of a minor. When some married women began to ask to be relieved from these disabilities, it would have been no answer to tell them that they ought not to feel their position humiliating, since all minors, even exceptionally intelligent minors, like young Alexander Hamilton, were subject to the same disabilities.

These disabilities of married women were defended as an integral part of the foundations of society, with much the same arguments that Dr. Buckley uses in behalf of the exclusion of women from suffrage. Yet the other disabilities have almost all been removed without disastrous results. It is only in the matter of suffrage that the fiction of a perpetual minority is still kept up.

Dr. Buckley raises the question by what "fundamental principle" the majority have a right to rule the minority. In deciding what is to be done, where everybody's interests are concerned, we take everybody's opinion, and go according to the wish of the majority. Since we cannot suit everybody, we do what will suit the greatest number. That seems to be, upon the whole, the fairest way. This, roughly stated, is the fundamental principle of republican or democratic government. Except where a good reason can be shown to the contrary, everybody is entitled to be consulted in regard to his own concerns. The laws he has to obey and the taxes he has to pay are things which intimately concern him; and the only legal way of being consulted in regard to them, under our system of government, is by the ballot. A vote is simply a written expression of opinion, written down and put into a box so that it can be counted. In thus taking a vote, in order to get at the opinion of the majority, certain classes of persons are always passed over, whose opinions it is thought, for one reason or another, ought not to be counted. These classes are children, aliens, idiots, lunatics, criminals and women. There are good and obvious reasons for making all these exceptions but the last. Is there any good reason why no direct account should be taken of the opinions of women?

Dr. Buckley offers two reasons. He asserts that if women had the ballot, 1. They would lose their feminine characteristics; and 2. The home would be destroyed. If these two points can be established, of course no further argument against equal suffrage will be needed. Much that Dr. Buckley says under this head is true enough, as that "there is a feminine as well as a masculine soul, a spiritual sex as well as a corporal," and that "the coherence and permanence of the family depend upon the difference in the mental and emotional constitution of men and women." But when he goes on to say that permitting women to vote would result in "the abstraction of the mental and spiritual elements peculiar to women, and their being replaced by those characteristic of man," he asserts something for which there is not the slightest evidence. All the evidence we have points the other way. Men do not become all alike because they all have the right of suffrage. There is an infinite variety of types of character among men. If the fact that all men have equal rights before the law does not wipe out natural differences of temperament and disposition between one man and another, why should it be expected to wipe out natural differences of temperament and disposition between men and women? In many countries, the mass of men have no political rights, yet they do not become like women. In England, Wyoming and Canada, women have had political rights for years; yet they have not become perceptibly like men. "The difference in the mental and emotional constitution of men and women" is inherent in their nature, and is not an artificial result of political conditions; therefore, no modification in the system of suffrage is likely to obliterate it. Henry Ward Beecher said he should as soon be afraid that roses would turn into pinks and pinks into roses if they grew side by side in the same flower-bed.

Dr. Buckley affirms that "to govern in the state would unfit woman for her position in the home." This is the crucial point of his argument and he returns to it again and again. "The vote is the expression of government; voting is governing; to vote is to think and act in the imperative mood." And that a woman should ever do this is inherently and forever objectionable to men, in Dr. Buckley's opinion. "There is a natural instinct in man which leads him to submit to persuasion by women and to resist force applied by them. It cannot be eradicated by philosophy, refinement or religion, and in every generation reappears with undiminished vigor."

In this statement there are a truth and a falsehood closely mixed up together. In human beings in general, there is a natural instinct that leads them to submit to persuasion and to resist force. This is illustrated in the old fable about the comparative success of the wind and the sun in their efforts to make the traveler take off his cloak. All men dislike personal coercion. But all men do not dislike to have others vote as well as themselves; nor do they object to the voting of persons who could not with propriety exercise authority over them in private life. A father would resent having his son address him "in the imperative mood," but he does not resent the fact that his son has a vote as well as himself, and shares with him in governing the community. Every man would resent having his wife domineer over him in the house; but it is not every man, by any means, who resents having his wife share with him in the government of the community as expressed by a vote. The one sentiment is natural and ineradicable; the other is a simple matter of prejudice, and is lessening visibly day by day before the influence of "philosophy, refinement and religion." In communities where women have been voting for many years it has wholly disappeared. There, men look upon the objections to equal suffrage expressed in more conservative communities much as American men regard the Mohammedan belief that women would lose their feminine characteristics if they went unveiled.

Dr. Buckley's idea seems to be that any exercise of authority by women is unfeminine. "To vote intelligently is to think and act in the imperative mood; and to be qualified as voters, girls must be trained to think, feel and act in the spirit of boys." If so, women ought to be debarred from voting, not only in the state, but everywhere else. Yet, almost everywhere else, their votes are given and counted, without visibly bad results—in the college literary society, the Alumni Association, the Teachers' Association, the Temperance Society, the Christian Endeavor Association, the Epworth League, the benevolent and philanthropic societies of all sorts. In every business corporation in which women own stock, they have a vote. George William Curtis said: "A woman may vote as a stockholder upon a railroad from one end of the country to the other, but if she sells her stock and buys a house with the money, she has no voice in the laying out of the road before her door, which her house is taxed to keep and pay for." In the Methodist Episcopal church, of which Dr. Buckley is a member, the women vote side by side with their husbands and sons, and have an actual share in the government of the church. Yet we do not find that in domestic life Methodist women are more "imbued with the governing spirit," in the sense of disagreeable self-assertion, than the women of more conservative denominations.

THAT NEW ZEALAND LETTER.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—It is due our New Zealand sister, Mrs. Packe, that we should explain a letter from her that recently appeared in these columns. It was most interesting and valuable, and all the more so because of the off-hand style in which it was written. Indeed, we thought it "too good to keep," and simply changing the words "Dear President" to "DEAR UNION SIGNAL" we sent it along. But our sister did not suppose the letter would be published, and was only writing in a friendly and confidential way to the presiding officer of the World's W. C. T. U. Therefore, any who have taken exceptions to expressions contained in the letter must blame us and not Citizen Packe, of the Woman's Kingdom (as well as the men's), viz.: New Zealand.

CHAUTAUQUA TEMPERANCE CHIMES.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Thursday, August 9, might almost have been termed "Temperance Day." Early in the morning the Sunday-school temperance lesson for September 23 was treated in Dr. Hurlbut's Bible class by a large attendance.

In the Outlook Club (girls), where standing room only was to be had, the morning was devoted to a study of the temperance question. Miss Mather read the message for the day from the Willard circle, and gave in a few brief, interesting words some account of her own enlistment in temperance work while a college sophomore. Your correspondent presented the privilege of wearing "the ribbon white" and the many practical ways of making the world better under the banner of total abstinence.

Miss E. J. Solomon, of South Africa, gave some inspiration from the work of the young women in that distant land, where the connection of Christian men with the wine traffic of the country often renders the work of temperance a difficult problem, as well as increasing the need for it. Miss Henderson, of Montreal, told of the temperance work in Canada. Young women wearers of the white ribbon from eight states were present, and much interest was manifested in temperance endeavor. This girls' club combines in its members many denominations, and a variety of Christian and secular interests. The various societies within its enrollment are brought into play in a unique way at its social occasions, at one of which, an "Alphabet Tea," I was present. A full account will be given in the September Young Women, which, as THE UNION SIGNAL readers doubtless know, is the new name for the Oak and Ivy Leaf, organ of the Y. W. C. T. U.

On this day, too, temperance was again the subject at the Woman's Club. Mrs. Barlow, of Lapeer, Mich., treated the topic, "Alcohol and Disease," quoting largely from Dr. Benjamin Ward Richardson in proof of the evil and baneful effects of the poison. At this meeting Miss Mary Mather, of the Wilmington, Del., Y, gave a brief description of the Picture Circulation mission conducted by that young woman's union. The unmounted photographs are procured from the dealer, and generally are chosen from scenes in the life of Christ. A suitable text is appended, and the pictures, one or more, are hung on the walls in homes where such illustrations rarely find their way. The object, which is to educate the recipients to a love of the good and pure in art, is generally attained, for the coarse, colored prints, lithographs of actresses, etc., soon disappear from the walls and are seen no more, their places being taken by others more in harmony with the higher thoughts aroused. At intervals the pictures are changed, leading to a study of the Bible story and more high and helpful living. The "Relation of Art to Circumstances" has been well considered by Miss Mather, who recommends for the sick room pictures suggestive of coolness and peace. She would replace "the dead fish and game" so commonly pictured in family dining rooms by such works of art as Da Vinci's "Last Supper" and "Luther at the table of Madame Cotta."

At this meeting also, the question, "How win cider drinkers to the pledge?" was answered by Pansy (Mrs. Alden) who by reason of ill health is incapacitated from active participation in this season's program but is often an auditor. She gave an account of work in a Loyal Temperance Legion where a number of boys refused to sign a pledge against cider. Very tactfully, their signatures to the pledge minus the cider proviso were received and with skillful ingenuity every meeting was brought to bear upon the harmfulness of the seemingly innocent beverage. Talks, stories and object-lessons in the way of cider experiments were all given. Finally the culminating illustration was produced. Blocks of wood were placed on each other and a fruitless attempt was made to start a fire, showing the resistance afforded by the solid blocks to the inroads of flame. But when kindlings were added a blaze was started which soon took possession of the solid wood and consumed all. That cider was the kindling of the alcohol appetite was thus graphically illustrated. Soon after one of the boys came and asked to sign the cider pledge, saying emphatically, "The kindlings settled me." One by one the others enrolled until all had assumed the protection of the complete pledge.

Leaving Chautauqua I find myself to-day in view of the green slopes and high wooded shores of lovely Skaneateles lake. An old-fashioned colonial mansion, shaded by pines, in this delightful old village is the summer home of Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, a W. C. T. U. worker, known for her grace and graces to the women, young and old, of the temperance army the world around. Here she conducts correspondence from all quarters of the globe relative to the Young Woman's Branch of the W. C. T. U., and takes needed recreation upon a light and handsome wheel which she has just learned to ride. And with the chimes of Chautauqua yet ringing in my ears, I breathe for a few short days the incense of this peaceful village and its happy, friend-ly homes. JENNIE A. STEWART.

Skaneateles, N. Y.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

And when the woman saw that she was not hid, she came forth trembling, and falling down before him (Jesus) she declared unto him before all the people for what cause she had touched him, and how she was healed immediately: And he said unto her, Daughter, be of good comfort; thy faith hath made thee whole; go in peace.—Luke 8:47, 48.

Mrs. I. Simmons, Ocean Grove, N. J., a warm friend of the Temple, writes: "I always read my UNION SIGNAL all through, but there is no part that is looked for with more interest than the Temple column. I have been proud that it was a woman who devised such a gigantic work as the Temple. I was in Chicago last year; one of the most interesting places visited by me was the Temple." A letter of about the same date comes from a Southern brother, who evidently is not in accord with Mrs. Simmons' sentiment, although he also claims to be a friend of the Temple. He takes the writer severely to task for claiming to be the founder of the Temple, as was done in the Temple Item column of August 2, saying, "While all of us are proud of your conception yet unless you can complete it, for the sake of the feelings of your sisters, cease the claim of being its founder." We want to say to our brother that to cease such a claim would be to admit that we feared God's faithfulness. He gave the conception; can any work of His fail of completeness if our faith and labors fail not? Besides, the building is completed. W. C. T. U. is cut into the stone outside and in. The name of almost every state in the union is emblazoned on the marble walls of its assembly hall, beside hundreds of names of unions and individuals. Does our brother think that 200,000 God-inspired women, with as many good brothers at their back, will allow the National building of the W. C. T. U. to pass into the hands of others?

"Don't," says this same brother, "publish to the world to the injury of Miss Willard, that she considers the work of a National Temple building more important than the salvation of human temple buildings for eternity." In this also he refers to the article of August 2, wherein the writer said: "Frances Willard's broad, prophetic vision focuses at a glance the first great work needing attention. She thinks the hour has struck for her to take the platform in behalf of raising funds for the Temple, and if her strength continues to increase in the next four months as it has in the last, she proposes, in company with the founder of the Temple, shortly after the adjournment of the National Convention in November, to commence holding meetings in the larger cities of the country for the purpose of raising funds for the above object." In reply we would say in this case as in many others, the lesser includes the greater. Entire ownership of the Temple by the W. C. T. U. means money to push our work on in every line. If this enterprise is not worthy the few months' effort from our great leader, we would like to know what is. If it does not mean soul-saving there was never anything that did. The Temple, beautiful as it is, would be inconsequential of itself, if it does not prove the means to the great end of seed-sowing and the betterment of society.

Mrs. M. H. Wells, Wellsville, Pa., sends $10 towards $100 she is raising for a tablet to Dr. Hunter. Her letter is so full of sweet and tender sisterly regard it makes up for many rebuffs. The Temple has no warmer friend than Mrs. Fannie Wilson, Plattsburg, N. Y. She is hard at work to raise a second $100 through her union; she sends $7.30, and writes: "Times are so hard and so many out of work that I can do but little, but the little mites will be acceptable, as drops of water make the mighty ocean." Mrs. Hattie R. Tomlinson, Perry, N. Y., is another warm friend of the Temple. She sent a personal gift of $100, and was also instrumental in getting her union to send $100. She now sends $1, and writes as follows: "My little seven-year-old daughter, Irene, has saved $1 taking care of a neighbor's baby. Having seen the beautiful Columbian souvenir, she desires to send her dollar for the Temple and have a souvenir; at first thought she would like to save the first dollar she ever earned all at once, but with a little help from mamma was soon able to see that it was better to have the dollar doing some good, and have something more beautiful to keep in place of it." We give Mrs. Tomlinson's letter in full, as we think it would be such a noble thing for other boys and girls to imitate Irene's example, and for other mothers to teach their little daughters and sons to work and give for the good of others.

Mrs. M. M. Green, treasurer Westminster, Mass., W. C. T. U., sends $35, making $60 this union has paid on its pledge. Mrs. Green says: "We are so glad to have a hand in this Temple work, and rejoice that our name will be there." From Mrs. F. M. Buck, for the W. C. T. U. of Spokane, East Wash., comes $38. She hopes the union may be able to complete $100, but she fears it, as there are only three or four members that pay dues. Take heart, good sister; this gift may be the means of awakening to new life your fainting union. Mrs. E. M. Landy, treasurer of Greenville, Ill., W. C. T. U., sends check for $25. We hope that this union will continue its gifts until the $100 mark is reached. Surely every live union in Illinois should have its name in Willard Hall.

All who desire to secure a solid silver Temple souvenir teaspoon should enter their name at once and send to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, The Temple, Chicago, for a mite-box. Persons placing in the box $3.65 during the year 1894 will receive the beautiful spoon. All drafts and money orders should be made out in the name of William D. Preston, and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara G. Johnson, The Temple, Chicago.

CAN IT BE?

What can it mean? Is it aught to Him
That the nights are long and the days are dim?
Can He be touched by the griefs I bear,
Which sadden the heart and whiten the hair?

Around His throne are eternal calms,
And strong, glad music of happy psalms;
A bliss unruffled by any strife,
How can He care for my little life?

And yet I want Him to care for me
While I live in this world where the sorrows be;
When the lights are down from the path I take,
When strength is feeble and friends forsake,

When love and music that once did bless
Have left me in silence and loneliness,
And my life-song changes to sobbing prayers,
Then my heart cries out for a God who cares.

When shadows hang o'er me the whole day long,
And my spirit is bowed with shame and wrong;
When I am not good, and the deeper shade
Of conscious sin makes my heart afraid;

And the busy world has too much to do
To stay in its course to help me through,
And I long for a Saviour,—can it be
That the God of the universe cares for me?

Oh, wonderful story of deathless love,
Each child is dear to that heart above.
He fights for me when I cannot fight,
He comforts me in the gloom of night.

He lifts the burden, for He is strong,
He stills the sigh and wakens the song,
The sorrow that bows me down He bears,
And loves and pardons because He cares.

Let all who are sad take heart again,
We are not alone in our hours of pain;
Our Father stoops from His throne above
To soothe and quiet us with His love.

He leaves us not when the storm is high
And we have safety for He is nigh.
Can it be trouble which He doth share?
Oh, rest in peace for the Lord does care.

WHAT THE W. C. T. U. DID FOR MRS. GRANGER.

BY VELMA V. BEEBE.

Mrs. Granger shook her white tablecloth as she stood on the back steps and thought what a lovely October day it was. She wished she could take a ride in all that gleaming splendor of leaves and sunshine. Then she remembered that it was Friday. The W. C. T. U. held its meeting Friday afternoons and she had promised Mrs. James that she would try to attend this one—perhaps to join. There was opportunity for a ride, for it was six miles to the village.

Could she go? She was so afraid of Bess, and the other horses were all in use. Could she join? Money was so scarce! But she did so long to. Her heart was all in sympathy with what she knew of the work. She wouldn't be a coward and she would be more economical; and with these resolves she hurried about her work to make her going possible.

Everything was moving smoothly and she was singing a happy little song to the accompaniment of the churn-dasher when Mr. Granger appeared bearing an armful of dilapidated grain-sacks.

"Can you get time to mend these, May?" he asked, dropping them in the middle of the kitchen floor.

"There are only eighty of them. The thrashers pulled in at Jones' this morning and I think I can get 'em here to-morrow if I'm ready for 'em."

She looked at the dirty heap in dismay.

"Why, Charlie," she said, "I thought you were going to get new sacks this year."

"I did mean to, but it's too hard times for that. The wheat won't sell for enough to pay for the sacks, I'm afraid."

She sighed a little sigh under her breath, and hid her face a moment by peering into the churn. It was such a disappointment! However, at half-past five that afternoon she was finishing the last sack and singing the last verse of "There is a happy land," with great energy and cheerfulness.

"I do wonder why Mrs. Granger wasn't here! She told me she'd do her best to come."

Mrs. James' voice had a petulant sound, and she closed her lips with a non-compromising expression.

"She lives so far out," ventured Mrs. Meak.

"Nonsense!" snapped Mrs. James.

"She wouldn't have learned much if she'd been here," sneered Mrs. Ross, who had employed much of the meeting time in finding fault with the proceedings, and had come off second best.

"Yes," assented Miss Fragle, who usually assented to what Mrs. Ross said, "a W. C. T. U. with a feud in it is worse than none at all."

So the meeting ended as far as speech goes; but it was not the end, for Mrs. Mason, who had said nothing, but thought a great deal, resolved to see Mrs. Granger for herself, and find out why she had not come. Then there were several other farmers' wives and daughters whom she wished to see, for she had a plan.

The next Friday afternoon there was a heavy rainfall, and again Mrs. Granger had to stay at home, but she was more light-hearted, for Mrs. Mason had been there on Wednesday, and had convinced her that even if a woman could never attend a meeting, or even if she never had a dollar to spend for the work she might still keep in touch with the union and help on the good cause—for Mrs. Mason had a plan.

There was a smaller number than usual at the meeting, but when Mrs. Mason's plan was proposed there was plenty of discussion.

"I have been out among the farmers' wives since our last meeting," said she, "and I find that most of them would be glad to join us if they could only attend, but household cares or distance from town prevents the larger number from doing so."

"Let 'em join if they can't attend," said Mrs. James. "Their fees will do just as much good."

"Not many of them can command enough money to pay their fees," answered Mrs. Mason, "but I have a plan. Let each member here present agree to send her UNION SIGNAL, or whatever temperance paper she may take, to some woman on my list regularly, and more than half of my plan will be accomplished. Then each month let a type-written report of the last four meetings be sent to each one of these women. It will do more to bring them out, if they can come, than all the talk of duty you can offer, and if they can't come it will give them a chance to keep in with the work."

"Type-written reports!" gasped Mrs. Ross. "Who's going to pay for them?"

"I have spoken to Miss Barry, the secretary of the Y's, and she says she will find time to do the type-writing and will donate her work."

"There will be stamps to pay for," ventured Miss Fragle.

"Our fund set apart for stationary will do as much good in that way as in any other."

So it was settled, and it is surprising to see how well the plan worked. Many of the farmers' wives have found opportunity to come in and to join, and from those who never come almost every meeting finds letters of experiences which enliven the prosy routine till there is no chance for the feud to show its face.

To the farmers' wives themselves it is the greatest of boons; and during meeting-times on Friday afternoons a constant prayer is rising from wherever the supplicants may be employed, whether over the butter-tubs, ironing-board or mending-basket.

Mrs. Granger says, "I never knew before how much we women have to live for. If I haven't been able to do anything for the W. C. T. U., it has done everything for me."

KINDNESS—HOW MUCH?

I.

BY JAMES VILA BLAKE.

The analysis of kindness has two parts: 1. Non-unkindness; 2. Invention and giving of joys. This is "daily bread" for daily life; this is doctrine to take to heart seriously. Ah, the difference of these parts! Ah, the deep pit between not being unkind and being, indeed, kind! How little do I if I cause no pains, if therewith, also, I make no joys. Let me not plume me with virtue if I hurt no one. That is but the lower part of kindness, the feet of it. If I rise to the heart, the head, the eye of it, kindness is the consideration how to give joys, and increase them.

Kindness has two parts: 1. Not to give pain. 2. To give joys. This brings the question, How much must we bethink and bestir ourselves to give joys? The positive side of kindness is a husbandman's work. Joys will not grow unless they be planted first and tilled continually. I mean that to be kind in the way of adding joys to the daily walks of the persons about us, is first a work of invention and seeding, and then a work of fostering. Now, how much must we do this? To what amount turn aside from our own path or stop our journey that we may plant corn in another's field, or border another's path with box and poppies? Bacon avers that great lovers of their country or of their masters have not been fortunate, nor can be, because he that considers another man "goeth not his own way." 'Tis not to be denied that to make a business of giving joys is sacrificial. Yet this steady business is the only positive kindness. If it be not steady, then a man may spot his life here and there with kind acts, but the spots will not be the hue, nor will this make a kind man any more than sometimes to tell the truth is to be truthful. Therefore, joy-giving is sacrificial—not to be done without cost of ease or substance. Therefore, it is a question how much we must do of it.

How much must I be kind, by the positive side of it? How much must I invent joys and bring them to pass? I answer, All I can.

All I can. There is no limit but the end of my power. Kindness is not like a barter, so much for so much; or so much by contract and my duty done. But kindness is like a righteousness or like a worship, not done unless it be done all I can. For the heart must run forth without measure like a child, and kindness be wound around like a child's arms about the neck, not by measure, but as tightly and as long as they can be.

But now you will say, very like, that thus a man may throw himself all away. He may waste away his substance and time and mind on other persons till he have no more left and no means for getting, and has become a mere cast-up, having attended to every one until he can do so no more because he has destroyed himself. Surely, it is fool's doctrine that a man must be busy giving joys to others all he can, for he has the power to do nothing else, and so come to naught even in that.

If there be a poor, hungry wayfarer somewhere, and two men pass by, and one of them has no food in his wallet nor money in his purse, and the other has both in plenty, but a hard heart, unpitying of others and gripping his own possessions tightly, there is then no difference in them as to ability, and no power in neither to relieve the poor, famishing man. One no more can than the other. Therefore, when I say I must do the positive part of kindness, to make joys abound all I can, and there is no limit but the end of my power, I mean not to speak to myself as if I were a brute force only, pitted against so much or so much weight of things which the so much brute force is able to toss about and away. If I must do kindness in the positive part thereof all I can, this means not that I must wear away all my time and substance therein, for this I cannot do, if I take account of justice and reason. I am such a creature that to take thought of justice and reason may tie up my hands so that no more I can do a certain act with them than if they were bound with strong cords. Therefore, the rule to invent joys and pour them around other persons all I can, is not an unsafe rule nor improvident.

But mark this now, that the rule and wish to do all I can is the only one which will show me what I can. Never shall I know truly how much I can give unless it be mightily in my heart to give that sum whatever it might be. Can I know where justice and reason will stop me unless I feel their tug by going to the end of them? If I say not, "I will give joys all I can, and see to it and invent for it," but say, "I will do this as much as I must," or "as much as circumstances require of me," or "as is thrust in my way," or "as much as others do and as manners go," it is surprising how little I shall deem required of me, what a small measure I shall mete out for my duty. Whoso seeks to do all he can is in the state of heart to know truly what he can, but he whose point is to do as little as he must will think often that he can do nothing.

And how much, indeed, it is to do all we can! Little or large, what a vast sum it is! This rule and duty is the great leveler, which brings all things to our view of one size, as God sees them. To do all we can is so vast a sum in love and kindliness, that to receive from one all he can, how little soever, is a much dearer thing, and a greater than to receive from another only a part of what he might, though it be a great amount.—From "More than Kin."

THE social and political problems that confront us are darker than they realize who have not given thought to them; yet their solution is a mere matter of the proper adjustment of social forces. Man masters material nature by studying her laws, and in conditions and powers that seemed most forbidding has already found his richest storehouses and most powerful servants. Although we have but begun to systematize our knowledge of physical nature, it is evident she will refuse us no desire if we but seek its gratification in accordance with her laws. The domain of law is not confined to physical nature. It just as certainly embraces the mental and moral universe, and social growth and social life have their laws as fixed as those of matter and of motion. Would we make social life healthy and happy, we must discover those laws, and seek our ends in accordance with them.—Herbert Spencer.

THE WOMAN SUFFRAGE MOVEMENT IN NEW YORK.

In adopting the adverse report of the committee on woman's suffrage, the constitutional convention of New York has "killed the movement" only so far as this convention is concerned. If "our friends, the enemy," think that this action does more than to postpone the final victory of the cause, they delude themselves.

The agitation in New York, though it has ended in temporary defeat, has done much to hasten the day of triumph. The comparative size of the two petitions shows the strength of the suffrage sentiment. We have not the number of names attached to the two papers, but are informed by those whom we suppose know, that the petition for suffrage was a large multiple of the opposing petition. The injustice of thus disregarding the wishes of the large majority seems clear, but there are certain persons who are so very tender and considerate of the feelings of women on particular subjects, that they cannot bear to think of giving women as a class, the suffrage, so long as there is one woman who does not want it.

In addition to the matter of the petitions, the attitude taken by fashionable women, the upper four hundred of New York city, towards the movement is significant of the advancing sentiment. A recent article in the Demorest Magazine represents that suffrage has become a fashionable fad. The article in question is written in somewhat of a sneering tone which perhaps only increases the value of its testimony, as apparently the author has small sympathy with the movement and would not be inclined to exaggerate its strength. It is a well known fact that reform movements do not begin among the "upper ten." That class has a chronic horror of all things new and strange (saving in the one matter of dress) and is composed of the most conservative people on earth. When, therefore, a new movement having passed through the stages of ridicule, persecution and the dawning recognition of the intelligent classes, becomes a fashionable fad, we know that that movement is on the threshold of victory.

The opposition has been conducted along the lines with which we are familiar to the point of exhaustion; the changes have been rung again and again upon the chords to which we have listened and replied so often that whenever they are struck we are at once attacked with a well-nigh irresistible desire to go to sleep. We are somewhat inclined to think that Dr. Parkhurst must have yielded to a similar inclination in the past and slept through previous suffrage discussions as he appears upon the stage with what he seems to regard an entirely new view of the situation. This view is nothing more than that woman is fundamentally, inherently and forever different from man and therefore that all arguments from one to the other are puerile. He assures us that to urge the expediency of woman's doing a thing because man does it, or the justice of woman's possessing certain rights and privileges because man possesses them, only proves the utter inability of the disputant to understand the subject at all. He declares that a woman who thus reasons, who does not recognize that she is a being of much finer material, etc., than man, betrays an "ignorance of the whole subject of which any Christian woman should be ashamed."

We are among the women who, according to Dr. Parkhurst, are thus hopelessly ignorant, but we wish to assure the good doctor that it is not because we never heard before the statement concerning the gulf fixed between the two halves of humanity. To the best of our memory it has been dinned into our ears ever since we were old enough to understand it. We doubt whether anywhere this side of the grave we shall cease to hear it. There was a time when with the simplicity of childhood, we accepted it, as we did all other statements upon whatever subject, without question. The experience of the rapidly passing years has forced us to drop this delightful habit of childhood; so far, indeed, have we advanced in the habit of doubt that it is some years since we have even believed all that we saw in print.

Among the dispelled beliefs of our childhood, none has vanished into thinner mist than this one which Dr. Parkhurst springs upon us as something new under the sun. We have come to consider it as one of the most hopeful signs of the times that people are awaking to the truth that most of the "inborn," "essential" differences of men and women, boys and girls, are not God's work, but man's. The system which carefully teaches boys and girls from the cradle to the grave that they have nothing in common, that the animal instincts of the one are to have free scope and the boy is to romp and race and play at his will, while the animal instincts of the other are contrary to nature and must be repressed and curbed, that girls must find their supreme delight in playing quietly with their dolls and piecing quilts, and so on throughout the whole list of pursuits which the wisdom of man has decided appropriate to the two sexes, has, to say the least, something to do with the great difference between man and woman usually attributed to the Creator.

It is some years since a few quick-witted men and women began to consider the facts in the case, and the suspicion grew upon them that placed under similar circumstances many, if not all, of these supposed differences would disappear. The early doubters of this accepted superstition, like all investigators, ran the gauntlet of public scorn, but the heresy grew, and one by one opportunities were found to test the truth of the new theory.

The silly belief that women reach their conclusions by intuition instead of by the reasoning process received its death stab in the higher institutions of learning, where women proved themselves quite as capable as men of mastering the sciences of reasoning pure and applied. In short, though woman has not yet had time to demonstrate her ability fully, the results thus far in the colleges, the literary and scientific world are such that none except those hopelessly blinded by prejudice care to question the statement that there is no sex in intellect.

In the business world, woman has done quite as well as man could have done with similar education and opportunities, and, what is more to the point, she has accomplished her results by similar methods.

As far as she has entered into politics, she has evinced the same aptitude for the science that man possesses, the only difference being that she brings to every subject which she touches a slightly different view of the situation, as is usual with one who surveys the situation from a different angle of vision. To every proposed political or social movement woman propounds the question, "How will this affect the home?" But this difference in point of view is but an added reason why woman should have a voice in all general matters. In every case which involves the interests of all humanity we need the view which can be obtained alone from all humanity.

The weakest thing about this old superstition which Dr. Parkhurst has voiced anew is that though so long and so generally accepted in theory, it has not been consistently acted upon. Most of the persons, especially ministers of the gospel, who insist upon the essential difference between man and woman, also assert that in no respect is woman the inferior, indeed, morally, she is usually pictured as an angel of light, yet it is a most significant fact that the only recognition which is made by the laws of this difference is to treat woman as an inferior being.

It would seem that such vital differences as we are told inhere in her nature, would necessitate entirely different conditions, a different system of laws; but no, this creature who, morally, mentally and physically belongs to an entirely different order of beings from man, has been treated as though she were essentially the same, the same laws have been made to restrain her, the same penalties visited upon her for disobedience. Equal but essentially different according to theory, the laws have treated her as the same, only hopelessly inferior, and have held her in respect to property and personal right in subordination to man.

It is due to the efforts of those who questioned the accepted belief that there has been some modification of her hard lot in these later days. The position of the law on the subject is but a reflex of the real opinion of those who urge the doctrine of woman's difference. With them it means inferiority. They can say very pretty things when they have an object in view, but we have never yet known such a person who did not by innuendoes and contemptuous remarks concerning women's disabilities along the lines of her "differences" from men betray his real feeling.

Dr. Parkhurst's view is nothing new under the sun. It is one of the spectres visible only to those who possess the doubtful accomplishment of seeing ghosts and which like all spectres of the past would simply scare progress out of its pathway.

"LIVING PICTURES."

Stronger proof of the degeneracy of the theater could not be furnished than Lady Henry Somerset's exposure of the tableaux vivants in the Palace theater of London. Just before sailing for America in August, she attended this theater in order to personally satisfy herself as to the character of the performance which was being condoned by many, but which she had condemned in her last annual address.

As this is a question in which good women the world over are concerned, and as there is much probability that "living pictures" will be introduced upon the "boards" of American theaters, we desire to give our readers a good portion of Lady Somerset's appeal to the authorities of the theater and the women of England. A stronger and more delicate presentation of the subject could not be made. Her article, which was first published in the Woman's Signal, has been widely copied in the English press and favorably commented on by every paper that stands on the side of morality. Lady Henry says:

I had learned that they (living pictures) verged on indecency, and that public opinion ought to be roused by them. But my worst surmises did not come near the actual fact; and so strongly do I feel, now that I know what these living pictures really are, I have determined to desert the shelter of anonymity in order to make a personal appeal to women in my own name. The tableaux are many of them harmless, and in a manner picturesque. It is only to a few that I wish to call attention, but those are simply outrageous. In them young girls are posed with no other clothes at all on them but tights from neck to foot. . . . For the first time in a Christian country, our brothers, husbands, sisters, sons and wives are bidden to assist at an exhibition of unclothed women. . . . These tableaux violate every artistic canon. It is a sham nudity, not spiritualized and made ideal by the hallowed creating hand of genius, but palpably gross and disgusting in its suggestive flesh-colored skin tights. I suppose people would make a protest if it were proposed to expose women in unveiled nudity; but the artistic apology would certainly be stronger, and for myself I cannot see that the humiliation to the performer would be greater. This film of gauze is but a silly lie, a sort of quibble by which the thing may escape being called by its right name. No one who sees but must agree here is the gravest insult and dishonor that has been put upon women in our time, for that at last we have, in letting women make public merchandise of the beauty of their bodies, surpassed even the Oriental standard of female degradation. . . . I am speaking now not of lithographs, but of living girls—young women whose modesty and purity are of just as much account in the sight of God as the virtue of the highest in the land, whose dishonor is just as much a blot and infamy on the community as would be publicly tolerated insult or outrage on the most royal of princesses. That this thing should go on under a popular authority (London county council) is to me incredible. . . . No prize fight could be one-half so brutalizing, so de-civilizing, so degrading to the most sacred instincts of humanity as this public pag-antry of shame. . . . The time for speaking out has come, and I earnestly call upon every one who has a voice that he or she can make articulate to join in a protest against this unholy thing.

The current number of the Woman's Signal contains, besides many indorsements of the above noble plea, an editorial sequence, which, by the well-known "ear-marks," we feel safe in saying was written by Mrs. Mary B. Willard, who is editing the paper in Lady Henry's absence. Old-time readers of THE UNION SIGNAL will be glad to read our pioneer editor's spicy remarks on a London paper's comment of Lady Henry's appeal, so we make no apology for giving the article in full. The comment which furnished Mrs. Willard her text is as follows:

"It was morally certain that when ladies began going to these places some of them would be shocked and would say so."

Mrs. Willard then moralizes in this wise:

This is a naïve confession, from which a good deal may be extracted. First, that up to date "ladies" have not been "going to see" the living pictures; second, that in the everlasting certainties of things it was written that only their ignorance of this sort of public entertainment prevented an earlier exposure and condemnation of its character; that in its secret heart the world expects woman to speak out, to raise her voice against iniquity of all sorts, no matter how cunningly it may be devised. The unconscious testimony to this fact ought to give courage and force to woman's speech and pen. Nay, more, it lays obligation upon woman to know the truth, however dark it may be, and to drag it to the light. The world waits for such service as this, and the cause that demands it is neither man's cause nor woman's, but the larger interest of human progress.

A good housekeeper tolerates no dark corners in her domain for the accumulation of dust and germs. Air and light and brush and broom are her preventions against vermin and disease. Shall she not look as well to the ways of her larger household, employing the same methods that have played so large and successful a part in her housekeeping ever since the world began? The trouble is that we have had "bachelors' quarters" so long. And the sole occupant has been so intent on his armament, his argosies, his money-gathering and labor saving, that he could not be expected to minutely investigate and care for his cupboards and cellars.

"It was morally certain" that the housewife, coming to her kingdom for such a time as this, should begin by peering about, looking for herself into the dust holes and vigorously taking her broom to them. ("I thank thee, Jew, for teaching me that word.")

What is expected of you, oh, woman, has now been made clear to you. You will have only yourselves to blame if things go wrong. This is the program: Pry into every dark corner of evil. Trace bravely to its source every symptom of moral disease, cry aloud at every menace of danger to the household's health, and spare not the spiritual plumbers and fitters that try to face you down. Study the daily bills of fare with a mother's tender conscience, and if there's death in the pot, say so in plain words and without mincing matters. Watch thou in all things; do the work of an evangel; make full proof of thy ministry.

May Mrs. Willard's beautiful sermonette cause an arousement of women on both sides of the Atlantic. "Prying into every dark corner of evil," may not be the most comfortable of occupations, but in this way only can sin be eradicated.

Since writing the above, it has come to our notice that living pictures have already been introduced into a Chicago theater, hence, it is high time that the temperance women this side of the Atlantic were joining their British sisters for the extermination of this hideous iniquity.

RECRUITING MEMBERS.

As an intelligent evangelist takes a sacred interest in the lives and conditions of the people he would reach, that he may adapt his appeals to the weakest link in the chains of their resistance, so may a W. C. T. U. woman religiously study the ins and outs of her neighbor's living that she may the better understand how and when and where to drop the good seed.

This mother with the wayward daughter is appealed to through an introduction, (by description or visit or leaflet) to a mothers' meeting. That poor woman whose son, lying in the hospital, has been cheered by a gift of flowers is touched and awakened by the flower mission feature. An enterprising young schoolma'am is interested in the departments of health and heredity, sanitary and economic cookery, and gives her name and fee with a promise "to help now and then." The woman with the graphic pen is delighted to report the W. C. T. U. lecture "in the absence of the reporting member," and is caught before she knows it. Mrs. X. has two sons "on the railroad" and knows too well the dangerous features of that life, "of course" she will join—she "never dreamed any one cared for the boys except the saloon-keepers." For the honoraries, good W. C. T. U. husbands and brothers make excellent fishermen, and womanly tact and Christian courtesy and zeal are sharp and efficient tools.

Oh, there are a thousand ways to win them and each way needs to be tried. The battle depends on skillful generalship, and then, hand-to-hand engagement, the heart ever strengthened and educated by prayer.

THE TRIAL OF PROFESSOR ELY.

The utterly unwarranted attack of Mr. Wells upon Professor Ely has met a deserved fate and collapsed like a pricked balloon. As our readers doubtless know, Professor Ely is dean of the school of economics, political science and history in the University of Wisconsin. He is one of the most progressive men of the age in his department, and instead of confining himself to teaching political economy in precisely the old ruts of fifty years ago has dared to deal with the problems of to-day.

While not a socialist and therefore not at all among the radicals of the new political economy, he nevertheless recognizes that the serious evils of the present can be removed only by radical changes in our social system, and has dared to say so. It would have been safer to confine his investigations to the evils of the past, to impress upon his students the wastefulness of slave labor, to prove beyond peradventure that, notwithstanding the criticisms upon it, Ricardo's theory of rent is sound and to establish again that "a demand for commodities is not a demand for labor." It is probable, also, that he might safely have discussed the labor troubles of to-day had he taken the position that the laborers are wholly wrong, or that, whoever or whatever is wrong, the trouble is not in any wise with existing social and political conditions.

But this position Professor Ely did not take. To be sure, he has expressed disapproval of strikes, while violence of any kind he condemns as he would any attack upon society. Nevertheless he recognizes that the laborers have real and serious grievances and he finds the cause of these grievances imbedded in our social system. As before stated, he is not a socialist, distinctly affirming that he thinks agriculture incompatible with the socialistic scheme. He holds only to the government ownership of what he terms "natural monopolies."

For this, however, he was bitterly attacked by Mr. Wells, Superintendent of Public Instruction in the state of Michigan, in a letter to the New York Nation, in which charges are made not only that Professor Ely is guilty of anarchistic teaching in his classes, but also that he associated himself with certain anarchistic leaders and acted as aider and abettor in a strike. Mr. Wells showed that his attack was not an honest one by his refusal on a mere pretext to appear when summoned to do so before the board of regents of the university who wished to investigate his charges. Later, at the earnest desire of his friends, he came before the board and allowed his witnesses to testify, but at the next meeting sent in a letter with frivolous statements that "the inquiry as conducted was likely to subserve no useful results" (notwithstanding the investigators had agreed to his demand that Professor Ely's books should be taken into the discussion), and admitted that his charges concerning overt acts on the part of Professor Ely were "unsubstantiated." The attack, then, so far as it concerns Professor Ely, may be dismissed from attention.

It is cause for both surprise and gratitude that the conservative Professor Ely was the one against whom the shafts were directed rather than some more radical adherent of the new school of political economy, for, while none of these are guilty of any offence against society, there are many whose more radical views would make them a much better target for such an attack.

Some facts were brought out by this trial which are of general interest. One is that many of the leading men of the nation sympathize to a very considerable extent with Professor Ely's views, while many more who do not agree with him yet think that there is no reason to forbid his spreading his opinions even among the young and in the position of influence which he now holds. The other fact is the growing bitterness and violence on the part of the more pronounced opponents of social change. The attack itself seems to have been malicious; the author of it admits that the accusations which involved Professor Ely in active participation in a strike are "unsubstantiated," which is equivalent to saying that they were deliberately made in a prominent newspaper, on insufficient evidence, for the purpose of prejudicing the public against Professor Ely. It cannot be supposed that had Mr. Wells expected that the charges would be taken up in the way they were he would have dared to make those which he knew he could not prove.

Whether there was any personal animosity in the matter we have no means of knowing; none has been indicated, and, unless that element entered in, there is no other explanation for an attack so vindictive and uncalled for as this seems to have been, than that it was prompted by the bitterness which extreme conservatism always shows toward changes of any kind. There is very much to indicate that this spirit is being aroused towards all believers in social reconstruction. For those who turn the world upside down the world has had always the same treatment — persecution, even unto death, while living, glory and honor without limit when the reforms have triumphed and those who worked to secure them have gone where praise cannot rejoice nor unjust censure grieve them.

That the question of proper signature to a woman's letter is no unimportant matter is well attested by the many "opinions" that have reached On Duty's desk. Their number is so far beyond the inhospitable limits of one short column, that the editors have generously consented to find room for the overflow in another department of the paper, so those who have not yet seen their particular opinion in print, and all others interested, may look for a symposium on the question in the Household department soon. The shorter ones are given space below.

ON DUTY.

I emphatically object to the retention of a woman's Christian name after marriage on the plea that etiquette taught me—and I placed implicit confidence in its author—that it was more elegant and accurate to take the husband's name as long as he lives, and after his death take up her Christian name; thus one could designate whether she was a widow or otherwise.—MRS. H. M. WILDER, Chase's Mills, Me.

I have not seen my private opinion publicly expressed. It is that the titles as now used for womankind are right. But I believe the titles as used for mankind should be reformed to conform to those of womankind. That is, there should be a title for unmarried men and another for married. Why should not the world know the state of a man as well as of a woman? I believe it has a right to demand it. I plead for equal rights! Personally, I find it awkward to prefix the proper title to my name in signing it. But am willing to overcome my prejudice if best. Time will tell whether or not my name shall need re-capitating and an addendum. But if it should it most assuredly will retain—LAURA M. SCHILLING.

Why should the title "madam" be reserved especially for "the dear old grandmothers and other elderly women"? We have no special title for elderly men, and the dear old grandfathers. I think "madam" the appropriate word to use for both married and single, with the abbreviation M'm for letter address, and if we wish any special word of endearment for elderly women just call them "mother" or "grandma" like "Mother" Stewart or "Mother" Wallace. How much more expressive of affectionate regard than "Madam," which is at its best but a title of formality.—MRS. S. S. WEATHERBY, LeRoy, Kan.

It is my pleasure to correspond with our college alumnæ, but when they sign their husbands' name instead of their own name, it makes me cross. Frequently I have no record of the husbands, and I puzzle over the matter for hours before I can establish the alumnæ's identity. I am glad to see that the absurd custom is changing, and to the W. C. T. U. is due the credit. The title of Miss is equally as honorable as that of Mrs. Where it is necessary to do so, enclose the title in parenthesis and retain the maiden name.—L. G. B., Berea, O.

I have been surprised to learn, after so many centuries of happy married life in American homes, that our women are just learning that it is "awkward" to write "Mrs." before the name. I believe that in this age of the advancement of women, some of our sisters are inclined to look with disdain upon the thought of bearing their husbands' name and I believe that feeling thus, they should never have stood at the marriage altar and pronounced the words that entitled them to do so. As a rule our sisters are wise, intelligent and reasonable, but I do wish that along some lines we had a little more of the good, plain, wholesome, practical common sense.—MRS. REV. C. D. SMITH, Tyrone, N. Y.

It seems to me that after all the discussion that may be had in regard to Mrs. and Miss being prefixed to the name of a single or married woman, that good common sense will, in the end, decide that no change for the better can be made. Why ought any woman to feel any reluctance to have the world know that she is "married or unmarried," as the case may be?—MRS. M. A. CUYKENDALL, Cazenovia, N. Y.

I have read with a good deal of interest the many opinions expressed regarding the proper signature for women, and am much pleased with what Mrs. H. J. Roworth, of Providence, R. I., says on the subject. For an unmarried woman to call herself Mrs. savors too much of the spirit of Betsey Bobbit, and makes one almost think Josiah Allen's wife has not overdrawn the picture.—MRS. FRANCES HAYWARD.

NORWAY NEWS.

The temperance people in Christiana sent, last year, a petition to the town council that the retail of beer, wine and cider should not be allowed from five o'clock the day before Sundays and Holydays to Monday, or the next working day eight o'clock, morning. It was signed by more than thirty-two persons above twenty-one years. The committee had got all the clergy to sign and our association got a good many women, among whom were the clergy's wives. Last month it was granted, but exceptions can be made for certain cafés and restaurants where no abuse is to be feared. Spirits are thus prohibited during that time everywhere.

The state legislation has also gone forward. We have got new laws for distillation and sale of spirits, and the Storthing has resolved that the net revenue of the companies for selling liquors on the Gothenburg system, which now goes on in towns, in future is to be divided thus: Fifty per cent to the state, fifteen per cent to the towns and twenty to the companies to be divided between benevolent and charitable institutions. It will be a heavy loss for many, but at the same time there is no doubt that the amendment has been brought forward on account of the great interest there has been in many places to get large revenue. The distribution has been not only to charitable institutions, and for the poorer classes and to the temperance cause. It has been used to many other things, new theatre (in Christiana) waterworks, sewers, railway shares, mission halls and hospitals. The fifty per cent to the state shall form a fund for insurance against permanent infirmity. If this, in the long run, will be of any benefit and lessen the interest in the sale we hope, but it is difficult to form any decided opinion about it. But there is one paragraph in this new law which will interest all women: That before a new Samlag license can be given there shall in the town be an ordinary vote by a majority of all men and women above twenty-five years. It cannot be given for more than five years, when it must be renewed. If a Samlag has lost its license in this way, it can only regain it by two-thirds of the votes. The proposal for this was by Mr. Carrestad, and it passed. We do hope very much from this, as the women certainly not wish to have the Samlags more than other retail places.

All the temperance unions in Norway have agreed to make every year, the third Sunday in June, a demonstration day. It was the first time this year. There were more than fifty thousand gathered in processions that day, and certainly made impressions on the bystanders. In Christiana, Countess Wedel-Jarlsberg, and a member of the Storthing, gave addresses. BIRGITHE ESMARK,

QUEENSLAND NOTES.

By faith and steadfastness the northern unions, under many disadvantages, are holding their own. Drinking habits appear to increase, consequent upon the intense summer heat, and the same cause renders it difficult to successfully carry on aggressive work of any kind. The union at Charters Towers (a largely populated gold field) has been doing good service by holding open-air and indoor public meetings, distributing tracts, etc., while Townville is energetic in several directions, and has just made excellent arrangements for the first district convention in North Queensland, at which Mrs. Britten, our organizer, will be present.

Several unions have held special meetings to welcome the delegates from Sydney, and to hear their accounts of the second Australasian convention. Brisbane (Central) W's had an enjoyable afternoon social for this purpose while the city and suburban Y's greeted the Y delegates and superintendents at a united evening gathering.

Wide-awake Ipswich W. C. T. U. arranged a picnic on a large scale for the Queen's birthday, which is celebrated as a general holiday here. All the local temperance societies participated, and an interesting afternoon meeting was held under the trees.

DISTRICT CONVENTIONS.

Although we hoped that our innovation of district unions would "bring out" the women, little did we think of the laurels which would be won in this, the trial year! The campaign opened by the northern and southern districts. The southern one convened in a beautifully decorated hall at Albion, a suburb of Brisbane. Sixteen unions (W's and Y's) were represented, and thoughtful earnestness, combined with business ability were marked.

The women, with Mrs. Brentnall, Colonial president, in the chair, took the platform on the first evening, and the Y's and L. T. L's provided the program the next night. Luncheon and tea were daintily served each day by the Albion union.

Mrs. Britten, Colonial organizer, journeyed seven hundred miles by invitation, to be present at the first woman's convention ever held in North Queensland. Enthusiasm ran high, one or two people even adding a room to their houses to accommodate the delegates, and "the convention" was talked of everywhere. Five unions sent representatives to Townville and wonderfully did they acquit themselves. Busy hands transformed the hall into a bower of beauty making fitting surroundings for women to meet in earnest conclave, and to discuss that which spoils the sanctity of home. For two days they sat in deliberation, listened to reports of work done, planned future operations and read excellent papers on "The Increasing Importance of the Drink Question," "Bible Reasons for Temperance," "Social Purity," etc. Only three of the women had ever been at a convention before, but the order was perfect, to the openly expressed astonishment of the honorary members and others of their sex. Meetings were held each evening, an enjoyable garden party occupied Saturday afternoon, and Canon Tucker held a special service for the delegates in the cathedral on Sunday afternoon. The Kanakas (South Sea Islanders) of Mackay, sent a message through Mrs. Donaldson, who works amongst them, to say that they would be praying for the convention all the time. Imagine their delight when Mrs. Donaldson returns as the district president. It is impossible to calculate the good done for the North by this gathering and Mrs. Britten's subsequent work. She will call at all towns down the coast. She formed a Y at Townville before leaving.

The district union which comprises the towns on the Darling Downs met in convention at Warwick. Two happy and successful days were spent, the principal papers read being those on "Neal Dow," "Ventilation" and "Flower Mission." Delegates from a new union at Allora were cordially received. A public meeting on the second evening brought a successful convention to a close. The Bible readings during the morning sessions were a feature of each district convention. Two more gatherings are yet to be held. FLORA B. HARRIS,

HAWAII.

THE W. C. T. U. OF HILO, HAWAII.

When Mrs. Leavitt visited us in December, 1884, at the beginning of her tour around the world, she established three unions on as many different islands of the group. At Honolulu, Oahu, Wailuku, Maui, and here at Hilo (pronounced Heelo) Hawaii. The Wailuku union was soon obliged to disband by the removal of some of its leading members. The other two are still flying their banner and fighting for God and home on these beautiful, but rum-cursed islands.

We are taking our usual summer vacation in this loveliest of lovely spots, at the home of our friends, Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Terry, principals of the Hilo boarding school for native boys.

Hilo is a village of some two thousand inhabitants, with a large native church, whose eloquent pastor is Rev. Stephen Desha, a half caste Hawaiian, in whose veins flows some of the bluest blood of Kentucky. There is also an American church of some fifty members, and a Portuguese and Japanese church. The W. C. T. U. is composed mainly of native women, and I want to put upon record the names of Mrs. F. S. Lyman, Mrs. S. L. Austin and Mrs. Luther Severance, all missionaries' daughters, as women who by their zeal, perseverance and ability deserve all praise. Part of their work is to conduct a union gospel temperance meeting one Sunday evening each month. I had the privilege of addressing this meeting the Sunday after I arrived. The large native church was well filled with such a mixture of nationalities as is rarely seen elsewhere—whites, Hawaiians, Japanese and Portuguese, with many tourists and other strangers from abroad.

A few days ago the monthly meeting of the Hilo W. C. T. U. was held, at which I was requested to speak to the native women. A little company of earnest women, native and foreign, met in the prayer-meeting room of the native church, and I told them something of the nature and work of the organization to which we belong, and spoke of the privilege of thus working for God and with God, even in a very humble way. The interest shown, and the hearty handshaking and alohas of these dear native women would have interested and cheered any of you.

We were disappointed not to receive a call from Mrs. Andrew and Dr. Bushnell, en route from Japan, and have not yet learned why they passed us by. We are preparing for a two weeks' mission in September, from Mr. Edward Tennyson Smith, an English temperance lecturer, who has been laboring several years in New Zealand and Australia. Though a stranger to us all, he comes highly recommended, and we are hoping for a gospel temperance revival through his labors. MARY S. WHITNEY.

AUSTRALASIAN W. C. T. U.

The recent triennial convention authorized a deputation to wait upon the General Conference of the Wesleyan Methodist church of Australasia, which met in Adelaide in May. This was the first time that this august body had ever received a deputation of women, but they gave Mrs. Nicholls, Australasia's president, and Miss George, Australasia's superintendent juvenile department, a warm welcome, and passed a resolution of sympathy with our work.

The Methodist papers in the various Colonies commented on the addresses of our representatives in such glowing terms as these: "There is no use denying that, had a vote been taken, the Conference would have given the palm for good speaking (by the deputations) to the representatives of the W. C. T. U."; "It was an unprecedented experience. The addresses of the ladies did them great credit, carried the Conference and proved another broom to sweep away cobwebs of prejudice against woman's claim."

This conference expunged the old regulation concerning women preaching, "in deference to the altered public sentiment on the matter, and the evident necessity for removing all barriers to the exercise of woman's gifts in any sphere to which she is called of God."

In accordance with the suggestion of the triennial convention the first week in July is being observed throughout the Colonies as a special crusade week for prayer, special effort and thankofferings, the offerings to be divided equally between the local, Colonial and Australasian unions.

Our Australasian organizers have begun work, Misses Vincent and Cummins being in New South Wales at present, while Miss A. L. A. Murcutt goes to western Australia in her new capacity this month. FLORA B. HARRIS, BRAZIL.

We have two unions in running order; one here, in Piracicaba, and one in the north, at Pará, under the very efficient management of Mr. and Mrs. Nelson. Another union in Capivary, and one in Taubate were organized.

We find it laborious to procure readings suitable for our meetings, everything has to be translated into Portuguese from English, and if any worker has literature suitable that she has already used in her union and feels disposed to send it to us it will be very gratefully received here, Collegio Piracicabano, Piracicaba or in Pará, Mrs. F. B. Nelson, Caixa 449, Pará, Brazil.

At our Demorest contest which took place in our school, seven girls contested for the medal. The President-elect of the Republic was present and was chairman of the committee of judges. The aquarelle portrait of Miss Willard looked down from the wall upon the scene, and the looked-for visit of the W. C. T. U. leaders with the Petition to the governors of the world was told of and explained. So you see the President will know something of the work before the arrival of the Petition. He seemed interested in the account of the work both in the United States and in England. In the few words that he used in presenting the medal, he expressed the wish that the recipient use her gifts not only in declaiming the productions of others, but also her own original compositions in propagating temperance principles and truths.

WORLD'S WAVE CRESTS.

CAPE COLONY holds its annual convention in September.

THE Orange Free State W. C. T. U. will be permanently organized by a called convention in October.

ANOTHER "seminary Y" has been formed by Miss Palmer at Bethlehem, Orange Free State, South Africa.

As will be seen by our correspondence in another column, the women now have a vote on the liquor interests in Norway.

THE annual meeting of the Norway W. C. T. U. occurs September 4–6 in Christiania. At this meeting it is proposed to take some decisive action against the introduction of barmaids.

A LADY resident of Iceland, who adopted the white-ribbon badge in Norway, has been instrumental in introducing the W. C. T. U. in Faro's Island, and will forward our work in her own land.

S. HAYASHI, president of the temperance society in Yokohama, Japan, a most earnest worker, has the sympathy of his white-ribbon friends in the loss of his wife, who passed into rest early in the summer.

SIR CHARLES MILLS, English representative of South Africa in England, speaks in high terms of Miss Alice Palmer and her work, and expresses himself in favor of the mission of the white-ribbon women, whose work he believes is much valued by the English authorities there.

MRS. MARY R. PHILLIPS, our new vice-president of the World's W. C. T. U. for India, is a veteran resident of that sun-kissed land, having lived there since 1864. In a recent letter she reports an encouraging interest in temperance on the part of English residents in the Punjaub, and the organization of a W. C. T. U. among the hills by a band of missionary ladies.

WINNIPEG Central W. C. T. U. bore almost the entire expense of the Dominion and Provincial conventions this summer. Fair work was again undertaken very successfully. Central W. C. T. U. had a dining tent, where they sold meals, also a tent for ladies to rest in, leave parcels, etc., and where good temperance literature was distributed. They were also successful in preventing beer being sold on the grounds.

THE minutes of the second triennial convention of the Australasian W. C. T. U. have come to hand, and are very interesting reading. There are twenty-six departments of work, all well superintended. We notice with pleasure that the Y's are given a prominent place, and that one of the plans of work is to combine the various colonial white-ribbon papers into one Australasian organ. Congratulations to our island continent friends.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

THE OUTLOOK.

Our annual convention is called to meet at Aberdeen, September 6 to 10, and a good attendance is expected. Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge, our capable and beloved National corresponding secretary, will be with us at our annual meeting. The Aberdeen union which has more than doubled its membership during the past year, will do all in its power to make the coming convention a success.

A number of familiar faces will be absent; some have heard the heavenly summons, while others have left our state for another home. Mrs. C. J. Ward, our efficient state superintendent of heredity and hygiene, has recently moved with her family to California, and that rich state with all its gold never had a purer nugget than it will find in this great soul.

More Demorest medal contests have been held this year than usual, and we are arranging to hold a great gold medal contest at the state convention. An Indian girl from the Sisseton government school will be one of the contestants.

State schools of methods have been held at the Lake Madison and Hot Springs Chautauqua, conducted by Mrs. Emma P. Myers, our capable state corresponding secretary, and Mrs. Isabella Irish. Mrs. Irish is an ex-president of Wisconsin, a lady of culture and refinement; one whom we delight to honor. Schools of methods have been held as a part of the program of a number of county conventions.

The Black Hills district convention was held at Sturgis, August 29 and 30. Mrs. Belle Hammond, the president, succeeded in making this meeting a most successful one.

Mrs. Congressman Pickler is arranging to hold the third district convention at Redfield, just prior to state convention, that the women of her district may stop off en route to the state meeting and save the expense of extra travel.

Mrs. Lulu Ramsey, president fifth district, has been out for a trip, organizing counties and building up the work.

Mrs. Floy Cochran and Mrs. Kate B. Haines boast of a number of new unions in their respective districts. Mrs. R. B. Hager, of Aberdeen, our state superintendent of franchise, gave the alumni address at Simpson College, Iowa, this year, the first lady to receive this honor from this institution.

One of the most signal victories of the year is the indorsement of equal suffrage by the Populist party of the state. Mrs. Anna Simmons, vice-president of state W. C. T. U., represented us, and was granted an opportunity to present the cause in open convention, and at the close of her splendid address, the suffrage resolution carried almost unanimously; men cheered and threw their hats in the air, and there were few dry eyes in the convention of more than five hundred delegates.

The Prohibition party, ever true to womanhood and the home, indorsed equal suffrage as usual, as well as state and National prohibition.

Among the enjoyable features of the Lake Madison Chautauqua was a fine address by Mrs. Helen M. Barker, on "Woman's Work at the World's Fair," Dr. Hancher's address on "Our Daughters," and a lecture by Mrs. Isabella Webb Parks, of Atlanta, Ga.

A vote will be taken at the coming election as to whether or not women shall have full school suffrage. The outlook for the passage for this proposed amendment to the constitution is most flattering. Slowly but surely, the door is swinging open and woman will, ere long, be given her rightful place. Man's equal in all things, yet unlike, as God designed that they should be.

EMMA A. CRANMER,
Pres. South Dakota W. C. T. U.

SCHOOLS AND CONVENTIONS.

We are rejoicing over the success of our state school of methods held recently during the Monona Lake Assembly. We were so fortunate as to secure Mrs. Helen G. Rice, of Boston, as conductor, and so interesting and helpful did she make the "school" that often every seat was taken, and men and women stood during the hour. There were present many white-ribboners, including several state officers and superintendents, and we feel sure many a local worker went back to her union richer in practical knowledge of the work and enthusiasm for it than when she came.

A W. C. T. U. tent near the great tabernacle opened its hospitable doors to many weary women, who were so thankful to find a pleasant place to rest, to leave lunch-baskets and wraps, to enjoy a chat with the friendly Y's and W's within, and often to become interested in our work in a way that will tell for good. Great credit is due a few Madison Y girls, whose untiring, unselfish efforts did much to make W. C. T. U. headquarters a success.

On Temperance Day Mrs. Rice spoke in the Tabernacle in the morning, and did I not know that you are soon to hear from another source of her splendid work in our state, I should want to share with you here many of the lovely things said of her fine address.

In the afternoon an immense audience listened to a magnificent address by John G. Woolley. In our hearts we said, "God has surely called our brother to preach this gospel," and as the great throng began reluctantly to leave the place and there reached our ears the murmur of the hushed, subdued tones as the people began to find words with which to speak of it, we could but feel that a mighty influence had been set in motion that day which would tell for good in the speedier overthrow of the liquor traffic. God bless John G. Woolley, and help him to keep his close, power-filled grasp on Omnipotence!

So well pleased was the assembly management with the W. C. T. U. school of methods that a cordial invitation was extended to make it a permanent feature of the assembly. Plans are already being made for next year, and we are even hoping to erect a building of our own.

The eyes of Wisconsin white-ribboners grow misty and their hearts send up pæans of grateful joy as they think of the State Loyal Temperance Legion convention which was held in Racine, July 11 and 12. We are beginning to comprehend what it means that these brave young soldiers march beside us —no longer behind us—keeping step to the song they sing, and which in their earnest hearts they mean, "Saloons, saloons, saloons must go!"

Wisconsin held the first state L. T. L. convention, we are proud and glad to remember, and this, the fourth, was in every respect a success. More than a hundred delegates were in attendance; sixty-five graduates received their diplomas from the hand of our state W. C. T. U. president, while sixty-one other graduates who could not come to the convention eagerly awaited the coming of their diplomas by mail. Among the graduates it is encouraging to note a goodly number of L. T. L. superintendents.

The convention was publicly welcomed on behalf of the churches, of the schools and of the young people's societies, and one minister stated that he should preach the following Sunday evening on "Points received from the L. T. L. Convention."

A Racine paper, making mention that the state L. T. L. president is a Racine boy, says: "The dignity with which he presided at all the sessions, his just and careful ruling in all the business of the convention, was remarkable in one so young, and puts to blush many an older and more pretentious one." These earnest young men and women are successfully carrying on four departments of work, including work for their bright, helpful state paper, The Rushlight.

These progressive young workers are planning to compile a song book for the Senior work, are striking telling blows against trashy and impure literature, are recommending "debates, discussions and papers on questions of the day relating to good citizenship," and are asking that each Senior L. T. L. in the state shall prepare a Bible reading, the best of which shall be printed for mutual helpfulness.

Surely the most faint-hearted white ribbon soldier in beer-cursed Wisconsin will catch and hold in her heart the conviction of our certain victory, if, with our retiring "none such" superintendent, Mrs. Bradbury, she will think of that convention, of "the sweet spirit of consecration to Christ, the Master, that pervaded the atmosphere, and of the earnest purpose written on the dear young faces to stand for God and Home and Native Land."

The successful W. C. T. U. Institute at Bay View, Mich., "borrowed" some Wisconsin talent which we very glad to furnish. From all sides we hear warmest commendation of the thoughtful and thought-arresting paper on "The W. C. T. U. from a Physician's Standpoint," written for that occasion by Dr. Annette J. Shaw. Our state president, Mrs. V. H. Campbell, spent some time at Bay View, presenting valuable papers on "How Shall we Educate Our Daughters?" and "Effective and Defective Methods." She also delivered an address on social purity at Petoskey, Mich., and was invited to lecture on the same subject at Big Foot, Ill. Mrs. Campbell has recently been doing some missionary work in her own state, going to little places where the gospel is seldom heard, and temperance (which is the gospel also) almost never.

For once, our white-ribboners are looking forward with pleasure to the probable election of a Republican governor. Not that we sanction any more than formerly

Two ways of washing.

One is the same way your grandmother washed—but there wasn't anything better, in her day. You rub soap into the clothes—then you rub them up and down on a washboard till you get the dirt worn off. This is hard work—and while you're wearing off the dirt, you're wearing out your clothes, too. The other way is Pearline's.

You put the clothes into Pearline and water—then you wait. Pearline gets the dirt all out. A little rinsing makes them perfectly clean.

Pearline does the work. There can't be anything so easy, so economical, or that keeps your clothes so absolutely safe from harm and wear and tear.

Beware Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you, "this is as good as" or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE—Pearline is never peddled, if your grocer sends you an imitation, be honest—send it back. 426 JAMES PYLE, New York.

the attitude of the Republican party toward the liquor traffic, but Major Upham's wife is "our" Mary C. Upham, state and National superintendent of lumbermen's work, and it would mean much to liquor-cursed Wisconsin if the light could shine out from a Christian home, a white-ribbon home, for all the state to see. For there is an undertone of devotion to principle in Mrs. Upham's playful remark, "When 'we' are elected the white ribbon will ever twine with the 'old flag' the papers are making so public." And while we appreciate the true womanliness which shrinks from the publicity which the reporters are seeking to give the simple, old-fashioned, happy home and family, yet we are sure her desire will be fully met, and they "will be kept humble and not spoiled for Christian work."

CONVENTION ITEMS.

The federation of unions at Cleveland, O., is busily at work in preparation for the National W. C. T. U. Convention, to meet November 16-21 inclusive. Mrs. Grace P. Oviatt, 419 Sibley street, is president of the Central union, and chairman railroad committee; Mrs. C. E. Tillinghast, Hotel Kennard, chairman reception committee; Mrs. Alice M. Terrill, 99 Lincoln avenue, chairman entertainment committee; Mrs. S. M. Perkins, 121 Adelbert avenue, chairman finance committee; Mrs. T. R. Doty, 699 Scranton avenue, chairman baggage committee; Mrs. Mary A. Doty, 46 Auburn street, chairman Sabbath service committee, and will also have charge of the post-office department; Miss Luella Bradley, 31 Woodbine street, chairman decorations committee. We believe the convention will be one of unusual interest. Gen. Neal Dow will be with us if the Lord permits. Dr. Bashford, president of Wesleyan University, Delaware, O., will preach the annual sermon; a prayer-meeting will be held daily from 8:30 to 9:30 a. m., and a half hour Bible reading will be given from 11:45 to 12:15 noon, and each meeting will as usual be opened with devotional exercises. Other features of the convention will be given from week to week.

The World's W. C. T. U. biennial convention will be held in London, Eng., in 1895, in connection with the annual convention of the British Women's Temperance Association, probably in the month of June. Arrangements are already being made to insure a large and representative attendance.

MARY A. WOODBRIDGE,

Treasurer's Corner.

Treasurer's Books close November 1.

"An old Crusader" writes: "We in Western Pennsylvania are not in favor of raising the dues, as it would be disastrous to our work, as many of our members are unable to pay dues at present, on account of our public works being closed and hundreds out of employment. If any wish to pay more let them do so, but do not make it compulsory." We are very sorry that our good women are suffering from hard times in Pennsylvania, but they are not alone; every state feels it more or less, and yet we are glad that the general work in Pennsylvania is so planned that it is moving on splendidly. The state treasurer has ordered one thousand blanks, which she has promised to send out to local unions, and when we get these reports we shall know about what the women are doing.

Orders are coming for our "Self-Denial" envelopes and if they could be used in mass-meetings celebrating Miss Willard's or Mrs. Leavitt's birthday, either upon the 28th or the Sundays preceding or following (23d or 30th), many would contribute who do not belong to us and the union would be able to send in a much larger sum. Let the envelopes be placed in each seat with pencils. Let the presiding officer call attention to the object to which the fund will be given and urge each person to contribute, placing gift in envelope and the name, address and the amount upon the envelope, before placing in the collection basket. If these meetings are properly worked up new enthusiasm will be enkindled and a host of new members will be enlisted. If blank cards could be placed in the envelopes for names of those who would join and the pledge read from the platform so that each auditor would know to what they subscribed it would greatly expedite the work.

May we not look for thorough work and great results?

HELEN M. BARKER.

MRS. HELEN M. BARKER, National treasurer, will be at liberty to speak in Rhode Island and Massachusetts during the first half of October. Mrs. Clara C. Hoffman can make one or two engagements for speaking in Ohio, Pennsylvania and New York the third week in September. For terms and dates write to Mrs. M. B. Horning, Room 1116, The Temple, Chicago.

TWO LITTLE BASKETS.

BY NETTIE H. PELHAM.

(A collection dialogue for two little girls carrying prettily decorated baskets.)

First Girl:

Two little baskets dainty and fine,
That one is yours and this one is mine.
Once they were filled with fairest flowers
That blossomed sweet in the woodland bowers.
But those soon faded, as blossoms will,
And only the baskets are left us still.
Now, baskets, you know, were made to be used,
And these, I am certain, must feel abused
And think we have done them each a wrong
By leaving them idle and empty so long.
We ought to fill them—we really ought,
But how shall we do it? I've looked and sought
And begged for flowers, but all in vain.
They're out of season—yes, that is plain.

Second Girl:

Flowers are out of season? Oh, yes.
But I have a plan you never could guess.
Listen, my dear, and I'll tell you now:
We'll make our primmest, daintiest bow;
With graceful steps, and with sweetest smiles,
We will slowly pass down the church's aisles;
And this is the thing we each will do,
We will stop at the end of every pew
And surely these folks, with right good-will,
Will help us to both our baskets fill.
And soon we shall hear the merry jingle,
As nickels and dimes and quarters mingle,
Till our baskets are filled to the very top
And then, at last, we will gladly stop.

First Girl:

Well, that is a plan that's awfully funny!
But what in the world will we do with the money?
There'll be so much we never can spend it,
Shall we keep it, or give it away, or lend it?

Second Girl:

I'll tell you, my dear, what we will do,
The work of the W. C. T. U.
For many long years has been highly praised.
We will give them the money, when 'tis raised.
Then you and I shall be able to tell
That it will be spent both wisely and well.

THE GRUMBLIES AND THE SMILIES.

Oh, there never was yet such a hard-used set!
They have to study, or have to sew,
When every one knows they hate it so,
And mamma is always a-saying "no";
While grandmamma is getting the dreadfulest way
Of asking for something most every day!
At dinner there's nothing that's fit to eat;
And somebody else has the brownest meat—
Or the soup's too hot, or the bread's too dry;
And they never did like that kind of pie.
So they're grumbly and growly,
And sulky and scowly,
Till every one thinks we could get on without them.
Poor Grumblies! I feel so sorry about them!

But who can be glum when the Smilies come?
They are always polite; and errands, they say,
Are never too hard or too far away.
And whether they work or whether they play,
Their faces are bright as a new-coined dime,
And they have just the jolliest kind of a time,
And every one's happy to have them nigh;
For if ever a bit of cloud comes by,
They are whisking it inside out in a minute,
And finding the silvery lining that's in it.
They're funny and sunny, and sweeter than honey,
And always a scattering sunshine about them.
Dear Smilies! Why, how could we live without them.

RESTED HIM.

The old man, sitting by the way,
Was weary on that summer day.
A little girl smiled to him there
And shyly came to stroke his hair.
"You are so tired," crooned the child.
"I was," he whispered, "till you smiled."

—W. J. Lampton, in Godey's.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—Let me see, I promised last week to tell you something of the children's pleasures at Chautauqua as I observed them during my recent visit, didn't I? Well, imagine, first of all, a lovely lake. To the inland children, it would seem very wide and beautiful. To the boys and girls accustomed to the great lakes of America, or who live within sound of old ocean's roar, this body of water would appear rather small, for the opposite shore is nearly always distinctly visible even in its widest part. But you would all unite in praising its beauties if you were out rowing in the glow of a beautiful sunset, or steaming over its glassy surface in one of the little steamers which are constantly traveling from one end of the lake to the other.

The shadows and sunshine chase each other over the sloping shores which are sometimes quite obscured in a beautiful blue veil of mist. But when the wind blows hard from the northeast the waves show "white caps" and cast a spray on the beach; sailboats hug the shore and people say, "How very rough the lake is to-day!" This happened several times when I was there, and everybody kept indoors beside the grate fires and wished it would grow pleasant again. But usually this lake is like a gentle child, all smiling and good-natured, whose sullen or angry fits, though very rare, make us long for the sweet spirit to come again to the surface and stay.

Good times at Chautauqua for children, I thought, as I walked along the delightful lake shore, one bright summer morning. Here was a group of boys busy sailing a small boat which would capsize in spite of all they could do. One of their number sat much like this boy in the picture. He could have told them the boat wasn't ballasted right but he was looking very intently just now at a boat crew practising for the next day's regatta. How rhythmically their oars dipped in the water at just the right angle as they moved evenly back and forth on the sliding seats of the long, narrow racing "shell," and the boatswain, holding the rudder, counted aloud the strokes. I stood and watched them some time, too, before proceeding to the north end of the grounds for my visit to the gymnasium.

As I turned to go, I was stopped by an exclamation among the young sailors who were all standing tiptoe on the rocks and poking with a stick at some strange object floating in the water. "What do you s'pose it is?" "Where's its head?" "What a funny fish!" Very much interested I stepped nearer and peering over the boys' shoulders saw a curious thing, at least it was a new sight to me. A small, hungry perch, in seeking its morning meal, had evidently "bitten off more than it could chew," for it had tried to swallow whole a minnow one-fourth as large as itself! And the poor thing looked like a fish with a tail at both ends. It was a good illustration of what greed may lead people, as well as animals, to do.

It didn't take long to point this out to the children, for time was flying, and I knew the exercises at the gymnasium must have begun. On my way I passed a number of sand tents where the little ones were having glorious times. Large piles of sand had been placed upon the lawns; over these were built pretty canopies to keep off the sun and then the babies, and boys and girls too young for kindergarten, were provided with spades and pails, and watched by kind mothers and nurses who saw that no harm came to them in their play. Pale-cheeked city babies and sickly little ones get well and strong in such places as these and grow to the form and stature which God intended. Happy Chautauqua babies!

A few minutes later, from the visitors' gallery in the finely fitted up gymnasium, your Aunt Jane was watching with equal pleasure the drill of the children under their teacher.

The big public exhibition in the great amphitheater (large outdoor place of meeting) was crowded on athletic day, and the boys' and girls' exercises compared well with those of the grown up folks. (I must confess that I liked them best! But perhaps I am partial.)

The principal reason why a vacation in Chautauqua is different from the thousands of places by lake, sea and mountain where rowing, swimming, wading, driving, bicycling, tennis, croquet and all the outdoor pleasures can be had, is that while these things are all provided—the best of the kind—the greater pleasures which come from reading, studying and strengthening the mind as well as the body are here.

There are the children's chorus, the Sunday-school and Bible-classes; the boys' and girls' clubs; the lectures in the numerous halls, which are interesting and plain to boys and girls. (I saw some boys who were so anxious to hear Mr. Frank Beard and see him draw his crayon pictures that they hung like a fringe all around the edge of the big platform. And how they laughed.) Then there's a young people's reading union, with a regular list of books to read each year; and the Chautauqua Congress for big boys who want to know how to be statesmen and serve their country.

Now I have mentioned all I saw, and isn't it inviting enough to make every Cozy Cornerer long for a summer at such a place? Temperance boys and girls are at home in such a spot, for the temperance spirit is strong there. Who can tell me why those who wear the white ribbon love Chautauqua?

PROCEEDS OF SELF-DENIAL WEEK.

SEPTEMBER 22–28.

All self-denial money will be divided as follows: One-half to the World's W. C. T. U. and one-half to the respective nations in which the money is given. For instance, Canada retains one-half of its gifts and sends the other half to the World's.

MEMBERSHIP DAY.

Membership Day, September 28, crowns the week of Self-Denial—it is the birthday of our leader. Shall we not in token of our loyalty and affection resolve with all our hearts and all our work that we will "double up" the membership by the simple process of addition here outlined? We should like postal card pledges to this end. Send them winging along like doves to their windows. If these cards contain a brief statement of how each one was successful in securing one more member, that would add to the interest and might inspire some other. Send along your cards beginning now, and see if we cannot focus the attention of our comrades, one and all, upon this point of 1+1=2. The uplifted heart asking for help to do this will give just that increment of power that will tide us over into the results we seek, and how much these results will mean in the great aggregate "For God and Home and Every Land."

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

Comte de Paris, grandson of Louis Philippe, King of the French, and an exile in England, died September 7 in London.

Instead of the anticipated deficit, the United States treasury returns for the last two summer months show a surplus of nearly seven million dollars.

The Peary relief expedition sent out by the Philadelphia Geographical Society last June is reported to be safe and well at Godhaven, North Greenland.

The Knights of Pythias have decided that all saloon-keepers, bartenders and professional gamblers will hereafter be ineligible to membership in the order.

Last Saturday the Columbian liberty bell rang before the Lincoln monument in Lincoln Park, Chicago, and afterward was taken to Pittsburg, Pa., to the reunion of the Grand Army of the Republic.

The trial of Eugene Debs and other officials of the American Railway Union for conspiracy in instigating the great strikes commenced in the United States circuit court at Chicago last week, Judge Woods on the bench.

During the ceremonies connected with the unveiling of the monument to his grandfather at Kingsberg, last week, Emperor William remarked that while it was true that the province had been won by the sword, he had pledged his word as Emperor that it should be kept by peace.

IT is to be hoped that preparations for Temperance Sunday, September 23, are going forward with all possible zeal. Mrs. Julia A. Bidwell, National superintendent of Sunday-school work, will furnish programs on application to her at Deposit, N. Y. As this is the last Temperance Sunday of our convention year, it should receive more than usual attention. The September Young Crusader furnishes an extra supplement for this occasion.

CHICAGO'S mayor, John P. Hopkins, has given cause for great rejoicing in ordering the city police to destroy all bill boards containing indecent posters. The night of September 6 a large posse of police, armed with lanterns, axes, hatchets and other necessary tools, raided the entire line of an elevated railroad, and utterly demolished the sign boards along the route, committing to deserved destruction the obscene advertising of theaters, variety shows and all manner of objectionable literature. Any one making an attempt to replace these signs will be arrested and prosecuted. Let all the people say, Amen.

OUR editor-in-chief has sent her new subscription with one dollar, promised in her lithograph letter on the first page of THE UNION SIGNAL, August 30. Accompanying this was another subscription secured by our valued contributor, Miss Mary Lathbury. Mrs. Woodbridge has handed in four of the seven subscribers which she has pledged herself to secure—one for each day of Self-Denial Week. One of the head workers in the business department has redeemed her promise for one subscriber and all the white-ribboners in the Temple will turn in at least one new name before the National Convention. Subscriptions from outside are beginning to cheer our hearts. Next week we will let our readers glance into some of the letters which accompany these new names. "It's dogged as does it."

MRS. HAUSER, our ex-president of the W. C. T. U. in India, has issued an attractive circular which we here epitomize. Mrs. Hauser is to give a costume entertainment before several state conventions in the expectation that she will not only meet her own expenses but put some money in the purse of the state and the World's W. C. T. U. She is trying to raise enough money to pay the salary of Mrs. Phillips, of Calcutta, an admirable white-ribboner, who is her successor as president. It may not be clearly understood as yet that Mrs. Hauser has been appointed to raise a fund for the work of the World's W. C. T. U. and by means of this exhibition it is believed that she can do so. Mrs. Hauser has lived fifteen years in India and has written several books on that country. She is a woman of the highest character, and enjoys the confidence of our best workers in India.

THE associated press having scattered abroad the absurd story that because Miss Willard had declared herself a friend of labor, she had deserted the Prohibition party and joined the Populists, we give her own version of the question in an extract from a private letter: "As to the announcement that while a pronounced Prohibitionist, I am in strong sympathy with the views and spirit of the labor party, I am amused to think how very important I must be when the party does not seem at all aware that this has been true of me for many years, and that I have asserted it in my annual addresses, articles for the press, leaflets, etc.; also, that in 1892 I was chosen by the labor party as vice-president of its great convention in St. Louis. The Prohibition and labor parties have almost everything in common and ought to try to coöperate. This has been my belief for years, and now to have the labor papers come out and say that I have just begun to perceive that economic conditions of wage-earners have much to do with the drinking habit is a form of sarcasm that proves to me how little real influence I have one way or another. But 'so mote it be.'"

DR. PARKHURST has returned to his work in New York city, after a three months' holiday in Europe. He did not hesitate to express himself as dissatisfied with the results of the Lexow committee investigation of police corruption, and asserts, with authority, that the commissioners themselves as well as a few captains and sergeants should be dismissed, saying truly, "Those men must have known of the corrupt practices of the captains whom they have now disciplined long before I did. If they did not they were negligent in performance of duty. If they did they were acting in collusion with those captains and should be disciplined themselves." Dr. Parkhurst intends to continue his fight for municipal purification, and upon the re-convening of the Lexow committee will submit evidence of a more startling and positive nature than any yet produced. He builds all hope of "salvation from Tammany corruption" in the renunciation of partisar preferences.

A RIDICULOUS charge was circulated through the press last week to the effect that our National President drank wine at the hotel dinner table at Chautauqua, during her recent visit. While believing the slander too absurd to notice, we asked Miss Willard if she desired to make any reply and in response came the following statement, whose very simplicity is its greatest virtue: "Two bottles of the pure juice of the grape were given to Lady Henry Somerset and me by a teetotal doctor of divinity and we tested it at dinner; that is all there is in the talk. Perhaps the fact that in England our temperance people make a specialty of unfermented drinks caused me to be less on my guard against gainsayers, but it never crossed my mind that my action could be questioned until I saw the report in Cleveland papers. On no account would I wound the sensibilities of any white-ribboner or give aid and comfort to the enemy, and therefore I shall be very careful about grape juice in future." Miss Willard might have added that the W. C. T. U. has always advocated the use of fresh fruit juice as a wholesome and nourishing drink, and that her pronounced position on total abstinence from alcoholic drinks should be sufficient defence to such an unwarranted charge.

JUST as we go to press comes a letter from President Bashford, of Ohio Wesleyan University, describing the effect of Mr. Woolley's address, "Copartnership of Piety and Piracy," as delivered before the Cincinnati Methodist Conference, September 7. Dr. Bashford writes: "John G. Woolley's address was a most brilliant and eloquent argument for prohibition as to the duty of the Christian voter, to which I ever listened. It produced a profound impression on the audience. I never saw men stirred more deeply. The discussion lasted until after midnight in many groups of ministers and citizens. The Republicans conceded that it was the strongest plea for prohibitory political action to which they ever listened, but contended that Mr. Woolley had no more right to make such an argument on that platform, than would a Republican or a Democrat to make an argument for his party if invited to address the Conference. The Prohibitionists declared that the only question as to the propriety of the address was whether or not Christianity demands political opposition to the saloon. If it does, then Mr. Woolley was bound as a Christian statesman to say so. I think the latter view prevailed among many thoughtful and candid men, and I believe that scores will never lend their political influence again to any party which licenses the saloon. The address combines the relentless logic of Finch, the wit of Holmes and the classic finish of Phillips." Every reader will turn with special interest to pages 3 and 4 of this issue, where this remarkable speech will be found in full. It may be procured from us in leaflet form for ninety cents a hundred, in convenient form for circulation in public meetings, also for insertion in private lettets.

DR. BUCKLEY ON EQUAL SUFFRAGE.

BY ALICE STONE BLACKWELL.

The casting of a vote is essentially the expression of a choice, rather than the issuing of a command. True, the result of the election is authoritative; but the taking part in it, along with a thousand other persons on an equal footing, has not enough of the "imperative mood" in it to develop an imperious spirit in any normal woman.

Such a spirit would seem much more likely to be developed by the habitual exercise of direct personal authority. Yet this is exercised by a multitude of women, without objection from any one. It is exercised by mothers among their children, by women teachers, by women who are presidents of societies, and by women who are at the head of large charitable and benevolent institutions. In most cases it does not make them arrogant and domineering in their private life. If a woman can exercise direct government without producing this result, it is hardly likely to be produced by the exercise of the much more impersonal and more diffused authority involved in the suffrage.

The exercise even of direct personal authority by a woman is not always disagreeable to a man, as Dr. Buckley seems to think. If he regards her authority as legitimate he does not resent it; and if he happens to like the woman, he is apt to obey her with more satisfaction and enthusiasm than he would obey a man in the same position. This is shown in the case of able and popular queens. To cite a conspicuous and modern instance, it is shown on a large scale in the Salvation Army. Many women are "captains," "lieutenants," etc., and they are obeyed by their soldiers as heartily and unhesitatingly as are the male officers—often more so. A military man in England objected strongly to having women called by these titles in the Salvation Army. He was advised to accompany the "captain" of the Salvation Army corps in his town upon her rounds for a day. He did so; and having seen how implicitly hundreds of rough men obeyed her, he said at the day's end, "She is a captain, and there is no reason why she should not be called so."

Dr. Buckley says that "to govern in the state" (i. e., to share in the government of the state) "would unfit woman for her position in the family." That depends a good deal upon what her position in the family is to be. If a woman has a share of authority in the state, she may wish to have a share of authority in the family. But ought she not to have it, and does she not have it already, in well-regulated families? I knew of a family where the father, strongly imbued with the idea that any exercise of authority by women was unbecoming, instructed his young son that he need not obey his mother; that he was to take his orders from his father alone. If his mother wanted him to do anything, she must "persuade" his father to tell him to do it. The family was not happy, and the boy turned out badly. Our republic is now conducted upon the principle of that family; and the results are unsatisfactory. But the average American family is not governed in that one-sided way. Neither do the best American families answer to Dr. Buckley's conception of the ideal family—one in which the husband is to do all the "determining" and the wife is either to "coalesce in the determining tendency of her husband," or get her own way by coaxing. In the happiest and most sensible families, husband and wife consult together over all important questions, and the views and wishes of the wife are habitually taken into account in arriving at a decision,—not as an exceptional instance of favor and indulgence, but as a matter of course, because the husband is enlightened and fair-minded enough to see that it is right. The number of such homes is increasing, and the despotic family is steadily and inevitably giving place to the democratic family, to the advantage of all concerned. To grant equal suffrage is simply to bring the government of the state into line with the government of the best homes.

If equal suffrage developed in women a domineering spirit, incompatible with family comfort, and made them "feel their position in the home an insupportable restraint," it would, of course, increase the number of divorces. Dr. Buckley stoutly predicts that it will inevitably do so. This is a practical test, and if the test fails, Dr. Buckley's theory fails with it. Upon this phase of the question the United States census and the marriage and divorce reports give us some light. Full suffrage was extended to the women of Wyoming in 1869. During the twenty years from 1870 to 1890, in the United States at large, divorce increased three times as fast as the population. In the group of Western states, omitting Wyoming, it increased almost four times as fast as the population. In Wyoming it increased only about half as fast as the population.

"Professor," said a student in the botany class, "is there any way of telling with positive certainty whether this is a mushroom or a toadstool?" "Yes," answered the professor, "eat it. If it is a mushroom, you will live; if it is a toadstool, you will die." There is no test so infallible as the test of experiment.

Dr. Buckley tries to weaken the force of the experiment in Wyoming by pointing out that in 1890 the state had a population of only sixty thousand seven hundred and five. But eating poisonous toadstools would kill a small number of persons as certainly as a large number. If equal suffrage was the unnatural and essentially pernicious principle that Dr. Buckley thinks, it would make trouble in a community where homes are numbered by tens of thousands as inevitably as in one where they are numbered by hundreds of thousands. An ounce of experiment is worth a ton of theory.

SOME OF OUR WOMEN.

II.

Mrs. Freeborn Johnson.

BY A. P. M.

The oldest woman and the oldest member of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Providence, R. I., is Mrs. Freeborn Johnson. When the state union was organized in 1874, Mrs. Annie Wittenmyer, then president of the National society, being present, a discussion arose as to the name of the new society. Several were suggested, discussed and rejected.

At last Mrs. Johnson said: "If ever the liquor traffic is wiped out it will be by the united efforts of Christian women. Let us show our colors and let the world know it is the Christian women who are fighting this foe, and in the name of Christ we shall conquer."

Some argued against the word Christian, believing that it would debar good women who might join and do good work; others felt that the name would arouse prejudice against the society. Christian sentiment, however, prevailed; the spirit of prayer was breathed upon that audience of earnest women and when Mrs. Johnson rose to move, in the fear of God and in the name of Christ, that the society be called "the Women's Christian Temperance Union," all seemed impressed with the significance and appropriateness of the name, and it was heartily and unanimously adopted.

Mrs. Wittenmyer seemed satisfied that this was the title which the National organization must also adopt. To Mrs. Johnson, therefore, belongs the honor of the name of the grandest organization of women the world has yet seen.

Mrs. Johnson subscribed for the first issue of Our Union and has continued to the present time a subscriber and constant, appreciative reader of THE UNION SIGNAL.

When Mrs. Carse first projected the stupendous thought and plan of the W. C. T. U. Temple, Mrs. Johnson followed every step with glad anticipation and with prayer. She also resolved that of her own life should be given her offering.

Mr. Freeborn Johnson is a worthy consort of such a woman; appreciating the thought of personal service, he agreed to pay a stipulated sum for domestic work which Mrs. Johnson should perform until the one hundred dollars should have been earned necessary to place her name upon the Rhode Island tablet in the Temple.

This has been done while in her eighty-fifth year, and suffering from a fall which caused constant pain, having broken several ribs. In addition she has had the care of her husband, a rheumatic invalid. This noble act will be better understood when it is known that it was purely voluntary, as Mr. Johnson is a gentleman of considerable wealth, and benevolent withal. April 26, Mrs. Johnson left her home for the first time since October, went to the bank—not willing that any one else should do it for her—drew the precious one hundred dollars and forwarded it to the treasurer of the Temple fund, thanking God from a glad heart that she has been spared to complete the task.

Mr. and Mrs. Johnson were noted for their staunch abolition principles in the early days, withdrawing from the Methodist Church because the pastor requested the brethren to refrain from offering prayer in public for the anti-slavery cause. In the last election—April—Mr. Johnson was strongly inclined to repeat the old record by withdrawing from the Congregational church because some of the leading members voted with the old parties and not with the Prohibition party. Though advanced in years, Mr. Johnson is in the foremost rank of reform. It is inspiring to see this aged couple keep step with current thought, the eye kindling with enthusiasm as they discuss the latest movement of the temperance forces in the field.

Many women much younger will do well to emulate such a spirit of sacrifice for the cause of "Home and Every Land," as Mrs. Johnson has shown these many years. She was one of the number who engaged in presenting the first petition to the General Assembly asking for "no-license," in 1873, before the state union was organized. A company of Christian temperance women went down to Newport to the May meeting of the Assembly. Gov. C. C. Van Zandt—just now deceased—was president of the Senate. The movement was unprecedented and unpopular. After a heated discussion the vote resulted in a tie! The women knew the man whose duty it was to cast the deciding vote; they trembled and devoutly prayed for Divine power to open the eyes and move the heart of the governor. His own story is thrilling. He said: "When I saw the responsibility which had suddenly brought upon me a decision of the important question, a strange feeling came over me; the present seemed banished; the past rose like a panorama; I saw pass in order before me the scenes of my boyhood and young companions; several had filled drunkard's graves and left broken-hearted parents. I saw the wrecks strewn all along my path; I knew rum had done it all; I knew license was wrong in principle, and yet all my life had given my vote for it. And now, my vision cleared, the gavel fell, and the women gained their first petition almost by a miracle."

Thus has Mrs. Johnson been identified with every movement in the cause of temperance in our "little Rhody." Providence union is proud to give her a place as honorary president. May her mantle fall upon one worthy when she may rest from her labors.

AMERICANISM IN FINANCE.

I.

BY LUCINDA B. CHANDLER.

What would be an American system of finance? To apply the American principle to all that constitutes the financial system of this country. What is the American principle? Is it not that the just ordering of all the people's affairs inheres in man's constitutional right to choose how his affairs shall be ordered? In the language of the immortal document, all mankind are by virtue of their human quality endowed with inalienable rights,—the right to life, liberty and happiness. The right to life involves the right to the means of subsistence. Nature has provided the resources which afford subsistence to man, on the condition that he work. Consequently the fact that subsistence is gained primarily only through the application of human energy to natural resources, proves that labor is the right relation of man to the means of subsistence.

This being the true relation of man to his means of subsistence it follows that any individuals or classes of individuals who attempt to obtain subsistence without labor are in some way appropriating to themselves the product of the labor of others. For labor, the energy and skill of man alone produces what feeds, clothes, shelters and supplies physical needs, and what ministers to the finer tastes and artistic faculties of mankind. This gives to labor not only supreme dignity, but the supreme right to control the political and economic systems and agencies by which the conditions of labor affect subsistence.

Nature says work, and be sheltered, clothed, fed, and delighted with the creations of art, of beauty, of the brain, and all that gives happiness. As no man can by his own labor supply himself with each and every product that ministers to his need and happiness, an exchange of products becomes a need.

From this necessity sprang the idea of something to represent the value of products and by which their exchange could be effected without a movement of each and all the products to be exchanged. Money was invented to be the instrument of exchange. Had money never been made by the selfish greed of man to serve any other purpose than the exchange of products, and to facilitate the increase of products by the promotion of enterprise, it would have been a beneficent agency, and served to enhance human welfare.

The American principle of equal opportunity, if applied to our financial system, would make money serve all the people for the good of each and all. But we have the money huckster, the dealer in money, and a non-producer. This feature of our financial system belongs to the barbarism and despotism of the old crude civilizations, in which autocracy and the superior prerogative of a class are recognized as a rightful part of political economy.

The feudal lord and the slave catcher and slave owner compelled the worker, who had been first deprived of his liberty by force, to contribute the product of his labor to his master's subsistence and accumulations. He did this by physical might and the savagery of war, brutality and despotism. The function of the world's financial system, which gives the money huckster the power to draw from the productive energy of labor an increase of his commodity, money, is but another phase of the same spirit of compelling the productive laborer to contribute to the non-producer. Money cannot work, and except it is made of use to human needs by the labor of man, can add nothing to the total product of wealth.

The prerogative of money to confiscate the productive energy of labor and make the laborer contribute to the subsistence and accumulations of the non-productive owner of money is only less cruel, brutal and savage than the confiscation of labor by the prerogative of kings and feudal barons, slave catchers and slave owners.

Usury and bonded indebtedness are another form of slavery, and have no rightful place in this country.

Americanism is the welfare of all the people. Americanism is equal opportunity for all. Americanism is justice. Americanism has no political or economic classes. The American citizen of these United States who has a superior endowment of heredity and of brains, has the same and only the same political right of any and all citizens, according to the letter and spirit of our charter of liberty.

There is no guarantee or suggestion in the constitution that a person of superior business capacity and talent for enterprise or accumulation shall enjoy special privileges. Moreover, it is contrary to the spirit and the letter of that precious compact. Our constitution was not framed on the Hamiltonian idea that the most competent should rule, but on the Jeffersonian idea that all the people should have an equal voice in ruling themselves.

Americanism in economics is making conditions for industry, and the transportation and exchange of the products of industry, the best that will insure to the laborer the product of his toil. The financial system that admits of the individual money dealer who can charge and legally collect usury, is a system that defeats the first principle of Americanism, the promotion of the general welfare. Admitting that any amount of use for money is right, which is not admissible from the standpoint of justice and the nature of things—the measure of that use, or interest, as it is termed, can, in justice, be only in the same proportion as is the natural increase of wealth.

"He is best and purest who pardons others as if he himself sinned daily, but avoids sinning as if he never pardoned."

When a great social question presses for settlement it is only for a little while that the voice of reason can be heard. The masses of men hardly think at any time. It is difficult even in sober moments to get them to calmly reason. But when passion is roused, then they are like a herd of stampeded bulls. I do not fear that present social adjustments can continue. That is impossible. What I fear is that the dams may hold till the flood rises to fury. What I fear is that dogged resistance on one side may kindle a passionate sense of wrong on the other. What I fear are the demagogues and the accidents.—Henry George.

COPARTNERSHIP OF PIETY AND PIRACY.*

BY JOHN G. WOOLLEY.

If my heart were the speaker to-day, you should not want for eloquence. I was born into this church, in this conference, as were also my father and my mother. The bones of my grandparents lie in this soil. Here my school days began and ended; here I found and married the bravest woman in the world.

From Collinsville, my birthplace, to Wilmington, has been a long journey, terrible in its waste, and losses, awful in its disappointments and perils, unspeakable in its heart aches; but I have come back, back from traveling in far countries, back from riotous living, back from husks and shame and swine. Graves do not run to meet one, but there are voices in your eyes that bid me welcome.

Doubtless some of you remember my parents and my sister who lived at Seven Mile. They, too, have gone a long journey and they will not come back again,—but I shall go to them.

I did not offer myself to speak to you. Your committee has invited me to come and say something about the saloon. It was not easy to come, but if it had been much more difficult I should have accepted the invitation, for with respect to the cause—for which I am so glad and proud to stand, or any noble labor—almost the nearest thing to victory is the Methodist Church; and as touching myself personally, I know of nothing more like fame than being counted fit to direct, for a space, the thought and prayer of the Cincinnati conference upon this greatest reform of these greatest days.

I will get about my errand directly. If I speak with unconventional plainness you will be patient with me, for my heart hurts, and you would not wonder if I were to tell you all. I will not; it is a long story, pitiful, sinful, but it ends well,—a great point in a story.

I have the advantage, or disadvantage, of not knowing how a single man in the Conference votes. But the matter is political, and I for one, am very glad of it, and hope and expect that it will perplex, derange and engross politics until the right wins; for, of the future peace, prosperity and perpetuity of this country, "other political foundation can no man lay than is laid in Jesus Christ," the infinite victim and enemy of the liquor traffic.

. . . . . .

The time seems inauspicious for a calm survey of the subject. The country is feverish, the great parties are on tiptoe, one of expectancy of victory, the other of apprehension of defeat, and the saloon has votes to let, and the candidate or party that gets them must insure or ignore the life of the saloon.

The drink devil has taken the Republican Christian up into a very high mountain and shown him the electoral vote of all the northern states of the Union and said, "All these will I give you if you will simply ignore me in politics."

And he has appeared to the Democratic Christian in the wilderness, faint, hungry and confused, and said, "All you have to do is to 'say the word' and the saloon vote, the rocks and shards and wreckage of the blackest wilderness and woe of life, shall be loaves and fishes and spoils and power for you."

And he has taken labor to the brink of ruin and said, "Cast thyself down and tempt capital to play the angel and fly to succor you."

. . . . . .

This happens at a time when conscience is politically voiceless except in the mouth of the dwarfish and sharp-tongued prohibitory party, which makes it difficult for me to speak frankly and yet avoid the charge of being a promoter of a party propagand. I am not that, as you shall see, but I intend to speak the plain, unvarnished truth without fear or favor of any man or any party.

The naked truth is an awesome thing if one is unaccustomed to it, or of a prudish turn, and there is something in our political atmosphere that makes many excellent people so skittish that it is well-nigh impossible to get them to stand while it passes; and others get used to it so easily that they seem scarcely to see it at all. On this account I am constrained to be as plain as poverty, but as unpartisan as alcohol and as unsectarian as sin.

There is great confusion as to what is partisan. Doubtless if one were to speak in Tammany Hall from the text, "Thou shalt not steal," he would be thought offensively partisan,—and perhaps it would be so.

. . . . . .

Let us, to begin with, be perfectly frank and very charitable, but let it be the understanding that this train will run into anything that is "on the track." Truth crosses the highways of this world "at grade," neither burrows nor balloons, rings no bell, blows no whistle, has no flagmen, semaphores, block-systems, nor colored lights, and if your party balks to-day on a crossing, you would better dismount no matter though it be "a thoroughbred" with a matchless "record"; or, if you get your feelings hurt, lay it, in simple justice, to your own contributory negligence.

The track is laid, I did not lay it; the wire is overhead, I did not stretch it. I lift up my soul in silent prayer, as a trolley, turn on the current for all there is in it of light or power, set the rheostat wide open and throw the crank away.

I should offend against your intelligence, insult the church of our fathers, and prove my personal inadequacy for this task so graciously assigned and this privilege so gratefully acknowledged, if in this presence I should spend a minute in the threadbare and obsolete business of denouncing the liquor traffic. Compared to that, it were a thing of deep philosophy to carry coals to Newcastle. One can almost pity the saloon, it is so unanimously despised, and there is no depth of its awful work that the Methodist Church has not sounded. There is no wound that it has made into which the Methodist Church has not tried to pour its precious sweet wine and oil.

There is no need to go back of the record. "The liquor traffic can never be licensed without sin;" that is the Methodist interpretation of the voice of God, and the finest sentence in the language of this reform,—so far. Of the colors she flies and her status upon the technically moral aspect of the subject, the Methodist Church may well be proud. No Methodist man deals in the drink except some very careful or very negligent physicians, some belated druggists or greedy pharmaceutical hypocrites, and our homes are clean in the main. No alcoholic sacrament, so far as I know, jeopards a redeemed drunkard in a Methodist Church, but on election day the "visible church" becomes "invisible" and drowses like a chameleon upon the bar of the saloon; for saloons are creatures of license, licenses are creatures of law, laws are creatures of legislatures, legislatures are creatures of political parties, and the parties that stand for license, or non-intervention, contain ninety per cent of the Methodist vote.

Now, if I were going to use any anæsthetic, here is the place to administer it, for I am about to say something very disagreeable. It is easy, tempting in fact, to say handsome things about the attitude of the Methodist Church upon this subject, but it is time the truth be spoken. We have for so long called it a prohibition church that we have almost come to believe it; as we cannot afford to believe a lie, let us take an account of stock, and get at the "truth in the inward parts."

First, The corporation, that soulless, bodiless, ineffectual phantom—the legal fiction that has no voice but its seal, and can speak only into warm wax—while sincerity means sine cera—without wax — the technical "church," that might, by some defective notice or other functional lapse, die and be dead a thousand years, and its closest adherent never suspect the fact,—that, is for Prohibition.

Second, The woman membership, the motherhood, wifehood, sisterhood, the chief at suffering and praying and paying, the industrially efficient but politically submerged and voteless four-fifths of the church,—that, is for Prohibition.

And last and least the small, active, ineffectual, pestiferous minority who habitually throw their votes away,—that, is for Prohibition.

But the great, practical, influential, respectable, masterful, voting church is the unswerving, intolerant, unreasoning, incorrigible patron of license, in moral, legal, political, civil and criminal effect.

I should be a great fool, by making that statement, to cancel my welcome among you and banish any hope of good by my coming, if it were not true, and though it be true, I am well aware I shall hardly escape the accusation of malignity to the church, but I really honor her and you by going straight at the bones of the subject.

I speak the simple truth when I say that if the average Methodist man were to go gunning for the enemies of the church, he would be rather more liable to shoot a Prohibitionist than a saloon-keeper.

I ought not to assert that carelessly, but I do it by a process learned from my mother, many years ago, under circumstances so impressive as to admit of no doubt of its fundamental correctness. When I came home undrowned, but with my hair wet, and my shirt wrong side out, and testified at the inquest that I had not been near the river, she invariably held, upon the weight of the evidence, that while I had been mercifully preserved by a kind Providence from a watery grave, there were basic defects in my method of approaching truth. Her system had its drawbacks, doubtless, but I know from private advices not to be gainsaid, that she rarely arrived at an untenable position.

Our splendid declarations are the compositions of extreme men against which the spirit and traditions of Methodism forbid the more conservative to fight, but do not express the real present sentiment of the body, which is approximately this: The liquor traffic can never be licensed without sin; but on the other hand, the Republican party can never be kept alive without license; therefore sin under protest, but stay with the majority, "for if any man sin he has an advocate with the Father"; "for it must needs be that offenses come, and woe unto him by whom they come"; but once they have come, license the villain until you can kill him by his own vote. That, as I understand it, is a kind of ecclesiastical echo of the Republican party, and it is contemptible for the Methodist Church to be an echo of anything but the voice of God.

There are several answers to this. First: That the Methodist church does mean what it says, but that its deliverances must receive a reasonable interpretation; that it is impossible immediately to promulgate or enforce the right in this behalf, that while the Republican party is not openly committed to prohibition, but is, speaking in general terms, a license party, it yet contains a great majority of the prohibition sentiment, and has done more than any other party for that cause in a local way; that its general trend and outlook are in the direction of ultimate prohibition; that Democratic success is a thing greatly to be dreaded, not only on this one account but many others, and that, therefore, the real, sincere meaning of the resolutions, as well as the plain duty of the church, is to maintain the somewhat, though insufficiently, advanced position of the Republican party by its votes, until by its precepts, it can build up the public sentiment to the height of covering at one stride the distance between the high-priced harlotry of Republican-party virtue and the sanctified purity of Methodist desire. That, in short, the business of the church is to educate the Republican party to prohibition, and I say frankly, I think that might be done, but not with such a teacher. A Christianity that consents when sinners entice it will never convert them from error. A judge who takes bribes openly can never hope to bring about a pure judiciary; and putting the whole subject on the single basis of education, I say that a Christian man—clergyman or layman—is guilty of abominable impudence teaching the world in general to vote the way he does not in particular. A Republican preacher can lead his flock no higher, politically, than Republican politics, and that is no higher than a dramseller can reach standing flat-footed. The utmost of a Democratic preacher's power, politically, is to make Democrats. The man who is to teach prohibition to the world must be a prohibitionist, brain, brawn and ballot. And the great problem for the church is to get fit to preach Christ to the political parties.

Here is food for reflection. Do not be angry at me; it is not worth while. Think it over. The weight and brains and votes of the Methodist Church from the bishops to the last class of probationers is in favor of the Republican party, and the Republican party's nightmare is the dread of growing too decent to be congenial to saloon-keepers. My charge against it is not perfidy, so much as superfidy, or in other words, not so much that it has betrayed the church as that it has won and deserved the abiding confidence of the liquor traffic. Every Republican platform this autumn declares or will declare for a licensed saloon in terms as clear as language can invent; for in the light of blazing property fired by drink-crazed mobs, and flaming hell-fire of drink curling around the pyres of martyred loves and pillaged homes, in the light of our criminal records, the reports of the commissioner of internal revenue, the teaching of the schools, the voices of the pulpit and the press, the agitations of the Salvation Army and the temperance societies, the petitions of the people aghast at the copartnership of piety and piracy under license laws, Silence in a platform is only another spelling of saloon.

Every Republican state ticket this autumn and the national ticket two years hence will nominate in a blank space—white in the glare of campaign flambeaux, but black as Erebus in the white light of truth—its perennial but nameless candidate, the saloon.

Vote for it if you will, and I'll not rail at you, but, God helping me, you shall never again say you did not think about it; and as for me I make no claim of being cast in an heroic mold, but I would let this right hand rot in stocks or be gnawed off by rats before I would vote for it.

I say nothing about the Democratic party; it bids openly and above board for the support of the criminal classes; but whichever party of the two mounts the people's throne, the double-faced bawd of modern Babylon—the liquor traffic—dons the civic purple, too, and carries on her damnable commerce in the very sittings of the courts of law.

Prophets of God have come and gone, and lain in the horrid limbo of public obloquy, and gone to political and social death for meddling with the hideous concubinage of crime and power. Upon election days the saloon, eldest-born daughter of the scarlet consort, dances before the sovereign, who, blazing with lust and the delights of power, calls the dancer and says: "Ask of me whatsoever thou wilt and I will give it"; and she replies, instructed by her mother, "Bring me the head of a Clinton B. Fisk upon a charger,"—and the voting church, except a handful of despised fanatics, attend the executioner, and do his bidding, and cry "Long live Herodias!"

. . . . . .

Do you resent my saying that? It is easy to settle. Look at this state; you have here Republicanism and Methodism, both at their best, and the top-notch of your progress makes the state accessory both before and after the fact to every saloon in Ohio.

The events of your last legislature are very pertinent and perfectly familiar to you all. The legislature was Republican three to one. The governor was a Republican and a Methodist. The church was practicably unanimous in presenting the Haskell bill. It was a very modest request; it could, in fact, scarcely be called temperance legislation, but a slight reform, in the interest of local liberty and peace and order. What was it, that was asked of the legislature? Only this, that in localities where public sentiment had risen to the level of the Methodist doctrine on this subject, the people, in the exercise of local self-government, might prohibit saloons.

Who asked that? Christian Ohio asked that of Republican Ohio. Ohio women and children asked that of Ohio men. The face of Jesus Christ in the haggard and hopeless features of Ohio drunkards asked that of Ohio's strong men. The hands of the Son of God were ready raised to speak a benediction on the statute.

Who was opposed? Every saloon-keeper, every brewer, every distiller, every gambler, every brothel keeper, every criminal of low and high degree.

What came of it? Nothing. Was it forgotten? No! Crowded out by press of public business? No! It was strangled! By Democrats? No. By the party and for the sake of the party to which Methodist Ohio pins its utter faith.

There must have been powerful reasons? Yes, one: Representative Locke, of Madison, made it so plain that a wayfaring man, though a member of the legislature, need make no mistake. He said: "It will be suicide to the Republican party," and I am free to say that when a party like that shrinks from or postpones suicide the Methodist vote ought to kill it. The bill was right and just, and the people wanted it, but to pass it meant that the saloon vote of Ohio would be lost to the party in power. Gentlemen, a party that cannot afford to offend the saloon cannot serve the Methodist Church without sin.

The answer to that is that this action was temporary, and that the subject will be treated differently when conditions are less strained. When will they be less strained? Do you expect to increase the majority in the legislature? What increase over "three to one" should you say would make it safe to do right in the Ohio legislature?

Dear friends, a party that denies the right, even temporarily, is generally unreliable. The politics that musters the Methodist vote must have something more than brave or honest qualms at intervals.

Let no one say I malign the Republican party. I do not. I think it has been honester and braver than the voting Methodist Church, in proportion to its professions. It has never claimed to be in sympathy with the church's resolutions, and has simply gone its way using nothing more than the finesse that was necessary to its end—office—and not contrary to political morality upon its lowest planes. It is a humiliating thought that the parties who require to keep the saloon and the church together with them have to bait the saloon but the church follows; and that while we put prohibition at the front of our political creed, we entrust it to a party that will not touch it. I make no charge against the Republican party. If I say a woman is no gentleman, I make no criticism, but state a fact.

Your Republican leaders are not Prohibitionists. Senator Sherman certainly is not. Governor Foraker is frankly opposed to it and has declared in favor of "eternal regulation." Governor McKinley I have never heard of in this connection. I make no railing accusation. You admire and love your governor, and you do well; but if he has in his heart hatred of the saloon, he must smother it, though it split him, or be out of the race of Republican presidents. I was about to write him a letter asking him to state his position for me to use here to-day, but I refrained, because it seemed like taking a mean advantage of a good man in a trying time. But I believe devoutly that if he should to-day stand forth from among the pigmy swarm that spins its despicable webs about him and say, "I am a Christian man, I am for protecting America from the invasions of European criminals and paupers; I am for protecting American labor from competition with the underpaid and underfed labor of other countries; I am for the protection of American capital in a fair show against the immemorial plants of foreign lands; I am for the absolute freedom and purity of the ballot-box; I am for the prompt and effectual enforcement of law; I am for protecting the honor of the land, and her youth, and her homes by the flaying and pulverizing of the liquor traffic," he would yet sit at the head of the nation's table, and honor himself and the memory of Rutherford B. and Lucy Hayes in serving water to the diplomatic guests, and wear as kingly a diadem in his country's gratitude as Lincoln, Grant or Garfield wear in its memory.

The Methodist Church ought to demand a party that a saloon-keeper could consistently hate, and candidates that would scorn to win an office by stifling an honest thought, intelligent enough to see an enemy and brave enough to meet him.

Some one is sure to think that I am forcing upon you the claims of the Prohibition party. On the contrary, although I am a loyal member of it, I am ready to leave it this minute to join the Christian manhood and womanhood of this nation in a new party, provided only it be in favor of prohibition and brave enough to say so; but, so help me God, I will never take orders from a dumb general, nor join the standard of a coward, nor vote for any man for office who has not plainly spoken out and spoken loudly on this subject. All the accusations you can lay against the Prohibition party of prematureness, shrewish temper, anything, I will confess, or stand mute and help you obliterate it, if you will only raise the Methodist colors some place else and get under them, or I will gladly return to the Republican party just as it is, if it will plainly pledge itself to withdraw the sanction of law from the liquor traffic.

I have no pet theories as to the necessity of new parties, but Christian politics must have some place to stay, and some means of expressing Methodist piety in continuous pressure. Natural gas has great capacities of illumination but is apt to blow itself out. Church resolutions are like that. What we want is a burner. "No man lighteth a candle and putteth it under a bushel." If he does people think him a fool, and if he should justify his conduct by offering to prove that it was a true, standard, perfect bushel, they would be sure he was.

We have a candle. We must put it upon a candlestick—not to make people see, but to light the house. If we were simply to deal with the old questions and hold to the old levels, I should incline to count the Republican party quite satisfactory, but we cannot keep this level.

Dead fish, dead men and dead nations float down the stream of life, or lie helpless and superfluous in its eddies, but life, whether by fins or feet or faith, goes up. It never despises the great, brackish, bitter sea from which it came, nor chides the long lagoons it passes through; it makes no great point of speed, but always and always turns away from the lower levels toward the heights and the sources. Nations are God's ships, that trade from port to port across eternity, gathering men and women and gems and dyes and fabrics for His many mansions; ours a catamaran, whose everlasting mutiny as to who shall do most, makes her uncapsizable, vibrant and very slow. When the crews shift there are mutterings and loud complaints, but never any lack of willing hands to serve or hearts to dare. Churches are locks, in the river that proceeds forth from the throne of the universe. Men build them, but the engineering and motive power are Divine. They are the immovable and imperishable gateways up to new levels. While there is channel and sea-room, all is plain sailing, straight ahead or up the winding convolutions of the rent and storm-swept earth; but when the hills dip to the water's edge and block the future, and make farther progress impossible to any prow, then comes the crucifixion of endeavor, and after that the miracle of the lock, and resurrection power, and the new birth of opportunity and a new earth and heaven of aspiration. Judaism lifted the world out of the bed of the Nile up to a place where Egypt's cats and paltry, purring gods could not survive or follow. Catholicism lifted it again up into the foothills of Europe. The Reformation mounted another rise; Methodism was up from that, and the irrepressible crystallization of young Christian life into unsectarian working union is up from Methodism, and the highest thing in sight.

That lock is ready; our ship of state has entered it; it is but one turn of the wheel to a new world, but we are against a sheer wall, and the infinite hydraulic potency of God's everlasting hills fritters away into the low-lying marshes to the rear. The lower gates are open; and so there is no power from above. Our servant, the Republican party, refuses to shut them; it is hard, wet work,—and the Democratic party does the like. It is idle to stand on deck and curse these impudent old servants; they have served us well before now, and under new conditions might again. But now, we independent, unfettered, Christian freemen must form a party to lay our shoulders to the gates that open down stream, and shut them hard and fast,—so that God can flood the mighty basin and lift America straight up, until she can push her noble keel into the twentieth century and toward industrial, social, moral, intellectual and spiritual liberty—her apparent destiny. For such a course we owe no apology to any party or any man. If either Jesus Christ or your great governor, must be temporarily disappointed, let William McKinley stand down. Voting is a relative thing,—to vote a Democratic ticket would be up for some voters. To vote a Republican ticket would be up for some people. But if the Methodist declaration be true that "the liquor traffic can never be licensed without sin," then for any Methodist to vote the Republican ticket as it stands to-day throughout this blessed land, is to vote down, and I, for one, decline to do it.

I have spoken with so great directness because my whole soul rebels against the hazy impertinence of conventions, and I believe the time demands a clear advance in the form of our resolves. Our splendid hypothetical suggestions have not been understood or taken seriously.

We must be understood! I repeat that what we want is a candlestick—not a rainbow. A candlestick is a humble, homely thing, but it delivers the light just as it receives it.

It is the Republican party that must be dealt with first. If it is the political hope of the church, as most of us have heretofore assumed, it is entitled to have us plainly say so. The problem is perfectly simple; if one gets confusion into it he must bring it. If, on the contrary, it is not worthy of our further adherence, let us say so. It goes now on the assumption that the Methodist Church will stand by it right or wrong. Let us say that, if it is true.

Unless something new is devised the case is between the Republican party on the one hand and the Prohibitory party on the other. If you should hold against one of these in the resolution of this conference, you ought to hold for the other or offer something new. My own opinion is that the Prohibition party—despite the criticisms that can be truly lodged against it—is the best thing in sight to serve us, for we must get as quickly as possible to such per cent of the voting registration as to have a place on the official ballots under the prevalent and growing Australian system, and the Third party, as it is called, has now a quarter of a million time-tried and fire-tested men to start with, and an organization very excellent in its way. It offers, I am well aware, no very hilarious prospect of speedy victory, but all beginnings are difficult.

The beauty and perfection of a honeycomb are not due to the skill of bees but the pressure of honey. Into a dreary monotony of round cups in wax the bees pour the gold of infinite clover bloom, four million trips to the pound—the honey-pressure works out God's geometry and squares the circles into hexagons, and makes honey even of the honeycomb. Almost any political comb will do, but it must hold honey. A license, or tax law is not a cup but a hole and can retain nothing. You and I must put in the gathered gold of growing sentiment, as we gather it little by little, and when the old hive is full we must swarm. Then our old owners will beat pans and throw dust, but we must settle outside until we can go to work in a new hive. I think this is all the Third party movement amounts to—a place to wait until the new cleavage comes and the new hive is ready; its work has been that of testimony, agitation and education to the truth. It has not always been wise, but has always been true and clean. John P. St. John will still be adding honors to his name when his traducers shall have found the earthy mercy of oblivion; and, if I understand the spirit of the Prohibitionists there is none of them who would stand a moment for either the organization or the name, or any recognition in anything planned to succeed it, if only good men will get together to fight the saloon and stop trying to discourage it by forcing upon it very low-grade virtue at a very high price.

If this conference would to-day lift up its voice like a trumpet in a call to Christian men everywhere—ignoring parties one and all—to meet to form a new, clean party in our politics, I believe the time will be found ripe for it, and that we should have a tidal wave of righteousness and spirit and power. I should like to have it called the Liberal party, but under any name I should rejoice to follow it until "the Prince of the Kings of the earth" shall give each one of us who is brave and true, "a white stone, and in the stone a new name written, which no man knoweth saving he that receiveth it."

Chicago, Ill.

FROM ONE THOUSAND ISLE PARK.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Just why this is One Thousand Island Park I do not know. I have read somewhere that in this archipelago there are really one thousand, six hundred and ninety-two islands, not counting all the wee ones, and the tendency of the human mind is to exaggerate all figures not relating to one's own age.

I had counted on the Michigan Central's giving me a delightful panorama of orchards and green fields, but alas the sun had parched and withered all Central Michigan and Ontario to the color of dry peas, and only here and there a corn-field, drawing life from some hidden spring, gladdened the eye with greenness. To be sure, the swales were green with plumy sedge and fern and sometimes it by flaming spikes of cardinal flower, but with all the anxiety of hard times and strikes in one's mind, one instinctively underestimates a mere eye crop.

If I had a fairy telescope I would show the readers of THE UNION SIGNAL a series of pictures of Niagara as I saw it glowing in the August sun, beginning with the wonderful spectacle at Falls View. Distance robs the great flood of its terrors. I would give them a glimpse of that deep curve of the horse-shoe visible only from the quivering deck of the Maid of the Mist, and I would ask them to tell me where they saw a rapid in all the myriad series leap up twice in just the same curves and spirals.

Visitors from every quarter of our country crowded the Niagara hotels to the delight of the hackmen and the sellers of curiosities (so called). But they were serious-minded visitors, come not to while away the lovely summer days, but to gaze at one of the wonders of the earth and sure to treasure the experience. "I've wanted to come all my life," I overheard a plain, kind-faced man confide to a plain, kind-faced woman, perhaps a neighbor like himself from the gas belt. "I've read about it and hankered for it, I can't tell how long, and I can't begin to say what it is to me to be here." Beds were laid in the corridors and in the parlors, and still more excursionists were coming, a thousand they said, from Washington this afternoon. I set out for Oswego, the charming and historic. The people with abundant means were few. Frugal folk of moderate means and small means were the ninety and nine out of every one hundred.

Fifty miles or so west of Niagara the grass and corn began to grow green, slowly but surely, and at last as we neared Oswego and turned northward that most lovely color was everywhere, "barin'" as our Irish friends say, the rocks, and in this enchanting region, "where all day long it seems like evening with the day's work done," drought has not laid his withering finger.

Once upon a time this corporation was in the hands of the Methodists and there is a legend to the effect that the lights must go out at ten o'clock. I cannot vouch for this, but I do know that no "liner," little or big, touches these wharves on Sunday. Excursions come and go and tempt in vain. They may not land.

I climbed the mountain to visit the reservoir this morning, for this park has water. This hotel accommodates between four and five hundred guests and is full, and Round Island, Westminster Park and Alexander Bay are said to be thronged with guests and turning people away for lack of accommodations, yet even now a long line of strangers are streaming up from the landing, intent, no doubt, on enjoying the searchlight trip to-night when the great St. Lawrence will sail the mazes of the Islands and thousands of twinkling lights will turn every inhabited point into glimmering, mysterious suggestions.

But if rest and recreation are sought in this fairyland, as at Niagara, life goes on seriously for the resident. I sought out the president of the W. C. T. U. at the Falls and was assured that work for temperance and total abstinence goes on steadily if not ostentatiously. There is a local union here despite the distractions and burdens brought by the summer visitor, and at Clayton there is a vigorous union and an enthusiastic Loyal Temperance Legion. To-morrow night there is to be a temperance lecture at the great tabernacle, and if the speaker is equal to his opportunity he will touch at least three thousand souls, for the tabernacle is of huge dimensions and three thousand is quite an average attendance.

The president of the Loyal Temperance Legion at Clayton gave me a touching account of the children's meeting held before a local election two years since. "We wanted," said she, "to elect men to the board of excise who would not grant license. I went to the ministers and asked them to take part, but they did not respond very heartily for one reason or another. To be sure, the children had their program, but I knew that would not fill the time, and I am not a talking woman, so at the last moment before I started I dropped down by the door and prayed God to help me, and it came to me that after all I have a tongue, and I could say, 'Vote for temperance.'

"Well, I found all of four hundred children at the engine house, and we marched down through the town to the church, singing that song, 'The saloon, the saloon must go,' and keeping step, and people came to the doors, and the saloon men put out their heads, and the church was filled so full there wasn't an inch of space. And such a meeting! The ministers spoke after all, and spoke wonderfully, and we stationed the boys next day near the polls with leaflets, on which was printed, 'Wanted, a boy! Five hundred thousand men yearly fill drunkard's graves. Boys take their places. Will you furnish a boy?'"

"And the election?" I asked.

The sweet eyes clouded. "Ah, we were beaten by some twelve or fourteen votes. It was down there in the saloon district. They did not count the votes till they knew they were beaten, and fixed matters to suit themselves. You see, we women cannot vote."

I see a young girl coming up the walk, her hands full of water lilies. In certain secret nooks the cardinal flowers and pickerel weed are shyly opening the burning petals, and upon the mountain the cinnamon fern is in bloom and the clematis white with stars. The sunshine is golden, and the air soft and warm, but there are subtle hints of autumn, for the robins sing no more, and here and there beside the crimson blossoms of the sumacs hang scarlet leaves.

This is the paradise of the folk who love "to go a-angling," and one of the few places where the housekeeper can solve the problems of domestic science and rest and invite her soul. The artist is bewildered by the rival charms of the scenes offered to his brush, and the poet and romancer can find abundant material in the historic associations of the region if he is not keen enough to note the comedy and tragedy, the joy and tears passing before his eyes. The doctor can rest, for this is a health resort of nature's own making, and the lawyer must defer his cases. The preacher is not quite so secure, and if he really does not want to talk on Sunday, or for some good cause, on a week day, he would better retire to some one of the tiny islets, with a discreet, biting dog, an oil stove, some tinned stores and a fish hook. There he may forget the higher criticism, his deacons, his choir, the church debt, and may wear a shirt of blue flannel, or "biled" linen, as he will, and may come forth to the world when the spirit moves him into longing for sounds other than the whispering of leaves, the dip of oars and the lapping of "softly breathing waves."

ELIZABETH CUMINGS.

The Columbian, One Thousand Isle Park, N. Y.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

This is the confidence that we have in him, that if we ask anything according to his will, he heareth us; and if we know that he hear us whatsoever we ask, we know that we have the petitions we desired of him.—I. John 14:15.

Mr. E. C. Linn, Kingsville, O., recently attended the noonday prayer-meeting at Willard Hall. He was so much pleased with the service, the Temple and the purpose for which it was erected, that at the close of the meeting he left $100 for the building fund, with the request that his wife's name be placed on the Ohio tablet in Willard Hall. When he paid the money he remarked: "My sons, when they grow up, will probably come to Chicago to live. When they visit Willard Hall they will see their mother's name and it will be an inspiration to them to follow the noble aims that animate her life. The sight of her name in such a place may prove a bulwark of strength when temptations press them hard." Mrs. Edena Fitzgerald, Knoxville, Tenn., writes: "I inclose a dollar for the Temple, a birthday present from my little two-years'-old boy I expect to send these birthday presents to the Temple from my two little boys until they are old enough to understand and appreciate it sufficiently to make and send the money themselves. I only wish I had hundreds instead of one dollar to send you."

Mrs. Clara S. Harza, Brookings, South Dak., in sending $3.70, the contents of her mite-box, says: "I will also send with mine $1 earned by my little ten-years'-old daughter, Mabel. She wishes the Columbian souvenir sent her. Each of my two boys are also earning their dollar for the Temple which will be sent later. I am so anxious to see the Temple paid for."

A pleasant little incident is told by Mrs. M. P. Parker, Dover, N. H., showing how one Christian woman revenged herself upon another. In 1891 Mrs. Mary H. Finner was the president of the Dover W. C. T. U.; being greatly interested in the Temple, and desiring to aid it and at the same time do honor to one of the oldest and most beloved members of the union, Mrs. Marilla M. H. Hills, who was in her seventy-ninth year, she proposed to the union to raise $100 for the Temple and place Mrs. Hills name on the state tablet in Willard Hall. When Mrs. Hills heard of the project she emphatically refused to allow her name to be used, and insisted that the name of Mrs. Finner, the unselfish, hard-working and indefatigable president, be placed on the tablet instead. Mrs. Finner reluctantly accepted the honor. The union, which is a small one, would gladly have placed both names in Willard Hall, but felt it could not afford it. Some time after this occurrence Mrs. Finner was called to mourn the death of her husband, and removed from Dover to Lewiston, Me. Last spring she wrote the Dover W. C. T. U. to ask the acceptance of $100 to place the name of Mrs. Hills in Willard Hall, which offer was gratefully accepted. When Mrs. Hills was informed what her magnanimous friend had done, the aged saint with great emotion exclaimed: "She has her revenge now." Mrs. Parker adds, "We feel pleased to be honored by having the names of these two noble women in Willard Hall. Would that we could place many more there!"

We are glad the women of Michigan have decided to place the name of Mrs. A. S. Benjamin's husband on a tablet in Willard Hall. The fifth district of Michigan, of which Mrs. Benjamin has been the W. C. T. U. president for many years, has proved a stalwart friend of the Temple and has, largely through her influence, sent $100 to the Temple, for each county in its district. In Mrs. Benjamin's late bereavement in the death of her beloved and noble husband, the hearts of all white-ribboners have gone out to her in most tender sympathy. They will be grieved to learn that Mrs. Benjamin's health is at present in a precarious condition. Mrs. E. A. Comstock, Allendale, Mich., sends $3.25 from that union to start the Benjamin tablet. Let all friends of Mrs. Benjamin keep full of energy until the desired $100 has been raised.

"At last," writes Mrs. A. Alexander, treasurer of Winfield, Kansas, W. C. T. U., "the Winfield union has completed its $100 pledge. It has not been without a struggle that in these hard times we have finally been able to make this last payment of twelve dollars, which please find inclosed. I do hope the Temple will go on prospering and to prosper, till the National union will own its beautiful house, and then a goodly income will be had from it to help carry on the work which is so much needed."

A dear and aged saint, Mrs. C. B. Brown, West Damascus, Pa., writes: "The spoon came all right; it is beautiful. Now I have the Columbian and Temple souvenirs, but I feel like doing more for the 'House Beautiful,' and shall if I can. I am nearly seventy-four, and earn my own living. I love what the Temple represents, and shall praise God if I live to see it paid for."

All persons sending $1 to the Temple will receive the beautiful Columbian souvenir. Any individual who fills a mite-box during 1894 will receive a solid silver Temple souvenir teaspoon. This, however, does not apply to persons filling boxes for unions; they receive the Columbian souvenir. All money orders and checks should be made out in the name of William D. Preston, and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara G. Johnson, the Temple, Chicago, Ill.

"ALL THE RIGHTS SHE WANTS."

BY CARL SPENCER.

She's got the right to handle a broom,
  And why does she want any more?
She may wash the dishes till day of doom,
  And why does she want any more?
She's got the right to cook and to scrub,
To play the piano, or rub-a-dub-dub
In a lowlier sphere, at the laundry tub—
  And why does she want any more?

She's got the right to teach and to sew,
  And why does she want any more?
(She's only two-thirds of a teacher, though,
  And she mustn't ask any more.)
She may rock the cradle and mend the hose,
And solace her mind with dreams of clothes,
Or else to the Woman's Page she goes—
  And how can she want any more?

She's got the right to a clerk's employ—
  And how can she ask any more?
To take the place of a younger boy—
  She mustn't ask any more.
The right to labor as hard as she can,
Wherever they cannot afford a man,
And to get her pay on the half-rate plan,
  She mustn't ask any more.

She's got the right to a student's hat;
  Now, how can she want any more?
But somebody had to fight for that,
  And she mustn't want any more.
She's got the right to a choice of schools,
And to quite a respectable lot of tools,
Such as have never been used by fools—
  She cannot want any more.

She's got the right to a soul—oh, yes!
  And why does she want any more?
The right to be pious for two, I guess—
  Could any one ask for more?
She may hear the brethren preach and pray,
She may serve the Lord in a quiet way,
With schemes for raising the parson's pay—
  And why does she want any more?

She's got the right to be taxed—or hung,
  And nobody can have more!
She isn't forbidden to use her tongue;
  And she never can want any more.
And she has her representative now,
A piece of man—somewhere, somehow—
Mixed up in all the political row—
  And how can she want any more?

But, ah! how manners and times do change!
  Somebody's asking for more!
Something has happened that's utterly strange,
  Somebody's asking for more!
Oh, Oliver Twist! Can it verily be
Your name is Olive? And what do I see?
A dreadful, unfeminine, malapert She,
  Actually asking for more!

"WHOSO OFFENDETH."

BY GISELA A. DITTRICK.

"Good-morning, my dear Mrs. Cummings! Oh, my! doesn't she blush beautifully, Nell, and doesn't she look sweet in the new gown, and aren't we the happiest little person in all the world!" And then the pretty, blushing bride was rapturously embraced and kissed by the two blithesome girls who had invaded her little realm.

With pardonable pride she led the way through the charming hall, past the dainty parlor, out into the cozy little sitting-room, where a great white cat rose lazily from the soft rug and came to greet them.

"You might just as well ask us to take off our wraps, and reconcile yourself to the inevitable, Madam Madge, for we've come to stay all morning and take dinner with you," rattled on the lively speaker, as she tossed her hat and coat on the lounge. "We've let you alone for a whole week, and we think that is doing nobly, so now we've come to hear about the trip, see the lovely house and all the presents which we couldn't see that night because we couldn't keep our eyes off the bride, could we, Nell?"

So over the new home they were led, into all the pretty, dainty rooms, filled with the loving gifts, their girlish tongues flying like their eyes from one object of admiration to another, until they sank exhausted upon the big fur rug in the cheery sitting-room, offending Dom Pedro by their encroachment on his rights.

Mrs. Madge buried her face in his soft white fur as he tried to tell her of his insults, then extended a hand to each of the laughing, breathless maidens. "Come, girls, I haven't finished yet! You have not seen my pride, my delight, my big, sunny kitchen."

They rose with alacrity. "Of course we want to see the pride of the realm; but I warn you now, Madge, I shall be perfectly dumb. I haven't an adjective left." And out they trooped to the kitchen, where they were received with a broad smile by the old colored woman who was hovering over the new shiny stove.

"Girls, this is Aunt Rachel, mamma's old cook,—the best in the land, as you'll find out by and by! Since she has come I haven't a desire in the world."

"Lor! jes' heah dat chile go on, now," said the pleased old woman. "Yoh allers was a-pattin' dis old niggah! G'long wid yoh all, er yoh'll spile dis pudden, en den Marster Ed he'll say, 'Ole Aun' Rachel kayn't cook nohow!'"

Away they went, with merry little bursts of laughter, up stairs to look at the new gowns and hats, and there Aunt Rachel found them half an hour later, as she cautiously peeped in.

"Honey, does yoh want de brandy in de sauce for de pudden?"

"Why, yes, Aunt Rachel, don't you always put it in?" Madam Madge asked surprisedly.

"Ole Mis' uster, but yer Aunt Nan she nebber 'lowed me ter, en I thought I'd better ax yoh."

"Fix it just as you like, Aunt Rachel," was the careless reply. "I know it will be good." Then she turned back to her guests.

"Oh, girls"—and a little blush rose in her cheeks—"I didn't tell you, did I, that Bob Chalmers sent us—"

"Bob Chalmers!" came the simultaneous outcry. "Oh, Madge!"

"Well, he did—and I wish you could have seen Ed's face!—the dearest, sweetest little wine set. Oh, it's lovely, and I'm wild to use it! And in his note, which was such a queer one, he said he hoped I would enjoy to the fullest the cup from which I was sure to drink. I suppose he meant 'happiness,' and—oh, there's Ed!—I must go—be back—" and they heard her feet flying down the stairs.

The two girls looked at each other, then one whispered: "Ruth, isn't it queer that Bob Chalmers should send them anything? You know he wasn't invited to the wedding, and you remember how angry he was when Madge first met Mr. Cummings!"

The other shivered a little. "I guess I do! Ugh! I wouldn't touch his old present. I'd be afraid there was poison in it! Come, Madge is calling."

The lively little dinner progressed finely, while the young couple seemed to flourish under all the cruel jokes heaped upon them, and then Aunt Rachel, herself, with a proud smile, brought in her triumph, the snowy pudding. In they dipped their pretty spoons with merry clatter, and they did not notice that just as the young host raised his first mouthful to his lips, he turned deadly pale, and put it hastily back, and his hand trembled slightly as he took his cup of coffee from the trim waiting maid, but the loving eyes of the wife very soon detected the untasted dish, though she wisely refrained from all mention of it. All the afternoon a vague unrest, an uneasiness haunted her, and she could hardly wait until supper was over, and they were alone in the little sitting-room, and she could ask of the husband whose eyes were so grave to-night:

"What is it, Ed?"

He did not reply right away, and the crackle of the fire and the purring of Dom Pedro alone broke the silence; then he drew her up to him caressingly, and the firelight flickered lovingly over the two. At last he spoke, and his voice sounded strange to Madge, who listened intently. "Madge, little wife, you took your big husband on trust, and, please God, you shall never regret it! but there is something I feel to-night that I must tell you, which ought to have been told before. Don't tremble so, little girl! I've done nothing wrong, dear, but I feel now that I made a great mistake in keeping my secret from you. I had hoped, dear heart, never to have been obliged to tell you, but to-day I have found out that it better be told, else my little wife cannot help me in my time of need. Madge," and his voice trembled in spite of himself, "my father died a drunkard. I don't mean a gutter drunkard, but a respectable, wealthy, esteemed drunkard!" You could feel the scorn in his young voice, then it grew unutterably sad. "My brother, Walter, the pride of us all, lies out in Colorado, a victim to the same curse. I have never touched a drop of the burning stuff, but, Madge, oh, my wife, that I must say it!—Madge, the desire of it, the love of it is in my veins, and to-day, when the smell of that sauce crept into my senses, I knew that if I but tasted it I was lost! I have felt that before, but I have avoided it in every way, and I have never yielded, for I would rather die, yes, die, with all that life holds for me now, than to fall as they did. No one here knows of the sorrow that has been mine, of the burden I am bearing—save one; he knew my brother, and he knew it was an inheritance—Bob Chalmers, Madge, and he knew I would understand when he sent the litte gift. Why, Madge!"

He looked a little hurt as she slipped from him, and left him without a word, but in a moment she was back again, and in her hand he caught the glitter and heard the jingle of cut glass. He looked at her in astonishment; he had never seen her cheeks glow so, nor her eyes with such a sparkle in them; the next instant he sprang to her side in alarm! Was she crazy? Down on the broad, tiled hearth went the tinkling glasses, shattered into a thousand pieces. She turned to her wondering husband, and there was a smile on her quivering lips:

"So perish all the enemies of our dear home!" then she stretched out her hands to him, and the tears rolled over her cheeks. "Oh, Ed, can you ever forgive me for putting that awful stuff before you! But I didn't know, I didn't! and oh, I'm so glad you told me! My poor, poor boy!"

He held her close to him. "Then you don't despise me, Madge?"

"Despise you!" came the wondering echo. "Despise you! Why? For resisting so nobly the terrible temptations that must be always around you; for fighting so steadfastly that awful inheritance; for being victor over all! No, a thousand times, no! I'm proud of my husband, my brave husband! Never, Ed, never again shall a drop of it be brought into our home, and you and I together will win!"—Selected.

KINDNESS—THE INVISIBLE HEART.

II.

BY JAMES VILA BLAKE.

I have become persuaded that a great store of ill and of pain in the world runs like water from this one fountain, that men think love belongs to them so by nature that it will thrive and come to its fruit without discipline of themselves in it. Yet this is no more so than with knowledge or wisdom or music or any art, or any beautiful and good thing. . . "Men are not born wise but have to become so." And this is true no less of the higher love and real kindness. . .

"That living flood," says Teufelsdrockh, "pouring through these streets, of all qualities and ages, knowest thou whence it is coming or whither it is going? Aus der Ewigkeit, zu der Ewig keit hin. "From eternity onwards to eternity." And what a thing, what a fact, awful, tender, mysterious, are the drops in this flood—the persons. I walked the thoroughfares and searched the faces, not like a naturalist to whom all is grist, but like a miner who looks only to the gold. What unknown saints, I thought, were passing me in the throngs! What brothers, careful, gentle, loving their sisters tenderly and manfully, protecting, respecting. What fathers, devoted, toiling by day and much of the night for their poor nests of wife and children, faithful, kind, not counting fatigue, denying themselves, indulgent, sympathetic, heroic, obscure. What sisters, as lovely before God as my own, following some wayward or selfish or sullen fellow of a brother, and never giving him up, enduring, working, saving for him, giving to him, hiding tears,—because he had lain on the same mother's breast. What lovers, lads and girls, to whom love was devout, reverential, tender, great, an exaltation, a being crowned, a glory and praise above all ambitions, trappings, fames. What mothers, out on anxious errands, now hastening back to bend, like the mercy of God, over the sick, or the lacking, or the ungrateful. All these, and other saints, pass me, bearing great tragedies, which they, the true poets, sing unto heaven by their bearing of them, and no other poets can sing nor have the might to tell—what incidents, what struggles, what vast covered sorrows boxed in patience and lidded with smiles; what courage, daring deeds and thoughts, unspeakable natural longings in holy quiet kept like a tragedy enacted at a fane or shrine! Here passed me great sins which had come to sincere repentance and penance. Here was religion walking by me in its most devout form. "How know I what prayers ye lifted this morn," said I, looking into some faces, "at what poor bedsides kneeling, or under rich tapestries where wealth excludes neither woes nor temptations; and what thoughts unto God are walking by me in the humble trust and self-watchfulness and many a silent uplift of souls; and what prayers of lowly praise for one more day's safety accomplished ye will lift in shabby stalls or under fine hangings to-night, with the same temptations, pains, struggles and spiritual victories in the poverty and in the riches, and some kinds in each unknown to the other lot!"

These worlds and mysteries of saintly things passed me in the unknown lives of each person, and other things black and dreadful—all passing, beautiful, tremendous, terrible, in the persons who hastened by me like phantoms. Oh, let me stand before each one with awe for what may be in him, what nature, feeling, experience! . Let me look on every soul which is hidden from me in my ignorance as perforce by ignorance I would look on some Arabian manuscript scribbled all over on cover and margin by a jester, or perhaps even by a wanton hand; but holding, for aught I can say, a lost treatise of Averroes. . . . To have respect for the unknown life of each person is to go far to know all life by sympathy and conception, to see as God sees.—From "More than Kin."

THE BOY THAT LAUGHS.

I know a funny little boy—
The happiest ever born;
His face is like a beam of joy,
Although his clothes are torn.

I saw him tumble on his nose,
And waited for a groan,
But how he laughed! Do you suppose
He struck his funny-bone?

There's sunshine in each word he speaks,
His laugh is something grand;
Its ripples overrun his cheeks
Like waves on snowy sand.

He laughs the moment he awakes,
And till the day is done,
The school-room for a joke he takes—
His lessons are but fun.

No matter how the day may go,
You cannot make him cry;
He's worth a dozen boys I know,
Who pout, and mope and sigh.

AN APPLE MISSION.

One day, upon answering a gentle ring of my door-bell, I found a sweet little girl, five or six years old, waiting to see me. A tiny white handkerchief was folded across her shoulders and came down to a point at the waist. On her left arm hung a red and black calico stocking-bag. A quaint, curious little figure she was. Her errand was as singular as her appearance.

"Will you let me mend stockings for you this morning, ma'am, or mittens? I will mend for five cents an hour, and I can mend tolerably well, dramma says."

I drew her into the sitting-room, gave her a small chair by the fire, and said, "Now, my dear, tell me why you want to mend stockings for me?"

Without appearing to heed my question she gravely drew from her bag a gray stocking with a nicely mended heel.

"Here," she said, "is a hole I mended for dramma yesterday. Proerbly you would like a zample."

I praised the neatly darned "hole" and repeated my question. She smiled and said brightly, "Oh, yes, dramma said I should have to 'splain to you 'bout my 'siety betause you might not know all about it. You see there's ten of them, and they're very tired at night, and apples rest them. You know horses like apples dretful much. Every horse has to have an apple, and sometimes they're so tired they have to have two, and that's manyer than dramma's dot, and so I have to mend things and det some money. Dramma said I must tell people all about it. Do you un'stan' now?"

I assured her that I was sorry for the tired horses, and that she should mend for me an hour every day for a long time. At this the demure little mouth broke into lively smiles as she said, "Oh, dood, dood!" and began at once to open her bag and hunt for thimble and needle, while I went to find her some work.

She said little as she worked, but gave such attention as would bring great skill to many a grown mender. She had lost two or three of her first upper teeth, and the loss gave her some trouble in the articulation of many words. Once she stopped her work a moment and said, speaking slowly, "Oh, one day I didn't know what I sood do. I didn't have one apple left, not one for dramma. I save a soft one for her. She's dood; dramma's very dood. You see, one of the men whipped his horse, and so I had to give him an apple, too; I gave him dramma's apple, and then he didn't whip his horse no more. I was sorry for dramma, but she didn't care when I 'splained to her; she dest dive me a love pat."

"A love pat! what's that?" I inquired.

"Oh, don't you know? It's dest a soft, dentle little pat on your cheek. I like love pats. Hain't you dot any little dirl?"

"Not now, my dear. God took my little girl away to heaven when she was about as old as you are."

"Did He? Then perhaps He dave her to my mamma. Dod's dot my mamma, too."

Something made me bend down and kiss her sweet cheek. She looked up quickly and said, "If my mamma's dot your little girl, then I must tome and mend for you, mustn't I? I tould bring my things and stay, only I tan't leave dramma, tourse."

She looked up at me with sweet blue-gray eyes, clear and pure as the sky, eyes whose light shone in upon and brightened the deep shadow of my own loss.

"And what will you do in summer, little one, when there are no apples? Will you give each horse a lump of sugar?"

"Tan I? Oh, of tourse, horses would like that. Yes, that's dest what I shall do."

"How came you to have your 'siety,' as you call it?"

"Well, you know the minister said I must be a little 'deavorer and help people; and so I found the horses. Some of them draw toal all day, and then they're dest dretful tired; and I know I ought to help them, tause they touldn't talk and tell anybody."

When the mending was finished—very neatly, too, for the work of such small hands—she put away needle and thimble very seriously and went home "to see 'bout dramma."

After a few days I hunted up my little friend's home, which proved to be scarcely a square away. For a few rods the road approached the house by a steep incline. I was fortunate in the time of my visit. "Dramma" was going to have a load of coal, a little too heavy a load, evidently, for one horse. About midway up the hill the heavy wheels seemed to settle down to stay, and the horse, after some patient tugging, became discouraged. At length, in the midst of whipping and scolding, the tidy little figure of my stocking-mender appeared by the roadside. She seemed to have just stepped out from the canvas of one of Sir Joshua Reynold's sweet pictures of children. She came and stood a moment near the team without speaking. She seemed to have by instinct the tact of an accomplished strategist and the kindness of an angel. Soon she said with a smile, "It's pretty hard work to drive a toal team, ain't it?"

The driver glanced down annoyed, but the sight of her small figure and sweet face made his features relax a little at once.

Perceiving her slight advantage, she said immediately, "I think I sood try a love pat."

The man broke into a laugh and said, "That's so, chick. How'll I do it?"

"Pat his neck very softly with your hand, very softly, and I'll dive him this apple; then he'll proerbly pull better," she replied, and stepped at once in front of the horse, and reached up to him a fine red apple. The driver doubled up with laughter for a moment, and then actually patted the neck of the horse gently and lovingly, while the poor beast munched his apple.

"Now, I dess if the load ain't too big he tan pull it," said the child. Surely he could and did.

"Maybe you're tired, too, and would like an apple," I heard the child's voice say as they reached the last step of the incline, and she offered the man a small apple, not so fine a one as she had given to the horse.

"I b'lieve I would, my beauty. Thank ye; ye're a trump. I won't hit the old hoss ag'in to-day, blamed if I will."

I rose from my seat under a tree, where I had retired to be out of the way and to witness the proceedings. Below me was a long shed, connected with a railway station. Here, no doubt, my little "'deavorer" found her tired horses at evening, waiting for whatever business the last train might bring them.

As one would suppose, I found my call at the little home very pleasant. "Dramma" was an unusual old lady, most kind, simple and sagacious. The child, always called "Dolly, dear," showed me treasures of dolls of varied colors, materials, races and names. With all her sweet graces of kindness and wonderful wisdom, she was full of all the simple gayety of a child—perhaps fuller of it because of those graces. I congratulated myself on having found such a little friend, and all Christian Endeavor workers on having such a co-laborer. When we can, in so childlike and trusting a spirit, work together with God, men will bear and forbear.—Golden Rule.

RHYME OF THE MONTHS.

The old doggerel beginning, "Thirty days hath September," is, no doubt, familiar to every one in one form or another, and I have run across eleven different versions of it. Among all the rhymes of the months and seasons the little skit of Sheridan's giving each month's characteristic is as good as any I remember. It is as follows:

January, snowy; February, flowy; March, blowy;
April, showery; May, flowery; June, bowery;
July, moppy; August, croppy; September, poppy;
October, breezy; November, wheezy; December, freezy.

The rhyme and meter are equally good, and the truth wrapped up in each is very plainly to be seen.—California Christian Advocate.

Boys, remember that if the opportunities for great deeds should never come, the opportunity for good is renewed for you day by day. The thing for us to long for is the goodness, not the glory.—Selected.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—The war between China and Japan (can you tell me where these countries are on the map?) which is just now going on, has attracted the attention of every other country to these Oriental nations. The quarrel grew over matters in connection with Korea. If you don't know where this country is, ask your teacher or an older member of your family to tell you. And I am certain that when you hear of all the cruelties that are practiced in this dreadful warfare, you will wish more than ever that peace would really come to reign on earth.

Hundreds of years ago—when wars were more frequent than they are now—in 220 B. C.—the Chinese built a Great Wall called Wan-li-chang (myriad mile-wall) as a protection against their enemies. This wall is 1,250 miles in length, twenty feet high, twenty-five feet thick at the base, sloping up to fifteen feet in width, and has towers at intervals of about three hundred feet. Earth enclosed in brickwork is the material of the wall, which is now being found useful by the Chinese in the attacks of their enemy.

I hope that Cozy Corner boys and girls will never know the horrors of war; that they will never enlist in any but a peaceful war for the protection of home. You have all enlisted in that and your "Great Wall" of protection is—what? Yes, the pledge—"God helping" you—and in His might, you can win the victory over evil!

Affectionately,

Aunt Jane

NEPHEWS AND NIECES.

This summer mamma and I went out to Lafferty, Ohio, to be in the country awhile and be country folks instead of city ones. We had a very pleasant time, which was three weeks. One thing we did was to make an ice cream festival; I was very tired after carrying the saucers (or some of them) around. ESTELLA VERNON.

Wheeling, W. Va.

That was a pleasant change for you, Cozy Cornerer. Now you're glad to be back home and in school again, I imagine.

May I be one of your nieces? I would like very much to belong to your Cozy Corner. I am a little temperance girl eleven years old. I keep a little bank and whenever I have anything that I ought to be thankful for I put in a penny or five cents and I give it to some temperance club. HELEN C. ROBERTSON.

P. S.—Can't some of the girls write to me? my address is 3603 Grand avenue, Milwaukee, Wis.

Such a helpful niece ought to have a good correspondent. Welcome, Helen.

My mother takes THE UNION SIGNAL and we boys take The Young Crusader. We boys had a tame canary bird. We had it just a week and the cat caught it. We have a Junior League here, it meets on Tuesday instead of Sunday. The W. C. T. U. meets here to-day.

PHILIP SMITH.

Your address was omitted in your letter, Philip. Won't you write again and tell us where you live? Sorry, all of us, about your canary.

OUR YOUNG WOMEN.

The variety of letters that we have received within the last few weeks giving us the opinion of excellent and valued friends as to what is the "strategic position" for the W. C. T. U. "in the present crisis" would cause a thinking windmill, if there were such a thing, to take a back seat. The angles of vision of our correspondents are as numerous as the correspondents themselves. Some feel sure that the "storm centre" is just now located in Kansas, others in Colorado, others still place it in the Prohibition party and others in the camp of the Populists. Some believe that the W. C. T. U. has no reason for being unless it thrusts itself into the middle of the fight for municipal reform, while others think it should merge itself in the labor question and the single tax, and so it goes.

We are glad to hear all these suggestions, and find in each some measure of value. But we confess—and perhaps it is because of the fifteen years during which we poured what life and enthusiasm we had into the brains and hearts of young people at school—our thought turns to the schools where thousands of young women are soon to be assembled, and we feel that if the white ribbon movement could be domesticated in those institutions, it would mean more for the future homes of the nation, for the better society and government of the future than any other single effort that we could put forth.

We have always sadly wondered that the colleges, universities and seminaries in which young women are being educated, either by themselves or with young men, were not more thoroughly operated upon by the local and state unions in which they exist. We have wondered that the presidents and professors of those institutions, working as they do upon brain, have not perceived that the systematic and well reasoned work of the white ribbon women (all of which converges upon maintaining the integrity of the brain menaced as it is by the habit of stimulation) was more important to their pupils than any other possible line of reform or philanthropic effort.

We believe that with the opening of these institutions in September, it will be the duty of every local union to do its utmost to secure the organization of a Y. W. C. T. U. to this end. It will be important to approach the president, professor or teacher who is most in sympathy with us and endeavor to get an opportunity of presenting the subject. It goes without saying that this must be done by a person of Christian devotion, education, refinement and tact. It is not enough that the one who speaks should be full of zeal and have had long experience; she must be what we call "presentable," that is, her face, tones, toilet and manner in every respect must be such as to attract. We know that the average young woman depends more upon the "outward appearance" than she will when mellowed by the discipline of life. She is quick to take wing if she does not like the ditty we are singing, and—alas—is apt to be "gainsaying" when she is not pleased; but all the same she is full of noble impulses, and if questions of taste outrank other questions in her mind, it is because she has been taught from her earliest recollections that some things were "pretty" and that whatever was "not pretty" was not to be put up with.

We are fortunate in having as the General Secretary of our work among young women, a white-ribboner admirably adapted to interest and enlist young women in schools or elsewhere. We have also in the young women who are National organizers, workers whom we can recommend without question, and we do hereby most earnestly urge those faithful groups of good women who are organized in any village, town or city where there is an educational institution for young women, to make this work of forming a society among them at the very beginning of the term and helping to build it up thereafter, their chief subject of prayer and effort for the next year.

The Y is the feeder of the W. If we want our ideas and methods carried forward to the next generation, we must secure the loyal love of the young women who are now at school. To this end we urge our state presidents to invite the Y organizers and secretaries and superintendents to their state conventions that this great subject of recruiting our ranks among those who have to live the longest and wield the most influence may be considered with a care not yet bestowed upon it, and which in view of the present outlook should make such consideration the first factor in the deliberations of our coming National meeting.

AN OLD AUTHOR ON THE SOCIAL PROBLEMS OF TO-DAY.

One paper in commenting on the trial of Professor Ely considers him an unsafe teacher because he "always manages his lectures so as to leave in the minds of the majority of his hearers, despite his protestations, a very strong impression that the times are out of joint, and that nothing but a radical reorganization of the industrial structure will set them right."

We wonder what would now be the verdict upon the author of the following sentiments: "But these difficulties (the difficulties of the communistic system which have just been discussed.) though real, are not necessarily insuperable. The apportionment of work to the strength and capacities of individuals, the mitigation of a general rule to provide for cases in which it would operate harshly, are not problems to which human intelligence, guided by a sense of justice, would be inadequate. And the worst and most unjust arrangement which could be made of these points, under a system aiming at equality, would be so far short of the inequality and injustice with which labor (not to speak of remuneration) is now apportioned, as to be scarcely worth counting in the comparison. We must remember, too, that communism, as a system of society, exists only in idea; that its difficulties, at present, are much better understood than its resources; and that the intellect of mankind is only beginning to contrive the means of organizing it in detail, so as to overcome the one and derive the greatest advantage from the other.

"If, therefore, the choice were to be made between communism with all its chances, and the present state of society with all its sufferings and injustices; if the institution of private property necessarily carried with it as a consequence, that the produce of labor should be apportioned as we now see it, almost in an inverse ratio to the labor—the largest portions to those who have never worked at all, the next largest to those whose work is almost nominal, and so in a descending scale the remuneration dwindles as the work grows harder and more disagreeable, until the most fatiguing and exhausting bodily labor cannot count with certainty on being able to earn even the necessaries of life; if this, or communism, were the alternative, all the difficulties, great or small, of communism, would be but as dust in the balance."

We venture to say that Professor Ely has nowhere uttered a more scathing arraignment of the existing social system than the above taken from the chapter on communism in John Stuart Mill's "Principles of Political Economy." To be sure, Mill thought that many of the evils of the existing system were incidental and might be eradicated, but so also does Professor Ely. It is noticeable, however, that Mill distinctly states that, unless these evils can be removed, communism, even in the crude form in which it was then advocated, was much the less of the two evils, and farther, that he recognizes that many of the supposed ills of communism would disappear when actually put into operation.

Were John Stuart Mill alive to-day, after these years in which our social system has ripened so rapidly that its development equals that made during centuries in the slower periods of the world; and when it has been clearly shown that the evils which he enumerates give no evidence of becoming better, but rather fearfully worse, it seems not improbable that he might have been a follower of Bellamy, or rather the leader of some similar socialistic scheme.

In this connection, too, it is well to recall Mill's utterances on the subject of ownership of land: "When the 'sacredness of property' is talked of it should always be remembered that any such sacredness does not belong in the same degree to landed property. No man made the land. It is the original inheritance of the whole species Its appropriation is wholly a question of expediency. When private property in land is not expedient it is unjust. It is no hardship to any one to be excluded from what others have produced; they were not bound to produce it for his use, and he loses nothing by not sharing in what otherwise would not have existed at all. But it is some hardship to be born into the world and to find all nature's gifts previously engrossed and no place left for the new-comer." Again, after saying that compensation should be made land owners when their property is taken from them, he says: "But subject to this proviso, the state is at liberty to deal with landed property as the general interests of the community may require, even to the extent, if it so happen, of doing with the whole what is done with a part whenever a bill is passed for a railroad or a new street. The community has too much at stake in the proper cultivation of the land and in the conditions annexed to the occupancy of it to leave these things to the discretion of a class of persons called landlords, when they have shown themselves unworthy of the trust."

Henry George is not more radical in his statement of principles. He simply goes a step farther and urges that the time has come when the state should do with the whole what it has long been doing with a part of the land.

We do not argue that these views are sound because John Stuart Mill held them. They are of interest, however, as showing that the social reformers of our own day are not the first to see and to point out the serious evils of our competitive system. As the expression of one of the ablest thinkers of this century, an acknowledged authority in political science and one who accepted the existing condition, they are of very great weight.

CAN A TEMPERANCE MAN RAISE HOPS OR A W. C. T. U. WOMAN PICK THEM?

Our answer to this query in THE UNION SIGNAL of June 21 has brought so many objections from our constituency in hop-growing districts that we open our columns for its discussion, wiser, if not sadder, for the episode. It only re-proves to us what experience ought long since to have abundantly proven, that one should never give an opinion upon any subject which is not based upon some measure of experience.

Circumstances so control the ethics of any act that there are few courses of conduct of which it may be said that they are always absolutely and unswervingly right and best. Even speaking the truth, which of all things would seem at first thought to be invariably right, may be in spirit so wrong as to rank the speaker lower in the scale of Christian charity than would be one whose silence was born of love for his neighbor and a desire to shield and save.

We are not extenuating misrepresentation; it must always be to a greater or lesser degree blameworthy; but telling the truth is not always, even to a lesser degree, praiseworthy. "Speaking the truth in love," says the Apostle, "we are to grow up into Him." Speaking the truth in malice or hate we must grow less and less like Him.

The application of this illustration to the case in point is this: A thing may be theoretically right but practically wrong, according to the circumstances which affect the application of the theory. Theoretically, we still believe our answer to this question to have been a right one, to wit:

If hops were used only for beer we should answer most emphatically, NO. But they have other uses; they are used in the manufacture of yeast; they are used for medicinal purposes, and very largely in the process of dyeing cloth. If temperance men or W. C. T. U. women know that the hops they are picking or selling are to be sent to a brewery then they are violating the spirit, if not the letter, of their pledge; but if they are raised and picked for the general market we cannot see how they are breaking their pledge any more than by husking corn or picking grapes. Corn is largely made into whisky, and grapes into wine, but each has its beneficent function, and if we are to examine thus microscopically all the good things of life, there will be little room for anything else. Sometimes it seems to us that there is need in our temperance zeal of the old caution, "Be not righteous over much."

Hops are as much a gift of God to humanity as are grapes, or apples, or corn. Each of these gifts is capable of immense abuse, but it is also designed for beneficent use, and as the picker of apples or grapes, or the husker of corn cannot come under a wholesale denunciation because some part of these products are turned to infamous uses, so it seemed to us that the grower and picker of hops could not be denounced unless it were known that the fruit of their labor was to enrich the product of the brewery.

So much for theory. Practically, we have always lived hundreds of miles from any hop-growing country. Our only knowledge of the product goes back to the vine over the back porch in childhood's days, where loving memory clings as fresh and strong as the vine itself. We had never seen a hop-field; we had no idea of any evils following in the wake of its culture, or of any ethical standard against that culture in the communities where hops are grown. Given the question to answer by powers which could not be gainsaid, we answered it according to our best light at that time.

But new light has come since, and come from those who know whereof they affirm. From a white-ribboner in Oregon we learn that on competent authority, "forty acres produce annually all the hops needed for yeast and medicine in the United States." We also learn that in that locality "church members and white-ribboners who raise and pick hops are sneered at for their inconsistency."

From Pennsylvania we learn that but "the very smallest percentage imaginable of the hops produced is used in the manufacture of yeast or in the process of dyeing." The writer further states: "In conversing with a Congregational clergyman lately from the hop-growing district of New York state, he said to me, 'This industry (hop-raising) is the greatest obstacle that Christianity meets in these counties.'"

Now these things being so, and from such authorities we cannot doubt their truth, THE UNION SIGNAL most unqualifiedly reverses its decision of June 21, and desires to state thus editorially that according to its later, truer light, a temperance man cannot raise, nor a W. C. T. U. woman pick hops without violating both the letter and the spirit of the pledge.

If it be a fact that all but an infinitesimal portion of the hops grown in this country go to the breweries; if hop-culture is in any section made a test of strength of temperance principle, then there is but one safe, true course, and that is to have nothing whatever to do with an industry which helps to swell the tide of misery and woe flowing daily from the brewery, without which the brewery itself would be practically an impossibility.

MRS. J. K. BARNEY, of Rhode Island, National W. C. T. U. prison evangelist, and superintendent of prison, jail, police and almshouse work in the World's W. C. T. U., is going to England in October, by invitation of Lady Henry Somerset, to hold meetings under the auspices of the British Women's Temperance Association. We feel that we cannot well spare such a consecrated and beloved worker as Mrs. Barney, but this act of reciprocity is a token of the love we bear our sisters across the water, and the appreciation that we feel in view of the great service rendered by Lady Henry Somerset as a speaker, writer and leader of forces in the white-ribbon movement.

ONE of the most surprising eccentricities that we have lately noted is the current discussion by a Chautauqua professor, in which he contrasts Browning and Tennyson, representing the latter as "standing distinctly for the feminine, or even the effeminate." He asserted that in personal appearance Tennyson was effeminate, while Browning had all the appearance of a "thorough man of the world." He said that Tennyson showed the feminine quality of his genius in his indecision in an important matter of art, as illustrated in the fact that "The Idylls of the King" is neither "altogether allegorical nor yet natural, being neither fish nor fowl." In commenting upon this chunk of wisdom we have only to remark humbly that if Tennyson was effeminate, blessed be the feminine, and may heaven send us more such feeble creatures as the Poet Laureate!

PLEDGE.—"I hereby solemnly promise, God helping me, to abstain from all distilled, fermented and malt liquor as a beverage, including Wine, Beer and Cider, and to employ all proper means to discourage the use of and traffic in the same."

QUESTION.—Can a Chair entertain a motion to adjourn when there is a motion for the "previous question" already before the house? If so, what does your card mean when it says: "The motion to adjourn is out of order when the previous question is pending"?

ANSWER.—The motion to adjourn is entirely in order when there is a motion for the previous question before the house, but after the previous question has been ordered and the vote has not yet been taken, the motion to adjourn cannot be entertained. To illustrate: "Madam President, I move the previous question. I second the motion. President—Shall the main question be now put? All in favor say aye; all opposed, no. The ayes have it. The motion is carried, and now the previous question is pending." At this juncture the Chair could not entertain a motion to adjourn.

Q.—When a series of resolutions begin with a preamble, do we not adopt the preamble first?

A.—You should not. Consider the resolutions seriatim, and when they are amended until they exactly suit, adopt as a whole, and after your resolutions are adopted, adopt the preamble. Suppose they were offered with a "whereas," and you adopted the preamble and voted down the resolution, what would you do with your whereas? With a series of resolutions the principle is precisely the same.

A session of a convention is from the opening to the final adjournment.

A. S. BENJAMIN,
Nat. Supt. Parliamentary Usage.

Q.—What is the cause of the apparent discrepancy between the statements of Carroll D. Wright and our National superintendent of foreign work?

A.—The number of foreigners in our large cities as given in the recent report of Carroll D. Wright, United States commissioner of labor, seems to conflict with those given by statistics which have frequently been quoted both in the reports and leaflets of the department of foreign work, and also in my lectures on that subject. There is, however, no discrepancy. Mr. Wright gives those alone born in foreign countries, which in Chicago is forty-two per cent. Our statistics include foreign born, and those of the first generation, or ninety-one per cent in Chicago. The latter inherit both taste and habits, and experience proves that as a class they are no less addicted to intoxicants than their parents.

SOPHIA F. GRUBB,
Nat. Supt. Work Among Foreigners.

Q.—What would you think of a member of a union recommending or advising another member to use whisky in her baby's milk? It has been done in our union. Please let a perplexed union hear your opinion of what should be done in the case.

A.—A W. C. T. U. woman who would so advise should certainly have kindly admonition and instruction. She cannot be intelligent as to the nature of alcohol, nor the danger of creating an appetite for liquor in the little one. I think some of our W. T. P. A. leaflets upon the effect of alcohol should be placed in her hands with request to read. It is the result of ignorance evidently rather than an intent to do wrong. I would recommend that union to send to the W. T. P. A., The Temple, Chicago, for Responsive Reading, "Temperance Remedies," and have it read in the union.

HELEN M. BARKER.

Q.—Can a truly loyal member of the W. C. T. U. advocate any kind of license of the liquor traffic?

A.—Union with the W. C. T. U. requires the signing of the constitution, the preamble of which reads: "We, Christian women of this nation, conscious of the great evils, and appalled by the danger, of intemperance, believe it to be our duty, under the providence of God, to unite our efforts for its extinction and for the entire prohibition of the liquor traffic." Clearly, then, each member is pledged to prohibition, and loyalty to truth will not permit the indorsement of any form of compromise.

MARY A. WOODBRIDGE.

In a recent issue you answer the question, "Can a W. C. T. U. woman pick hops without breaking her pledge?" in the affirmative, providing she picks them for general market purposes. Questions of similar character are often raised. I think the correct answer is: It depends on the probabilities. For instance, to fire a gun in a solitary forest at random would be regarded as innocent, though injury might be done to a fellow creature. But to fire it in a crowded street of a densely populated city could not thus be regarded. We say the man must consider the probabilities of his acts. It may be safely assumed that twenty-four of every twenty-five pounds of hops picked for the general market are used for beer. The W. C. T. U. woman, if she would keep her pledge in its spirit, must look to the probabilities of her work. If the probabilities are it will prove a blessing to humanity, she is keeping her pledge; if a curse, then she is breaking it.

S. HOXIE.

Professor Drummond, whose "Ascent of Man" has been attracting so much attention, is also a believer in the ascent of woman. In a speech at Haddo House, Lord Aberdeen's Scotch home, he recently remarked that "woman had been put through a marvelous discipline during the long night of history to teach her the virtues of unselfishness, tenderness, patience, compassion, and love, so that she might become the teacher of the world; and it was quite certain, by all the laws of science, and all the traditions of the world's past, that the great factor in the future evolution of society must be the ascent of woman."

The professor in the same speech gave an interesting example of the part the mother plays in the human economy: During the past winter he had had, as an adjudicator in a competition in connection with the Boys' Brigade, to examine the letters of seven hundred boys, letters which the writers believed to be addressed to another boy, and which were, therefore, the genuine productions of the original mine of a boy's mind. Amongst other things they were stating the influences which had chiefly operated to keep them from going to the bad. Not one of the seven hundred mentioned his minister; not above a dozen mentioned their masters in business; a few mentioned their superior officers in the brigade; but hundreds mentioned their mothers.

The Thirty-eighth street club of working women in New York city had a very serious subject for a recent meeting; it was as follows: "Is a man made by his wife or woman made by her husband? Which has the greater influence?" Miss Grace Dodge led the discussion.

By thine own soul's law learn to live,
And if men thwart thee take no heed,
And if men hate thee have no care;
Sing thou thy song and do thy deed,
Hope thou thy hope and pray thy prayer.

What should we say of the engineer who was so intent on going over the road making the largest possible number of stops and reaching the terminus in the least possible time, that he did not keep the furnace supplied with coal, neglected to oil the wheels, failed to examine the bolts, did not watch the piston rod, did not clean out the boiler or polish up the works? An employé so careless as that would be speedily discharged, and yet, how many women who read these lines treat the engines of their own physical organization in just this way, forgetting that coal is not more essential to the locomotive than healthful food and sleep to their bodies; that oil is not more needful to making the works of an engine run smoothly than exercise is to keep muscles and joints up to their best; and that the polish which is so attractive in the locomotive has its analogy in that tastefully made toilet and those gracious manners which hold one's place among one's fellowmen and women. We know these things and happy are we if we do them, but for the most part, alas, we are "too busy" and so we remain fractional and often discordant notes in what ought to be clear-sounding, universal harmony.

Membership day is drawing near and "loyal hearts and true" are casting about in their fruitful minds how they may best and most effectively agitate the old question of gaining recruits. "We've tried everything" is a common wail, and often a truthful one, yet its utterance indicates a dead-line of effort that argues but poorly for the life and growth of the union in question. A suggestive method of procedure—especially for the smaller towns—may not be out of place. Study the human geography—if such it may be called—of the community and let each member of the union carefully prepare a list of probable, possible and desired members. On comparison of these lists at a special meeting for the purpose preceded by the preparation of prayer the "victims" are to be assigned—Mrs. A. taking her affinities, i. e., those whom she can most readily approach and most easily and strongly persuade, Mrs. B. taking hers, etc. Perhaps Mrs. E. can win over her list through some side-action of a well-timed, but unusual or unexpected courtesy, involving not unlikely self-sacrifice and effort. It may be that Mrs. D. has a special "gift" in reaching and holding the consciences of the brothers-in-law, then the honoraries will be her share of the work. Strokes at random accomplish little, yet it must often be that the strokes must appear not to be premeditated.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA.

PRESSING ON.

In such troublous times as this summer has brought, the supreme power of divine love and the Satanic force of evil become unusually impressive. In the bewilderment of cause and effect and the confusion of disjointed affairs there is an immense consolation in the thought that, after all, there is a higher governing intelligence, to whom all these conditions can be intrusted.

Strikes have been not the order, but the disorder, of the days. Every manner of business has been more or less the sufferer by reason of strikes, except the liquor traffic. Failures have been all too plentiful, but so far no saloon has been closed on account of strikes, except those temporarily closed by the police for fear of riots. This is the only business that has called for police interference.

The usual summer travel has been seriously interrupted, and some of the summer meetings were necessarily given up. The Young Woman's Christian Association had to forego theirs. The Chautauqua Assembly carried out theirs by postponing it two weeks.

Our school of methods convened on the appointed day, July 17, at Pacific Grove, though some timid souls warned us that we were taking our lives in our hands to go, under the circumstances. Policemen on each end of every car as the trains left the city were more a reminder of danger past than of necessary protection. Our president is like Abraham Davenport in Whittier's poem, who, when the sun was eclipsed, simply called for candles and proceeded with business. The railroads being open for travel, the school began on time, and the whole program was faithfully carried out. In the absence of many who were to have taken part, it is no small tribute to the efficiency of the president and her well-trained force, that a week's work could be so well done. Some most admirable chink filling was done.

Mrs. Churchill, ex-president and long-time evangelistic superintendent, gave the keynote in her opening paper on "Christ the Head."

The excellent plan was evolved in this school of each superintendent whose department was to be brought out, having the preparation of that portion of the program.

Mrs. Eyster had charge of the juvenile and made a very profitable afternoon, calling on several others in discussion. Mrs. Grace Kimball did the same for press work, Mrs. Bentley for heredity, Mrs. Rose M. French for law enforcement, Mrs. E. G. Greene for mothers' meetings, Miss Severance for franchise, Mrs. Christine Armstrong for Sabbath observance and Mrs. Spencer for the state paper.

Miss Severance excelled herself in her evening lecture on the annals of woman suffrage. She is both witty and wise. A gentleman present remarked, "I never heard an address so full of brains and facts as that one." She cannot vote, but if a majority of those who can only knew as much, that same gentleman would be the next governor of California.

The county president's symposium gave a fair view of the relation of the W. C. T. U. to the past, present and future of local legislation.

One of the most interesting features was a debate on the question, "Resolved, That immoral though it be, the saloon aids business." The arguments on both sides were irresistible, the ladies proving good debaters, but the audience voted that the negative had the best of it.

Thursday evening was the Y evening, and it is needless to say that it was delightful. Mrs. Nevins, superintendent of Y's, presided. Mr. Henry French, Prohibition candidate for governor, offered prayer (while in the seats some of us who joined him thought how likely the other gubernatorial candidates would be to take part in such a service). It would be invidious to mention any who took part, for all were so charming, in their papers, addresses, songs and other music. Miss Rose Trumbull, of Oregon, a student of the Stanford University, gave an excellent address.

On Friday evening an old folks' Demorest contest was given, under the supervision of Miss McLean, the superintendent of that department. The entire class were a credit to themselves and an honor to the superintendent, but one only could take the medal, and all the rest were delighted when that was awarded to Rose M. French, of San Francisco.

An effort was made to have one day of recreation, but time was precious, and the executive committee got in some excellent work during that day.

Mrs. E. T. Scott preached the annual sermon on Sunday morning, and Mrs. E. G. Greene spoke in the Congregational church at the same hour.

On Sunday evening there was a packed house and a platform meeting, addressed by Rev. Dr. Bentley, Maj. E. T. Scott and Hon. Henry French, representing, as the Major said, the church, the W. C. T. U. and the Prohibition party.

It is felt that notwithstanding a smaller than the usual attendance, this school is likely to be more than usually prolific in results. Not the least significant movement inaugurated is embodied in a resolution, the gist of which is an invitation "to all Christian people, to all lovers of law, order and decency, to all who desire to retain the privileges of local option now enjoyed by the people of this state and protect local prohibition where already acquired; to coöperate in a general effort to defeat the election of all candidates for the legislature who shall be pledged to a uniform license bill, on whatever ticket their names may appear."

The right of local option in this state is a constitutional provision by which all police regulations, including the liquor traffic, are left to local authorities—municipal or county boards—so long as they do not conflict with any general law of the state. Under this we have now four prohibition counties and a large number of small towns, but it will be seen at once that a uniform license bill being a general law of the state would destroy all these and our right to any local option. The Republican party has boldly embodied the idea in its platform, so that resolution means all their candidates. The Democrats cannot be expected to fall behind them in subservience to King Alcohol, so we stand with the Prohibitionists; that is all we can do. If we are not in politics, where are we?

The management of the Chautauqua Assembly this year invited the W. C. T. U. to fill one day in its program, which was acceptably done and is the entering of another open door.

The organization of a Law and Order League in San Francisco is an outgrowth of the Temperance Congress.

The organization of a W. C. T. U. in the Third Congregational church of this city, as a part of the machinery of the church, makes the second important church in San Francisco to take this step, thus placing the work exactly it should be—in the church itself.

MISSOURI.

INVESTING THE SUMMER-TIME.

The Carondelet W. C. T. U., of the St. Louis district, entertained many friends on Wednesday, August 1, at the beautifully decorated home of the president, Mrs. J. F. Robeson, in celebration of the tenth anniversary of their organization. Mrs. Anna Sneed Cairns addressed a large audience in the Baptist Church, in 1884, and on the following morning organized the Carondelet W. C. T. U. The anniversary program was most interesting and inspiring, reviewing the ten years work, giving the hopeful future outlook, and including among the addresses given and the letters and telegrams received so much cheer and encouragement and so many warm words of loving comradeship, that it is very hard to condense into the space available. Mrs. Robeson gave a synopsis of the work that had been done. Mrs. Ingalls earnestly urged that we must strive not only to teach temperance principle, but work to destroy the saloon, the destroyer of our homes. Mrs. Robert in happy vein told of the events of ten years ago and of years following. Miss H. M. Mason spoke of the present need for work. These, and many others from whom letters were received were members of the union at its organization, among them Mrs. E. J. Hall, the first president, now in Illinois, Mrs. Williams, first secretary, now of New York, Mrs. Lyman Page, of Chicago, and Mrs. H. H. Wagoner. Mrs. Cairns and Mrs. Kilgore also sent most cheering letters filled with reminiscences of the union's zeal and faithfulness under adverse circumstances, the miles traveled in securing names to petitions for scientific temperance instruction, and legal work, the labor among the children which had been so fruitful for good, and the many efforts put forward to banish the liquor traffic, many of the letters noting gratefully the wider outlook and spiritual blessing which association in the Carondelet union had brought. Letters or telegrams were also received from Rev. Dr. Hughey, now of Springfield, Mo., Rev. Lyman W. Allen, now of Newark, N. J., and Rev. Dr. McAnally, all former helpers, and now earnest friends though far removed. Here are some of their brotherly words:

"The W. C. T. U. is doing the grandest work for humanity that is being done by any organization outside of the church of our Lord, and it is an arm and department of the work of the church."

"I think myself fortunate in having lived to witness the dawn of a new day in the world's history. The Christian world is only now beginning to learn what are the capabilities of women."

Tender words, too, were spoken of beautiful lives of friends and members who had been called to the home eternal. A pleasant part of the exercises was the presentation to Mrs. Woods and Mrs. McClintock, who had officially served the union for many years, of beautifully decorated wooden salad spoons, an oil painted portrait of Miss Willard gracing each bowl. Refreshments and a social closed this delightful occasion.

The twenty-sixth district reports a very successful convention held at West Plains. Mrs. Hoffman was present, and gave an address on each evening, her address on woman suffrage making many converts. The district officers of the past year were reëlected, Mrs. S. A. E. Herrick being president.

Texas and Howell counties, both of this district, each held a county conference on June 14. Texas county workers met at Houston, seventeen miles from the railroad, and although this was the only working union in the county, a most successful conference was held and many townships represented, ministers and their wives giving much valuable assistance. Miss Jane Lynch is county manager, and much pioneer work is being done, the reward for which will be sure to come in good time.

Howell county, with three working unions and Mrs. Crawford as county manager, met at Willow Springs, and the conference was a most satisfactory one. Seventeen new active members and seven honorary ones were gained.

Mountain Grove union is the only one in Wright county, but is a model of energy and achievement. Beginning two years since with seventeen active and two honorary members, it has more than doubled its membership, has held seven Demorest contests—six silver and one gold—filled a very important part of the Fourth of July program, providing some exercises from the Sunday-school and securing a fine address by Miss Carrie Lee Carter, who also delivered a second address the evening following to a crowded house. Mrs. Cranmer and Mrs. Hoffman have lectured for the union during the year, and the four local ministers have all preached temperance sermons. The popular school here teaches scientific temperance instruction in all its grades, and in every way this union is doing its best to push forward the battle.

While ministers nearly everywhere give their aid to this warfare against evil, the union in Monroe City says: "We have no coöperation from ministers nor use of their churches." Yet by weekly meetings and work in literature and press departments, by mothers' meetings held once a month, occasional public meetings and continuous personal influence the leaven is being hid in the meal.

Seneca, beside her lawn social of July 30, has had another silver medal contest, and also filled an hour on the Fourth of July program with temperance music and recitations, thereby speaking a good word in season.

The W. C. T. U. at Pineville met the teachers at the institute held in July, and addresses and resolutions upon teaching scientific temperance instruction in the public schools were given. Much interest was shown, and fifty-six teachers promptly pledged themselves to this work. A Demorest contest was also had during the institute, some young gentlemen giving most generous and timely help by taking part with hardly any time for preparation, the whole affair being an unusual success.

A gold medal contest at Austin, July 30, was given to a very crowded house, four young ladies and two young gentlemen being contestants. Fine music was a part of the program, and over twenty-one dollars were the receipts of the evening. The cordial support of ministers is a help to this union in the work, and new members are being added to the band.

A mass temperance meeting by the Y. P. S. C. E. rounded out grandly the temperance lesson Sunday in Clarksville. The W. C. T. U. here are doing steady work, pushing contests, giving special attention to franchise, and having faith in "the reaping by and by."

Most encouraging of all is the steadfast interest and effort of the little country unions like that of Pleasant Valley, whose members go on horseback or in buggies for miles to meet at the home of some member, to study and plan work, and take counsel together for home protection. I wish we might hear from all of them.

Pierce City has that best of all good things, a flourishing L. T. L., which recently gave a fine entertainment, short and helpful addresses by the pastors forming part of the program. These juveniles have also given a silver medal contest recently. The Y's and W's of Pierce City have each given a lawn social, successful both in finance and enjoyment. A lecture from Miss Carrie Lee Carter was a treat July 9, and an afternoon tea with an attendance of forty-eight ladies was given August 3, a collection of ten dollars being taken and a good program provided.

Clinton union is happy in having been able to rescue three wayward girls recently from paths of shame, a home and care having been provided for them with one of the W. C. T. U. members. The union gave a social at W. C. T. U. headquarters in July, which was an enjoyable and helpful occasion. A revival recently began in Clinton through the influence of the Anti-Saloon Army, some poor, lost drunkards coming to the leader, Mr. Faris, and begging his help to aid them in shaking off the old life and beginning a new one. After a number of conversions in the Anti-Saloon Army prayer-meetings that followed, the meetings merged into a general revival effort of wide influence in the city.

PENNSYLVANIA PENCILINGS.

Would that we were gifted with a "magician's wand" that we might penetrate the remotest bounds of this great state and find out some of the many good things which are being accomplished by the workers. Some of the counties have not been heard from during the entire year—and we hope by this gentle reminder to "stir up their pure minds by way of remembrance." Send postal-card reports.

Schuylkill county. The Mahanoy City union held its first railroad meeting with encouraging results.

The Shenandoah Y observed flower mission day. It also held lawn fetes on July Fourth and August 1st, with a view to replenishing the treasury. The county convention was held in Shenandoah September 12, with Mrs. Annabelle Morris Holvey as speaker.

Clearfield county has just held a successful convention at Lumber City. The address of welcome was given by Mrs. McMasters, of Lumber City, and the response by Mrs. Shaw, county president, who by the way is serving as president for the eleventh year. Excellent papers were read by Minnie Warrick, on the relation of the Sunday-school work to the temperance question; by Miss Shaw, on scientific temperance instruction; by Miss McClure, on railroad work: by Mrs. Campbell, on literature; Miss Tompkins, on the social side of our work; and Miss Shontz, on "Plans of Work."

Mrs. W. B. Rhoades, late superintendent of Y work, was present and made a fine address which was preceded by recitations and songs by the young people and members of the Loyal Temperance Legion. The reports by the various superintendents were all excellent. The Y banner was awarded to the Chester Hill Y's for largest increase of membership, and the Ramey Y won the second prize, a fine book. The L. T. L. of Osceola won the L. T.

L. banner and the L. T. L. of Winbourne won the second prize. Mrs. Shaw was made the happy recipient of a basket of flowers by the Y girls.

The Monitor, in commenting on the convention says: "What a pity the W. C. T. U. cannot hold a dozen county conventions a year. It is a great vote-making institution." While all the reports were of a high order we must not forget to mention that of Mrs. Reidy, superintendent of mothers' work and narcotics, who had held thirty-two gospel temperance meetings, twenty-seven of which were in Clearfield county. Mrs. Wilson, the Y superintendent, has organized two new unions. All the old officers were elected with the exception of the treasurer, who declined a reëlection. Miss Clara Shontz was elected treasurer.

FAYETTE COUNTY: The Dunbar Y's held a "mum social" which was very enjoyable, and which served the twofold purpose of replenishing their treasury and gaining new members. A Demorest contest was held at Pleasant View. The orations were well delivered, the music fine, the audience large and appreciative. The medal was won by are Miss Ida Grable. The Pleasant View Y's increasing in membership and several new departments of work have been taken up.

The annual meeting of the Laurel Hill W. C. T. U. was held August 9. The choir furnished excellent music. Rev. Stewart, of Dunbar, made a fine address and Miss Belle Junk gave a pleasing recitation. In the afternoon Revs. Johnson, of Vanderbilt, Rush, of Dunbar, and Rev. Reed made addresses and Miss Phillips very ably rendered "Little Tommy." The Perryopolis Y held a Demorest contest which is deserving of more than a passing mention. The seven contestants acquitted themselves admirably. Miss Bertha Cope won the medal and each of the remaining contestants was presented with a booklet.

DELAWARE COUNTY: Thurlow W. C. T. U. celebrated Jennie Casseday's birthday by a parlor social, at which a very interesting program was carried out.

ARMSTRONG COUNTY held a school of methods with Mrs. Olive Pond Amies as instructor, and those who know her rare skill in conducting these "schools" will not be surprised to learn that it was a grand success.

MERCER COUNTY is preparing for the twentieth annual convention at Sandy Lake, September 20 and 21. Mrs. Anna Hammer, state president, will lecture the second evening of convention and Mrs. A. M. Rice, the first evening. Grove City Y is preparing to hold a franchise contest, the first ever held in the county, in the near future.

Sharon union has held its third parlor social, at which four new members were obtained. Mrs. J. W. Stevenson, a former state superintendent of literature, has had her heart and hands full during the summer months in caring for her eldest son, a young man of marked ability as a student and of staunch temperance principles, who has been ill. The prayers of all the white-ribboners will ascend to the Great Father for his recovery. Mrs. G. W. Armstrong, county superintendent of purity, has been afflicted with inflammatory rheumatism during the past few months.

A new L. T. L. has been organized at Wheeler, with Miss Sadie Gilkey as superintendent.

NOTES.

Nine new unions is the record since our last report.

Armstrong county convention will be held September 19, 20.

Hettie L. Phillips, a beloved member of the Ercildoun union, has answered to the Master's call to "come up higher." Their loss is her gain.

One hundred and thirty-seven new subscribers to the state paper are reported from six counties, of which Lawrence county sends the largest number.

Again we urge the press superintendents to send reports of work done in their respective counties. ADDA BURCH,

TENNESSEE TEMPERANCE.

From Mrs. Harriet L. Adams, who spent the winter, spring and early summer months in our state speaking and organizing, comes a report, too late for my last letter, of the splendid work she has done in Tennessee. Summing up, I find that she visited seventy-one towns while in our state. That she spoke to general public audiences ninety-seven times, and to unions, L. T. L's, Epworth Leagues, Christian Endeavors, colleges, missionary societies and prayer-meetings thirty-one times, making in all one hundred and twenty-eight instances in which she reached the ears and hearts of the people. Mrs. Adams understands her work, and how to tell of it, and that she did untold good in our state wherever she was afforded opportunity, no one who knows her can doubt. She organized thirteen new unions, and imparted new life to the many older unions that were so fortunate as to have her with them. I earnestly hope we may have Mrs. Adams with us again some time, and when she comes she will receive a right royal welcome.

(Will Mrs. Adams, or some friend of hers, send me her present address? A letter written immediately after I received her last, after following her around for some weeks, from place to place, was finally returned to me some days since.)

From Knoxville comes a good report of work along many lines. In May the good people of the city had a temperance rally, and the W. C. T. U. were out in full force, selling lunches, fruits, ices and lemonades, from which they realized the snug sum of fifty dollars. Rev. Sam Jones was present, and gave one of his straight temperance talks, which was followed by several others from well-known speakers, and much and lasting good was done. Flower mission day was observed by a visit to the jail and hospital and the distribution of flowers and good literature. They held religious services at both places, and were heartily thanked by the inmates, who expressed themselves as having been greatly benefited by their kind visitation. Their kindergarten closed for a short vacation with some delightful exercises. The children had progressed nicely. They hope to continue the work after vacation is over. For this purpose they are getting up an entertainment to raise funds to carry on the work. Ten dollars have been received as membership fees for Baby Band, which will be remitted to National treasurer at once. They have sent to each minister in the city a written request to preach a special temperance sermon before the coming election. Their press department reports meetings and other work. They are pleading with the state convention to meet with them the next time.

From Harriman comes, as usual, a good report. They meet regularly, sometimes with a good attendance, sometimes not so many. The departments of social purity, narcotics, equal suffrage, press work and the ldistribution of literature are specially mentioned as being the most prominent in their work this year, though good work is being done all along the line. Dr. Kellar, their efficient superintendent of social purity, has been prostrated by a severe and painful illness, but she is now better. All our W. C. T. U. women should pray that this earnest, devoted woman be spared to continue the excellent work she is doing in our state. During commencement week at the temperance university, a committee furnished refreshments in the university rooms and thereby made thirty dollars. The "glorious Fourth" was loyally celebrated at their city park, when again refreshments were served and a like sum was realized. A number of loans have been negotiated for lifting the debt on their temple, and they feel that with the removing of that a new period of prosperity will be inaugurated.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

MRS. ANNIE BIDWELL, wife of General Bidwell, has written so many letters that she has been obliged to "put into port for repairs." Mrs. Bidwell is one of our most devoted white-ribboners.

MRS. MARY E. TAYLOR, corresponding secretary of Arkansas W. C. T. U., has recently made an official visit to the southwestern part of her state, visiting several unions and organizing five new ones. This makes nine unions organized since the state convention in April.

A KENTUCKY correspondent writes: "Hon. W. C. Owens, who is the opposing candidate to Breckinridge, is for temperance. He never drinks and has no immoral habits. His clean record makes us the more anxious for his election; yet the more fearful of failure, because all the whisky thousands are used against him."

MRS. ANNA M. PALMER, one of the National evangelists, sends this bit of encouraging comment: "I wish you could know how many times I thank the Lord for THE UNION SIGNAL. It is packed every week with fresh thought, clothed in language so chaste, eloquent, captivating, as to enlist the intellectual and win the spiritual. Long may its editors and contributors be spared to us."

MRS. LUCIA H. ADDITON, state lecturer of the Oregon W. C. T. U., formerly of Boston, a bright speaker and writer, especially on the relation of temperance to capital and labor, will be glad to have appointments en route from Lents, Ore., to the National W. C. T. U. Convention at Cleveland. She is highly endorsed by Mrs. Susie E. Foster, of Oregon, Mrs. Dorcas J. Spencer, Miss Jessie Ackermann, Rev. J. W. Webb, of California. W. C. T. U. presidents can secure much valuable work at small cost by addressing her at Lents, Ore.

MRS. HARRIET D. WALKER, our National evangelist, writes that no year of her ministry has been more blessed in service, or crowned with more glorious results in the salvation of souls. She gives an interesting report of the Christian Workers' camp-meeting held at Hebronsville, R. I., in which the state W. C. T. U. had a day. The Bible reading at noon and sermon of the evening were given by Mrs. Walker, and were blessed richly by the Spirit.

MISS C. AUGUSTA GOODALE, who for nine years has been an officer in Orange county, New York, W. C. T. U., first as vice-president and later as recording secretary, and for the past two years state superintendent of the department of mercy, on July 11, became the wife of Rev. W. T. Fairchild, of Pennsylvania. Many good wishes will accompany Mrs. Fairchild in her new relation. New York white-ribboners extend congratulations.

WE regret to hear that Mrs. Henrietta Skelton, our veteran German worker, has been severely troubled with sciatica. She intends coming east before the Cleveland convention to work among her own people. Mrs. Skelton has organized sixteen new unions in California since October, and added nearly a thousand members to our ranks; and she hopes to make the number of unions twenty-five before we meet at the National.

MRS. ESMOND, of Syracuse, N. Y., from the first a leader in the white ribbon work and formerly National superintendent of the effort to introduce non-alcoholic wine at the sacramental table, has passed into the better life. She was stanch and true,—a woman of remarkable equipose of character, and though conservative by nature and training she kept step with the advancing procession of awakened womanhood, when it cost her much to do so.

SATURDAY, August 11, Oswego county W. C. T. U. for the fifth year held a service on Demster Grove camp ground, which, by the way, is one of the best conducted camp grounds in Northern New York. Mrs. Emilie Underhill Burgess, of Highland, president of Ulster county W. C. T. U., gave a very fine address. One woman went from that service saying to herself, "We will have a union in our place" and suiting the action to the word called the East Palermo ladies together, and Mrs. Dwight Stone, assisted by Mrs. Vilas, of Syracuse, completed the organization. This makes the fourth new union in this county since March 17, last.

THE Effingham county W. C. T. U. canvassed the county, got money, lumber, material and labor donated, and put up a good 20x30 cottage a story and a half high on the fair grounds at Watson. It served meals, had awnings for mothers and babies, with rocking chairs, and for the young to fix up, and drinking water for all. A table was filled full of the best literature, and Bibles were kept for sale. Seats were spread outside of the house, and in its shade many rested or ate their meals, and felt thankful to the W. C. T. U. for the best accommodations they ever had, so they said. They kept a register which was filled with words of cheer; everybody was good to give. This fall a nice grove of trees was planted and lovely Arbor Day exercises held. "This work has made the W. C. T. U. known all over our county, as sensible, practical, useful and philanthropic, and demonstrated that we are of value as agricultural workers. No one thought we could build the house, but we did, and it is the nicest thing on the fair grounds." Thus writes our good friend, Ada H. Kepley, of Effingham.

MRS. MARY H. HULL, a good W. C. T. U woman, after a month's vacation with her two young sons at South Haven, Mich., and at Evanston, returns to her work at Armour Institute and Mission. Her labors the present year will consist of visits among the multitude of Sunday-school people of the mission as assistant pastor, and of lecturing before the student young ladies of the institute upon social questions and the part the coming woman will probably have to take in them. Mrs. Hull is making earnest study of actual social conditions. Her contact with the people in her endeavors to aid them by sympathy and advice in their struggle toward a higher standard of social and religious life, together with the books and persons connected with the Armour Institute, afford her rather unusual opportunities in these lines. Her lectures given at the mission once a month before the Mothers' Club on such motherly subjects as "housekeeping," "hospitality," "temperance and purity," "body building," "character building," "art," "husbands," "economy," etc., prove to be of valuable interest and will be open to the public during the remainder of the course. Her former position was a director of the domestic arts department of the institute, but she feels her present work is for her a larger field.

In spite of the "hard times" which have affected our work more or less, many of the unions in Wisconsin are doing grand work. Coloma, a young, but heroic, union, on a recent Sunday evening held a woman's gospel meeting. in which several white-ribboners gave addresses, recitations and songs, to the edification and helping of the large audience.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Unions of Butler and Bloomingdale, N. J., have been greatly delayed in their work of building, but they now hope soon to complete their temperance hall. They are to have a fair and festival in September and have completed arrangements for publishing a paper which will be issued about a week previous to the fair, and one to be issued while the fair is in progress.

The first Demorest diamond medal contest for New England was held at the N. E. Chautauqua Sunday-school assembly, at Lake View, South Framingham, Mass., Wednesday, July 13, 1894. Contestants were from various New England states, all of whom showed remarkable talent in this grand feature of temperance work, and evinced thorough preparation and a deep interest in their recitations, which were received with great favor by the large audience present. The judges had no easy task to decide as to superiority of contestants, but unanimously awarded the medal to Miss Elizabeth L. Randall, of Attleboro, Mass. Hon. W. Jennings Demorest, with a few well chosen remarks, presented the medal, amid much applause. He was afterwards given a grand reception by the many temperance workers present from all New England. Miss Randall also received the congratulations of many friends upon her success and the honor thus conferred upon Massachusetts. Mr. Demorest said that this was the best contest he had ever attended. Another diamond contest is already proposed for 1895. This is the first diamond medal awarded this side of the "Great West" (Illinois) or "Sunny South" (Georgia).

A most enthusiastic W. C. T. U. day was held in Sidney Grove, Delaware county, N. Y., August 14. Hundreds of people gathered and gave close attention to the strong arguments against the saloon and for the home. In the forenoon youthful orators from former Demorest contest classes spoke. The speaker of the afternoon was the well-known temperance orator, Dr. George R. Bristor, of New York. Rev. A. D. Decker, of Sidney, gave the address of the evening on scientific temperance instruction. Prohibitionists and I. O. of G. T's were represented and took part in the exercises of the day. The stand was beautifully and artistically decorated. W. Jennings Demorest's picture with Miss Frances Willard's were entwined in evergreens and hung in a conspicuous place. The words in white letters, "For God and Home and Every Land" on a bank of green moss hung over the archway, posts were draped and stands festooned in every possible place with ropes of pine and ferns, white ribbon and flags. The "Red, White and Blue" was lustily sung. God protect our homes and save our country from the curse of rum, was the burden of song and speech. Rev. Dr. Bristor contributed the collection for him to the work. "The service for the Master is sufficient compensation," he said as his face shone with the light of the inward power of the Spirit.

Official Communications.

FRANCHISE.

Blanks for reports in this department were sent out early in August. If at this writing you, as state superintendent, have received none, it is because you are new, or your name is not on our list. If, after sending reports, you do not find them fully incorporated in the National report, please bear with us, as we cannot help it. The Annual Minutes is a bulky volume, and superintendents are quite properly restricted to the mention of the most salient points. Especially is the interest focused upon those states where amendments have been or are pending, and where there are "live issues"; also where woman suffrage has already been adopted, and the question is, "How does it work?" We want to know all that is being done everywhere, and the victories will be duly chronicled.

In this connection attention is called to the new National leaflet by Frances E. Willard, "Should Women Vote?" published by the W. T. P. A., per 100, 90 cents; 10 for 10 cents. To announce this contribution to our literature is, we believe, to circulate it generously. Also another new leaflet will be the W. T. P. A. Responsive Reading for November on "The Franchise for Woman."

Louise C. Purington, Nat. Supt.
Dorchester, Boston, Mass.

Cor. Secy's Notes.

The National W. C. T. U. can pay only for those reports of superintendents that are sent to the National corresponding secretary to be published by the W. T. P. A.; as none others can be incorporated in the Annual Minutes.

New Jersey having secured a compulsory scientific temperance law is about to "strengthen her stakes," and push on to other victory. At her coming convention, October 23 to 28, Mrs. Mary H. Hunt and Rev. Anna H. Shaw, Mrs. Frances J. Barnes and Col. George W. Bain will speak. Six summer meetings have been held with great attendant success. Mrs. Bourne, the state president, writes: "At two camp-meetings where we were given the day and evening, we held a free parliament on the outlook. Ten preachers occupied one hour, all keeping within their limit of time and were bristling with vigorous, energetic thought." The state fair opened September 3. The W. C. T. U. has a cottage upon the ground, where gospel temperance meetings are held each afternoon. Free ice water and free literature may be secured there at all hours of the day, and a new enterprise is this year undertaken in the publication of the Fair Daily containing temperance news, stories and advertisements. The Newark union will serve hot meals, and assist in the meetings.

We heartily welcome the words of Mrs. Fannie L. Chum, the new president of Arkansas W. C. T. U., that ring with loyalty to the National organization and good cheer from all along the line. They are troubled by some of their preachers who used to live up North, but are pushing steadily forward and sowing the seed which they believe will bring forth good fruit. At some of their district conferences the report on temperance was repeated because it endorsed the W. C. T. U. One preacher said "he did not want a woman in his pulpit," to which there were several "amens." It won't be so always, dear sisters. Read with prayerful attention John G. Woolley's master speech on another page of this paper. Mrs. Chum says, "While we are not advancing rapidly, we are standing firmly."

We are all made happy by the assurance of Mrs. Jeannette G. Hauser, our late president of the India W. C. T. U., a woman of wonderful power, that she will, Providence permitting, be with us at the Cleveland Convention. Mrs. Hauser will soon enter the field with illustrated lectures on India, which will be equally helpful and interesting to W. C. T. U. and missionary societies. She writes: "A few years ago I had a 'dress rehearsal' in Lasell Seminary. The few present were greatly pleased, and it was all so true to life, that after it was over my daughter and I said to each other, 'We have been back to India and seen the people again.' I shall expect to be in the West immediately after the National Convention if no earlier, and shall hope for some engagements there."

An admirable report of the Burlington Junction W. C. T. U., of Nodaway county, Mo., has reached us. "It is a rural union, composed almost wholly of farmers' wives, with a membership of twenty-five. Though members are scattered their meeting is regularly held, their interest in the work never lags, their treasury is rarely empty, and for several years it has been gradually revolutionizing public sentiment in the neighborhood." Who would not be honored by membership in such a union?

No. 1 of "Colorado W. C. T. U. News-Letters" is a most unique little sheet, which we think will help much at this time of great need. It is a single sheet, printed in script type. Its motto is: "They helped every one his neighbor, and every one said to his brother, Be of good courage."—Isa. 41: 6. It opens with a salutatory from Mrs. Ella B. Gittings, its editor or writer, corresponding secretary of Colorado W. C. T. U., followed by the names of unions sending postage for the "News-Letter"; notice of the state convention to be held October 18–20, telling of the whereabouts and work of officers, and, to our delight, gave the names of presidents and places where ten new unions have been lately organized. Mrs. Higgins, president W. C. T. U., sends encouraging items of the prohibition work in the state.

Good word is received from a new union of twenty-two active and sixteen honorary members, organized by Mrs. Delle Cox, in Thorp, Wash., a town of less than two hundred inhabitants. If Mrs. Cox can create a proportionate interest in Chicago we would hail her coming with unspeakable delight. Mrs. Lucy R. Berry, treasurer East Washington W. C. T. U. writes: "We have economized in every conceivable way, doing all our office work and for our state paper ourselves, but the spark seems to burn brightly in the hearts of our dear sisters despite all of our hard times."

Sabbath, August 26, was a red-letter day at Harvey, Ill. Our Nebraska brother, A. G. Wolfenbarger, spoke at North Harvey in the morning, and at 3 p. m. addressed a large audience at the opera house in Harvey, under the auspices of the W. C. T. U., and in the evening spoke to a crowded house in the Baptist church in the interest of the Baptist Young People's Union. Mrs. Marion H. Baxter also spoke in the Baptist church, and in the M. E. church and at North Harvey. Headquarters were favored by a call from Mr. Wolfenbarger.

Mary A. Woodbridge.

Treasurer's Corner.

Don't forget! Books of National treasurer close November 1st. No extension can be given.

Report blanks as to receipts and expenditures of local unions have been called for by nearly every state.

Many calls are coming in for the Self-Denial envelopes. One good sister writes from New York: "Please find inclosed twenty-five cents for which send me one hundred Self-Denial envelopes. We have no union here, to our shame, but I will distribute the envelopes among the temperance people." Now, here is a splendid example, and who knows but this very effort may result in enlisting the women and securing the organization of a union. Don't confine the distribution of the envelopes to the members of the union who are always giving, but see that one is placed in the hands of every friend of our W. C. T. U.

One of our "shut-in" sisters says: "A voice comes to me in my little corner, from your larger corner in The Union Signal, and always 'at home' it finds me." She sends a post-mortem "gift in memory of a dead union," $1.10. I trust she may be restored so as to come into active work, and then we may look for a resurrection. Holly, Mich., sends $1. Charlotte Lytle, of Lisbon Centre, N. Y., sends fifty cents, while the state treasurer of Minnesota sends $4.53 for Crusade fund, beside an installment of state dues. Philmont, N. Y., also sends $1.

Virginia, California, East Washington, Massachusetts and Illinois have sent dues. We are promised more in September.

Helen M. Barker.

Lennie Dornblaser Morgan, of Trilla, Ill., died June 3, 1894.

Whereas, The death angel has visited our society and plucked from our midst and taken to that city not made by hands, a flower that has shed lasting fragrance in our society and community, and whose labor of love has left indelible prints on our memory that only our death can erase,

Resolved, That we bow humbly and submissively under the chastening rod of Him who doeth all things well.

Resolved, That we extend our heartfelt sympathy to the family in their affliction, and commend them to the Lord, who has promised to comfort those that mourn.

THE LAST REMINDER.

"Last call" for Self-Denial Week and Membership Day! To be sure you will not forget it, make your denial the first day of the week, Saturday, September 22, and if you see a good opportunity, add a little to it each day following.

CROWNING OF THE WEEK.

Membership Day, September 28, appropriately crowns Self-Denial Week. Can we not prove by our results this year that each one of us has influence enough to induce one other to join the society? Has not each of us a relative or friend, an associate in business—a fellow teacher, a schoolmate—somebody whom she can induce to join "just for the asking"? Of course she has.

WHERE TO SEND SELF-DENIAL MONEY.

Each individual white-ribboner or local union should send all self-denial money directly to the treasurer of her country. For instance, white-ribboners in the United States will remit to Mrs. Helen M. Barker, treasurer National W. C. T. U., The Temple, Chicago. White-ribboners in Great Britain will forward to Miss Gorham, Judde Place, Tonbridge, London. The National treasurer will retain one-half of all money received and send the other half to treasurer World's W. C. T. U., Mrs. Ella F. M. Williams, 44 Drummond St., Montreal, Canada.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

Forty thousand veterans were in attendance at the annual reunion of the G. A. R. in Pittsburg, Pa., last week.

Cable dispatches announce. rioting between Mohammedans and Hindoos at Poonah, and that the streets are patroled by soldiers.

The evidence in the case of the United States against Eugene Debs has all been given in, and the arguments of attorneys will commence September 25.

A commission of foreigners, according to a dispatch from Wei-Hai-Wei, China, have declared that the Japanese have been the aggressors in the present war.

Prof. A. B. Hart, of Harvard, has written a public letter of apology to Prof. Richard T. Ely for his support of the recent unwarranted attack upon that gentleman.

A treaty has been signed between Japan and Korea for the purpose of causing the Chinese to evacuate the latter country, the treaty to terminate when peace shall have been declared.

Illinois women have organized for the election of a woman trustee of the state university, and have requested that as women vote only on school questions the election commissioners provide separate facilities for woman's balloting.

THE article in the new tariff law, admitting alcohol for use in the manufactures free of duty is giving Secretary Carlisle considerable trouble, no provision having been made for supervising its enforcement, and without oversight there would be unlimited fraud. The matter will doubtless remain in statu quo until the next session of Congress.

WE are proud of the responses made by our women to the special and official requests that have come to them in this most distressing financial year the world has ever seen. The rallying to the ten-cent thankoffering not only illustrated the faith that white-ribboners have in their leader, but was a wonderful help to the National W. C. T. U. in its time of dire need. If the same hearty response is made to Miss Willard's call for one new subscriber to THE UNION SIGNAL, the vim and influence necessary to bring this about will build up the National organ, and also increase the knowledge and zeal of the workers.

"ONE good deed" not only "deserves" but usually inspires "another." Witness an extract from a letter accompanying the name of a new subscriber. "I am glad to send you another subscription in response to our Chieftain's call, and, at the same time, send a birthday gift to my sister. It would be a good idea if all your present subscribers could be induced to do this. By the way, I mentioned to my mother what I intended to do, and she asks me to inclose another dollar for her, so that THE UNION SIGNAL may go to another friend for a year." Every time THE UNION SIGNAL goes into a new home, a new friend is won for the W. C. T. U. Do the local unions realize this?

WE should be slow to admit that there is more solidarity in the Salvation Army movement with its military discipline than in the W. C. T. U.; but for some reason we do not rally to the call for the Self-Denial Fund as the Salvationists do, and there must be some reason why. There are those who would say that we call too frequently upon our comrades for specific help; but surely we do not do this as often as the Salvationists. It cannot be that they are more devoted; indeed, as we think it over we are inclined to the opinion that it is their military drill that makes the difference. The fact is that when "the General" sends out an order it is a finality; but the entire trend of the W. C. T. U. is toward free individual action, and we believe this is the highest evolution. Can we not prove by our results this year that each one of us has influence enough to induce one other to join the society? Has not each of us a relative or friend, an associate in business—a fellow teacher, a schoolmate—somebody whom she can induce to join "just for the asking"? If this is done the problem is solved.

THE wife of a famous American divine writes asking, "Why cannot a chair or lectureship of reform be established in theological seminaries?" The powers of the human mind to resist knowledge are amazing, and the ignorance of reform movement in some seminary minds is an equal wonder to those out of the rut. It is told that a young minister recently gave a notice from his pulpit of Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt after this fashion: "Mrs. M. C. Leavitt, who has been, I believe, eight times around the world, will speak to the Sabbath-school children next Sunday noon on missions. Any of the congregation who choose to remain can do so." ! ! ! Some bright W. C. T. U. woman rescued the situation and Mrs. Leavitt the next Sunday evening by a properly arranged and fully attended service in which she appealed equally for temperance and missions. But some persons are anxiously asking yet who shall rescue the young "theologues" from the dangers of such errors—and the foregoing seems a good suggestion in the education of those embryo reformers, as every minister must be in degree.

"I HAVE seen no slogan, no such battering-ram of a speech as that of John G. Woolley, published in THE UNION SIGNAL of September 13. It is irresistible, tremendous, weighty. He is a trumpet whose tones mingle persuasion, tears, appeal, judgment. He is a lance, so keen and sharp as to cut beneath the very sophistries of the most wily, subtle and pious Pharisees. The fissures in the shiny, wave-worn rock of the old parties are exposed, the sandy foundations pointed out and the irresistible ruin foretold. May God's hand of Providence carry that speech into other ranks than Methodist and bless it to the finding of the church conscience." Thus writes our eloquent Dr. Delano, whose own speech is often a flame of fire on the question of high-license Christians.

OUR National officers are securing their "one new subscriber" to THE UNION SIGNAL without delay. Mrs. Woodbridge has handed in five names obtained at the South Dakota convention, which she attended last week. Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, National recording secretary, has sent her new name, with the now famous motto, "It's dogged as does it." Mrs. Barker has gone to speak at the state conventions of Maine, Rhode Island and Massachusetts, also county convention in Pennsylvania, and we confidently expect a large list from her before long. Mrs. Hoffman, assistant recording secretary, is so busy in the lecture field and in Eastern state conventions that she may not yet have seen Miss Willard's special call, but as soon as she does we know there will be cheering returns from her individual efforts. With all five of our National officers self-constituted agents, and the rank and file bringing in their sheaves, THE UNION SIGNAL will surely more than double its circulation.

"BRECKINRIDGE beaten," "Women's power in politics," "Honor of the district vindicated," are some of the headlines which announce the glad tidings of the more than deserved defeat of the dishonored silver-tongued candidate for Congress from the Ashland district of Kentucky. It is conceded on all sides that this was a "woman's war," and that "nothing but a woman's war could have awakened such widespread and self-sacrificing opposition to the former idol of Kentucky"—Colonel Breckinridge. It is notable that the very women who led this opposition belonged to Kentucky's oldest and most aristocratic families, which have formerly enjoyed good-fellowship with the Breckinridges. Nothing could demonstrate more positively the fact that good women will discount everything else before they will discount morality. "A white life for two" is not a meaningless phrase with us, as politicians are beginning to learn. The women of the Blue Grass state have heralded the dawn of purer politics and woman's suffrage as well.

DISPATCHES say that forty Populist women escorted Governor Waite to the platform on the occasion of his recent renomination as governor of Colorado. It is the occupation of rival parties to paint the candidates of new parties with tar. Hence we do not feel that we know what kind of man this sturdy Westerner may be. We have never read a line in the old party papers that did not "breathe forth threatening and slaughter" concerning Colorado's present governor. But for all this we are glad that a woman was the secretary of the convention that nominated him, and that women had a hand in his presentation to his constituency; for we could never for the life of us see why the diversified charm of men and women working together in every line of life should not be presented in political conventions as well as at church socials or county fairs, and so we say without reference to platform or candidates, Hurrah for Colorado women and the strong men who have put them side by side with themselves in the great pageants as well as the steady, hard work of the Rocky Mountain commonwealth!

MEMORIALS: PHARAOH'S AND MARY'S.

BY JOEL SWARTZ, D. D.

Between the Desert and the Nile,
The pyramid of Cheops stands,
A dateless, gloomy, mystic pile,
Built by some tyrant Pharaoh's hands.

Here ancient Egypt mummified,
Sits like a queen upon her throne,
In stolid and perpetual pride,
Herself a hieroglyph in stone.

While in old Cheop's stony heart
The master builder's bones are laid,
In solitary gloom apart
As if of all mankind afraid.

And well might conscience wake his fears,
For Cheop's self a witness stands
That slaves shed here unpitied tears,
And wrought with unrequited hands.

So every monumental pile,
Built by oppression for a name,
Stands like the stone heaps of the Nile—
A witness to the builder's shame.

I'd rather have the monument
Of Mary's precious spikenard poured
With her unbounded love's intent
Upon the body of her Lord:

To spread forever with His name,
Which gives it all its praise and worth,
And breathe a fragrant, vital flame
Around this cold and selfish earth,

Than have all monuments beside,
Of brass or gold or hills of stone,
Reared to man's prowess or his pride,
Inscribed with his poor name alone.

Old Pharaoh and his myriad slaves,—
He in his prison house of stone,
They in their drifting, sandy graves,—
Sleep both forgotten and unknown.

While Mary with her living Lord
Holds her sweet place, still as of old,
And shall, long as His gracious word
Around the glad earth shall be told.

THE MALTA HARVEST HOME.

BY ELIZABETH CUMINGS.

In spite of herself Eunice Todd could not keep the tears from her eyes. After ten weeks at "The River," as the people of western New York affectionately call the St. Lawrence, Malta looked more dilapidated and frowsy than ever. There was not much of it save one long street, but as the girl looked about, and noted the broken plank walks, the many hanging shutters and broken windows, and that the little spire on the brick meeting-house had plunged off into the forest of pigweeds and mullens which filled the church lot, she was glad the place was no larger. Grandma Todd's cottage was one of the notable exceptions to the prevailing neglect. Everything was trig about it from the neat, white fence to the hen-house, and the very dahlias, looking at the front yard with prim sweetness, seemed patterns of respectability. Some of the neighboring women said: "Old Mis' Todd 'd have things different ef there was a man to tend to 'em," and it was probable, for most of the men in Malta spent their money and energy at 'Lonzo Snell's grocery. Grandpa Todd had died in his early thirties, and grandma, in the years that had elapsed, had come to believe he had been perfect. She believed, too, that her only son, David, the father of Eunice, had been perfect.

But she had a small opinion of the Markhams, Eunice's mother's family, though they had once been the family of the county, and when her liver was torpid, and it was cold and damp, or the chimney became clogged, the old lady resented the girl's brown eyes, and often accused her of being "just like the Markhams" in her mental characteristics as well as in her coloring. The objectionable 'Lonzo Snell had had a Markham for a grandmother, and as he drank a good deal of the whisky which he so freely sold as "wet groceries" to Eunice's Markham cousins, Grandma Todd had no excuses for him as for Eben Barstow who kept a regular saloon at Malta Center, and knew how to hoard up his profits.

It was September, and the elms were sending down showers of golden leaves. Eunice was shelling dry beans. Nothing went to waste on the Todd place. Grandma never picked even one nasturtium. She wanted the seed pods for her pickles, which sold for a good price at the Center. The bean pods were to be saved as well as the beans. "I don't jess know where they'll be needed, but they'll be handy," grandma had declared, after climbing into the old rockaway buggy and turning the horse toward Malta Weir. "I've never found that what I have frets me; only what I haven't."

Eunice, intent upon her memories, noted not the young man coming along the roadside. She had been a dining-room girl, and worked early and late those ten weeks for the thirty dollars she had brought home. The Jackson House had been very quiet in a way, for it was a resort much frequented by families and invalids, but to Eunice it had been exciting. The new faces, the surprising, indefinable something which set the visitors in groups, regardless of clothes and the value of their ornaments, the music, the gentle speech and manners of the majority had united to bring her near the strange, great world which she had known stretched on and on beyond Malta and had thought of with mingled longing and fear. To the new feelings roused in her Malta seemed stifling, and there came upon her a burning impatience and desire to escape, when across the hedge behind her came a pleasant baritone voice, saying, "Awfully glad to see you home, Eunice." The face was pleasant that looked over the privet, save for the irritable line between the eyes and a certain hardness of the lips.

"Well, I'm not awful glad to be here," said the girl, and she glanced down the wide street. "Of all the places! You can't think, Sam, what it is after these weeks at Jackson's and 'the River,' to be where nothing happens."

"If you were at our house you wouldn't complain of a lack of events." The line in Sam Markham's brow stood out plain now. "If it wasn't for mother I'd leave here in just five minutes, but as I've got to stay it seems to me sometimes I must go and pitch 'Lonzo Snell and his devilish grog-shop into the pond."

"I wouldn't swear, Sam," said Eunice, who liked to reprove her cousins.

"Swear! I haven't sworn. There aren't words to tell how I feel about father and the rest of the wretches here that hang about Snell's. So long as you can't do anything you'd better not lecture," and Sam turned on his heel.

"Oh, Sam!" called the girl.

"Well," the young man halted.

"Do you s'pose I could do anything?"

"No," he retorted harshly. "Nothing'll do any good here but an earthquake."

Eunice watched the tall figure disappear down a side street and as her eyes wandered to the distant horizon shut in by a heavenly line of blue, it suddenly dawned upon her she was gazing at a lovely picture. Turning toward the north she saw a yet fairer landscape of wooded hills and gleaming water. There were great possibilities in Malta's one long, wide, linden-shaded street she then discovered. If it were cleaned up and the trees trimmed, if the old Markham homestead, once the pride of the village, were put in good shape and the meeting-house repaired, and the weeds surrounding it were replaced by velvety grass, it would be as pretty a view as one could ask for from the Todd veranda.

"Grandma, do you suppose anything can be done by anybody to make this town different?" she asked of the stately old woman who had appeared in the doorway.

"This town is made by the folks in it," said Grandma Todd grimly. "I s'pose it's as the majority of 'em like it."

All that day and far into the night Eunice was tormented by the question whether after all there was not something that could be done to awaken public spirit, and the next morning she went to see Mother Dyche, who lived at the end of the main street and whose reputation in sickness was unrivaled. It was whispered that Mother Dyche could, if so minded, tell fortunes, and as she openly advocated the ballot for women she was held to be a dangerous female by conservative well people.

Luckily, Mother Dyche was at home drying herbs. Her little kitchen was as clean as hands could make it, and formed a quaint and suitable frame to her small figure.

"Well, if you want Malta to set about improvements you'll have to dig down deep," she said, when Eunice had poured out her disgust and dissatisfaction. "Puttin' chloride o' lime in the kitchen sink and new curtains in the parlor ain't goin' to make a house healthy when there's something dead in the cellar. Then again, a man don't have ambition to fix up outside when he's sick inside, bilious or goin' with consumption."

"But we'll have to set them thinking first, these Malta people. We could have a meeting or—better, a festival, if it were strawberry time—and talk it over. But now there's no particular reason. We cannot invite them to anything. There'll have to be something to coax them out."

Mother Dyche's big Boston rocker swayed energetically for a second. "There's been an abundant harvest and every barn is full," she said as if to herself. "The church could be trimmed and Sam Markham can sing beautiful, and perhaps the minister would talk. The 28th is Miss Willard's birthday, so perhaps the Jaycox sisters will come over from the Center to sing. And the 28th is your birthday, Eunice, and you can't begin younger to find out that the best things in a year are what you can do for others. Of course, what you have in mind's a job, a terrific job."

"I suppose most things are, that are worth doing," said the girl.

"Yes, but they grow easier once you've tackled 'em," declared Mother Dyche.

Eunice, however, met only discouragement in her preparation for the Harvest Home festival. Grandma Todd assured her it was certain to rain. More than one old lady when asked to bake a cake exasperated the girl into hotly explaining that she had no private and selfish end to gain, and the farmers gave only tentative promises to bring material to trim the old church.

But at the last moment all Malta felt a sudden interest in the doings at the church. If Grandma Todd disapproved of the Markhams, they, on their side, disapproved of the Todds as a grasping, second-class sort of folk with no traditions of gentle blood behind them. The result was a great turn-out, and the old church was crowded.

Even deaf old Colonel Canby was stirred up. The singing and speech-making had been somewhat wide of the mark, but he had not heard it. He knew well enough who had brought about the festival, and as he was the only being besides Eunice who had both Todd and Markham blood in his veins he volunteered some remarks: "Friends and neighbors," he said, pounding so hard with his cane on the platform that some over-ripe leaves fluttered down, "we mustn't have simply a good time and forget the nit of this occasion. Somebody's told me this is Miss Willard's birthday—bless her!"—there was great applause at this point, "but what interests me the most is that it is also the birthday of my grandniece, and she planned this evening and all these decorations to bring our blessings to our minds—which, no doubt, we've took as our plain deservings, but which ain't so, by no means—with the intention of impressin' us with the fact we owe something back. And I'm not so sure that to fix up our town, cut the weeds from this lot and the burdocks from afore our doors—and—and—I may as well say it, root out temptation from our midst in the way of drinks, will be workin for the Lord. Looks to me like workin' for ourselves and what will bring money into our pockets. 'Pears to me we might make Malta handsome if one spry, good girl can get up such good times."

The colonel sat down amidst a great clapping of hands, and the very next morning a change began in Malta that later resulted in 'Lonzo Snell's selling out his "wet grocery" stock. Temptation gone, John Markham, Sam's father, reformed, and one morning he thanked his niece for keeping her birthday for the benefit of the village.

"It was Miss Willard's birthday," explained Eunice flushing. "It was an accident, mine coming the 28th."

"There are no accidents, child," said the old man shaking his head. "See what's been done," and he pointed a shaking finger up and down the pretty street. "But it's a good thing to keep her birthday for all good women's birthdays. It's kind of awful when you come to think of it, what just one woman can effect."

AMERICANISM IN FINANCE.
II.

BY LUCINDA B. CHANDLER.

Americanism in finance should be first, such a currency as would be most convenient for all the people, and in sufficient volume to serve the needs of enterprise and to exchange its products. Also it should be such money as the constitution provides for. This is a money issued by and only by the government. State bank or national bank issues of currency are unconstitutional. There is no provision by which Congress can relegate its authority to "coin money and regulate the value thereof," to any other agency.

Unless the banker should be given an advantage or benefit by issuing his notes as currency, he would not seek the privilege. This advantage or benefit given to a class is contrary to the American principle of equal opportunity for all. A uniform and stable currency is essential to the general welfare and the equal opportunity of all the people. Money issued only by the government, a currency that can circulate everywhere, furnished by the government on equal terms to all the people, would meet this requirement most perfectly.

The normal business of the bank in localities, and the issuing of currency to all the people of the country are widely different functions.

In order that all the people shall have equal opportunity to enjoy the fruits of enterprise and industry, it is necessary there should be provided a sufficient volume of currency available everywhere and at all times to do the business that will employ all who are to be subsisted.

What the banker, broker and money dealer want is to keep the volume of cash currency so small as to compel the enterpriser to seek credit loans and pay him a profit on these. What the people need is a bona fide money sufficient to exchange the products of labor. An increase of production will then enable the laborer to increase his consumption of the products of labor which will promote the general welfare.

Since 1862 a system of banking and finance has been adopted in this country that involves two un-American ideas—a perpetual funded debt, and the concentration of the accumulative power of money in the hands of the holders of untaxable and interest-bearing bonds and credit dealers. Within the past thirty years the people of this country have paid $2,500,000,000 interest on a debt of $3,000,000,000; and fully $600,000,000 of that debt is yet unpaid.

In 1866 a contraction of over $395,815,000 of various forms of government indebtedness which had been used as money, was effected by funding them into interest-bearing bonds; also the retirement of $42,830,000 legal tender notes. In 1862 Mr. Horton, of Ohio, said of the passage of the legal tender bill: "If this bill passes, and I hope it will not, this will be a point from which we shall date a new financial system for these United States."

The prediction was correct, and our country is, in this year 1894, coming to reap the full results of the adopting of the English system of finance. Steadily, persistently, the money-dealing class has worked to control the wealth producing class, the laborer. How well this power has succeeded the present industrial paralysis proves. The people have begun to understand the policy.

The policy of concentrating the power of money to control the producing factors of enterprise and industry in the hands of money dealers, began in the exigencies of the late war. In 1862 the following circular was issued by an agent of London capitalists to the New York capitalists, called

THE HAZZARD CIRCULAR.

Slavery is likely to be abolished by the war power, and chattel slavery destroyed. This, I and my European friends are in favor of, for slavery is but the owning of labor and carries with it the care for the laborer, while the European plan, led on by England, is for capital to control labor by controlling the wages. THIS CAN BE DONE BY CONTROLLING THE MONEY. The great debt that capitalists will see to it is made out of the war, must be used as a means to control the volume of money. To accomplish this the bonds must be used as a banking basis. We are now waiting for the Secretary of the Treasury to make the recommendation to Congress. It will not do to allow the greenback, as it is called, to circulate as money any length of time, as we cannot control that.

Abraham Lincoln, near the close of the war, made the following prediction in a letter to a friend: "Yes, we may all congratulate ourselves that the cruel war is nearing its close. . . It has been a trying hour for the republic; but I see in the near future a crisis approaching that unnerves me, and causes me to tremble for the safety of my country. As a result of the war corporations have been enthroned and an era of corruption in high places will follow, and the money power of the country will attempt to prolong its reign by working on the prejudices of the people until all the wealth is aggregated in a few hands and the republic destroyed. I feel at this moment more anxiety for the safety of my country than ever before, even in the midst of the war. God grant that my suspicions may be groundless."

Never in recorded history has a forecast been more correct than this of the martyred President. The attempt of the money power to prolong its reign by "retiring one-third of circulation and calling in one-half the loans"—as ordered March 12, 1893—and claiming that silver, silver certificates and treasury notes must be retired, etc., was expressly to prolong the reign of the power of national banks, by obtaining a new issue of bonds. This, as the Hazzard circular stated, is the "European plan." It is utterly in opposition to Americanism.

The paralyzed industries of our country and the army of enforced and suffering idle men are a standing testimony to the shameful truckling of Congress to the money power. In a bankers' circular issued in the early seventies is the following statement:

"To repeal the law creating national bank notes, or to restore to circulation the government issue of money, will be to provide the people with money, and will therefore seriously affect your individual profit as bankers and lenders!"

Is this Americanism in finance? To "control the volume of money," in order to "control the wages by capital" is a method of enslaving the laborer far more inhuman than was chattel slavery, because it leaves the subject of this vicious system to want and destitution, hunger and eviction. The power of a class of money lenders and legislators to make money dear and the products of labor cheap, is a less honorable system of robbery than that of the highwayman, and its results far more disastrous to the commonwealth.

SOME OF OUR WOMEN.*

III.

"The Prisoners' Friend."

Mrs. Susan Hammond Barney, prison evangelist of the National W. C. T. U., and superintendent of the department of work among prisoners in the World's W. C. T. U.

BY FRANCES E. WILLARD.

"Our Mrs. Barney" has a nature so sympathetic that one feels almost as well acquainted with her at first sight as after many days. No woman could be better adapted to the difficult department that is the joy of this loving and sisterly life. Mrs. Barney is the daughter of a physician, and like so many other good women was born in Massachusetts. She married J. K. Barney, a business man of Providence, R. I., and has ever since resided in that city with the exception of a few years on the Pacific coast. Children and grandchildren gladden her home, which is to her the dearest spot on earth. From her earliest remembrance she has been interested in the work of foreign missions, and earned her first dollar for the cause when only four years old by denying herself a luxury for one whole year. She had an eager desire to labor in foreign fields, but on account of failing health and the opposition of friends, abandoned this purpose, and became a helpful worker in the field at home.

More than twenty years ago when the Women's Foreign Missionary Society of the Methodist church was organized she began her public work on behalf of that society, and while thus engaged became deeply interested in the work among prisoners and helped to form the Prisoners' Aid Society of her own state. At the third annual meeting of the state W. C. T. U. of Rhode Island, Mrs. Barney was elected president, and filled the office with exceptional ability for eight years, resigning it only because the growth of her National department of work demanded all her time and energy. She has labored unceasingly for the advancement of the great work assigned her by the World's W. C. T. U., traveling from city to city in the United States and Canada, and has also visited England, winning all her hearers by her womanly eloquence, and brightening the dark cells of thousands of prisoners. Mrs. Barney's work for the appointment of police matrons in our cities has been abundant and successful. She is a ready writer, and has been from her teens. Bible readings, leaflets, tracts, etc., "The Glad Tidings Calendar," have gone out from Headquarters to all parts of the world. On the lecture platform she always speaks extempore, and her rare fund of incidents, her deep pathos, interspersed with flashes of wit, never fail to instruct and delight her audiences.

Mrs. Barney often holds evangelistic meetings in the cities of the United States and Canada, and is a leading member of the International Conference of Christian workers. She was long ago invited to be one of our "round-the-world missionaries," and would have gone forth on that embassy more widely, but for the long illness of her son, to whom in his invalid condition she has been for years devoted. Mrs. Barney likes best of all to be known as the "prisoners' friend," and as an evangelist of the New Testament. The hidings of her power are an ardent faith resulting in a deep religious experience. Her motto is "Not willing that any should perish." Perhaps no one has given a more inspiring definition of the meaning of our white ribbon badge. It has been accepted by the guild the wide world over, and we reproduce it here:

1. Purity, personal purity, and this includes purity of thought, word and deed. This is deep and searching, and has for its incentive, "The pure in heart shall see God."

2. It should mean consecration, not to temperance work only, but to Christ and His service. Thus brought into harmony with His will, we shall not seek to pick out our work, or ask what will be said or thought if I do this or that, or look at seeming discouragements, but cheerfully "go forward," "In His Name," and for "His sake."

3. It should mean helpfulness to every one who needs our help, high or low, rich or poor. I love to think my white ribbon pledges me to help as far as I can, all who need me.

4. It should mean loyalty,—to Christ, to our great, grand organization, in its work, local, state and national, and to each other.

All this seems enough for one little bow of ribbon to mean: Purity, consecration, helpfulness and loyalty. God help us to be true to it.

Eagle's Nest, N. Y.

*Mrs. Barney, by recent acceptance of the invitation extended to her by Lady Henry Somerset, will visit England in October.

DR. BUCKLEY ON EQUAL SUFFRAGE.

III.

BY ALICE STONE BLACKWELL.

Under the head of "Notable Reversals of Opinion," Dr. Buckley declares that "some of the greatest of men" have changed their minds about woman suffrage after having favored it. He cites Horace Bushnell, Goldwin Smith, Bishop Vincent, Bright, Spencer and Gladstone. The first three cannot by any stretch of imagination be classed among "the greatest of men." Moreover, Horace Bushnell and Mr. Gladstone never believed in woman suffrage, and therefore cannot properly be quoted as instances of reversed opinion.

In the case of the few really great men cited by Dr. Buckley, their names would have carried more weight on this question if they had not given their reasons. John Bright, for instance, publicly declared that one thing which had a great influence in turning him against woman suffrage was the action of his countrywomen in protesting against the English laws licensing prostitution. He regarded it as inexpressibly shocking that women should say anything in public on such a subject. It was probably to this that Mr. Bright referred in the passage quoted by Dr. Buckley, about the evil results to women of "entering hotly into political conflict and discussion." The protest against the evil laws in question was made by Josephine Butler, Florence Nightingale and the best women of England. The fact that an exclusively masculine parliament could pass such laws, and, in spite of constant protest from women, could keep them on the statute books for seventeen years, until their sanitary inefficacy had become as plain as their moral iniquity, would seem to many of us a strong proof of the need that women should be represented in government. Mr. Bright in his old age receded from many of the liberal opinions of his earlier years, not only upon suffrage but upon other questions. It may be added that he was never able to bring over his nearest women relatives to his view of woman suffrage. His daughter, Mrs. Bright Clark, gives woman suffrage lectures, and his sisters, Mrs. Lucas and Mrs. McLaren, have been as active in the suffrage movement in England as Mrs. Livermore and Mrs. Julia Ward Howe in this country. On a subject so closely concerning women, the opinion of the women of the Bright family may be worth as much as that of Mr. Bright himself.

Herbert Spencer, like John Bright, has gone back in his latter years upon many of the liberal opinions of his youth. Within a few weeks, he has declared in a published letter that government by general male suffrage must necessarily be a failure, and that the inevitable destiny of the United States is to become a military despotism of the sternest kind. If Dr. Buckley calls in Herbert Spencer as a witness, he ought to take his whole testimony, and condemn manhood suffrage as well as woman suffrage. It is likely that posterity will give more weight to the opinions of Bright and Spencer in their prime than to those of their pessimistic later years.

Goldwin Smith says it has been a great misfortune for the United States that they ever became independent of England; so Americans will hardly regard his political judgment as of great value.

In Mr. Gladstone, however, Dr. Buckley quotes a really eminent authority. Mr. Gladstone fears that suffrage would impair women's delicacy and endanger the home. But mere voting, as Dr. Buckley says, is not likely to cause these results; it is not the voting, but the participation in "political work and excitement." But Mr. Gladstone heartily approves of the participation of women in political work and excitement. Mrs. Gladstone for years was president, with her husband's full approval, of the Women's Liberal Federation, an association of many thousand women organized on purpose to do political work for the Liberal party. For years these women have been speaking in public, holding public meetings, distributing campaign literature, canvassing, electioneering—doing every kind of "political work" except the quiet, simple voting which, in itself, as even Dr. Buckley admits, is nothing objectionable. If women can do all this much more arduous and conspicuous public work without hurting their delicacy—and Mr. Gladstone apparently thinks they can, since he encourages them to do it—he need not have much fear of the vote.

In the case of Mr. Gladstone, Goldwin Smith and Herbert Spencer, it is to be noted that they none of them object to woman suffrage so far as they have seen it in practical operation. In England, ever since 1869, single women and widows have had municipal suffrage on the same terms as men. Mr. Gladstone says that they have exercised it "without detriment, and with great advantage." They have municipal suffrage in Canada, and Goldwin Smith says it is all well enough for women to exercise these "non-political franchises." But it would be hard to convince the opponents of equal rights in this country that municipal suffrage is not a political franchise. Herbert Spencer likewise sanctions municipal suffrage. He objects to parliamentary suffrage for women, partly, as Dr. Buckley says, because of "mental and emotional differences between the sexes," but principally because government rests upon force, and women do not fight. But municipal government rests upon force as well as national government; and whatever mental and emotional characteristics would disqualify women for the one would disqualify them for the other. The only reason for making this "distinction without a difference" is that Mr. Gladstone and Mr. Spencer live in a country where women have exercised municipal suffrage for a quarter of a century, and where none of the predicted ill consequences have arisen.

Dr. Buckley makes much of the fact that two men who voted for John Stuart Mill's bill in 1867 have changed their minds. But he omits to mention that whereas the bill in 1867 received a mere handful of votes, the full suffrage bill, when it last came up in Parliament, was defeated by a majority of only twenty-three votes in a total of three hundred and twenty-seven, and this in spite of the most strenuous opposition of the party leaders on both sides. In this country also, where forty years ago woman suffrage was only an object of ridicule, it has grown to a movement of formidable proportions, which the Conservatives are rallying their utmost strength to resist. Compare the votes in the legislatures a generation ago—in the rare cases where the question even reached a vote—with the close legislative votes of recent years. Abraham Lincoln used to say, "Everybody is wiser than anybody." The marked general change of opinion, both in England and in this country, is more significant than the backsliding of two or three eminent men, especially as a much larger number of eminent men have come over to our side during the same time.

Reversals of opinion due to practical observation of equal suffrage are worth more than reversals of opinion due to theoretical reasonings, or to the conservatism of advancing years. A few such cases of conversion by experience may be of interest here. Hon. N. L. Andrews, speaker of the house of representatives of Wyoming (Democrat), said, in 1879:

"I came to this territory in the fall of 1871, with the strongest prejudice possible against woman suffrage, and decidedly opposed to it in all its features. Yet, willing to be fair and candid on the subject, I became a close observer of its practical results. I have for three successive sessions been honored by an election to the legislature of the territory and twice as speaker of the house of representatives, and my opportunities for seeing and judging of this matter have not been circumscribed; and I can now say that the more I have seen of it the less my objections have been realized, and the more it has commended itself to my judgment and good opinion. And now I frankly acknowledge that under all my observations it has worked well, and been productive of much good in our territory, and no evil that I have been able to discern. The only wonder to me is why the states of the Union have not adopted it long ago. The women use the ballot with more independence and discrimination in regard to the qualifications of candidates than men do. If the ballot in the hand of woman compels political parties to place their best men in nomination, this, in and of itself, is a sufficient reason for sustaining woman suffrage."

Judge Brown, of Laramie, Wyoming, said in a letter to Mrs. E. H. Wilson, of Bismarck, N. D.: "My prejudices were formerly all against woman suffrage, but they have gradually given way since it became an established fact in Wyoming. My observation, extending over a period of fifteen years, satisfies me of its entire justice and propriety. Impartial observation has also satisfied me that in the use of the ballot women exercise fully as good judgment as men, and in some particulars are more discriminating, as, for instance, on questions of morals."

The people of Wyoming, after twenty years' experience, incorporated woman suffrage in the constitution when their territory came into the Union as a state, thus showing that Judge Kingman's opinion as to the popularity of the law in his state was correct.

Dr. Buckley quotes Bishop Vincent as his last instance of "reversal of opinion," and interpolates in a foot-note an elaborate argument by the Bishop against equal rights. The points in this will be taken up next week.

SCIENCE OF INEBRIETY.

BY NORMAN KERR, M. D.

[Dr. Norman Kerr, of London, after a life-long study of inebriety, has put forth a volume on this subject covering over seven hundred pages. The reputation of Dr. Kerr is such that anything from his pen is sure to receive the attention of temperance workers in all parts of the world. He is at the head of the movement to establish industrial homes to which confirmed "alcoholites" (to use his own ingenious term) will be consigned by magistrates instead of remanding them to jail, where they will receive no special care and cannot be self-supporting during their stay. Dr. Kerr's book on inebriety is so comprehensive and conclusive that we make copious excerpts. The doctor coins a new word and one that strikes us as highly appropriate, namely, "alcoholite" and applies it to those who are under the bondage to the worst of brain poisons. We bespeak for the book a wide reading and suggest that those who read these extracts through would have the wisdom of furnishing to their local editors quotations from the same, as follows:—EDS.]

"Till these last few years drunkenness has generally been regarded but as an act of folly, a sin, a vice or a crime. The finger of scorn has been pointed at the sot as an object of ridicule and contempt. The drunkard has been stigmatized as a good-for-nothing scapegrace who loves excess for its own sake, who lives but to gratify his vitiated tastes, who from his inherent depravity knowingly and unblushingly prefers vice to virtue, intoxication to sobriety. The theologian denounces the intemperate one as willingly guilty of heinous sin. The judge punishes the riotous drunkard as a criminal offender. Whatever his inherited tendencies, whatever his original weakness of will, whatever his inborn deficiency of moral control, whatever his natural susceptibility to the narcotic influence of intoxicating agents, contumely and reproach, pains and penalties have been the only means which have generally been employed in the treatment of the subjects of alcoholic or opiate indulgence.

"Has this treatment of the inebriate been judicious? Is the inebriate but a fool? Is he but a wanton and wicked sinner? Is he but a headstrong and hardened criminal? Are all his outbreaks of intemperate drinking but the fruit of an evil and perverse disposition?

"Emphatically does science answer, 'No,' and plainly does common sense echo the denial. Men and women of the highest culture, the purest life, the most exalted aims have become reckless drunkards. The clearest minds, the keenest intellects, the most acute reasoners have been subdued by alcohol. The warmest hearts, the kindest souls, the most unselfish spirits, have been transformed under the syren influence of 'the tricksy spirit' into the coldest, most unkind and most selfish votaries at the shrine of Bacchus.

"Why have these, and a great company of such, fallen so low? Not from a desire to fall, not from wicked and vain imaginings, not from a determination to become drunken, not from any innate love of the inebriating agent, but from want of power to resist the overwhelming weight of a well-nigh irresistible impulse within them, which, especially when awakened to action on the contact of a narcotic with the nervous system, hurled them away, in spite of their vain efforts at escape, in a whirlwind of excessive indulgence.

"Is drunkenness never the effect of disease? How any one who has witnessed the career of a confirmed drunkard ever had any doubt on the subject is beyond my comprehension. Yet some deny that intemperance is ever a disease, or the effect of disease, and insist that it is only a moral vice.

. . . . . .

"So much alike are the symptoms of some forms of inebriety to some forms of insanity that many alienist authorities, with Hutcheson, of Glasgow, nearly fifty years ago, regard inebriety as a form of mania, a brain and mind unsoundness, rendering the victim irresponsible for his acts done in paroxysm. Carpenter calls inebriety one form of insanity. In Belgium the law acknowledges an irresistible, uncontrollable impulse to drink to excess as a form of insanity, and legislates for it accordingly by the involuntary committal of the narcomaniac to an asylum on the production of medical testimony. Anstie speaks of inebriety as really more a variety of constitutional insanity than of alcoholic disease. The ungovernable impulse to drunkenness certainly bears an exceedingly close resemblance to, and is practically not distinguishable from, the other ungovernable impulses of many of the insane.

"The relations between inebriety and insanity are so close that in watching the varied phases of the former the expert is constantly reminded of the latter. The closeness of this connection must have been observed by the ancients, for one of the meanings of the Sanskrit verb mad was 'to get drunk,' and the Sanskrit noun madc denoted (1) intoxication, (2) insanity.

"An act of intoxication is usually an epitome of the chronicle of insanity, an inebriate panorama whereon successive phases of mental unsoundness are depicted in an incredibly short time. The drunken paroxysm may be regarded as a series of dissolving views, each representing insane phenomena following one another in rapid sequence. In the person of the drunken may be witnessed a bird's-eye view of the entire course of gradually developed lunacy. Intoxication is a rapid representation of insane acts and scenes.

"It has been my painful duty to attend not a few females who have been solitary and secret inebriates. One lady, aged fifty, had been at once an habitual drunkard and a Christian worker for twelve years. There was a history of maternal inebriate heredity. She was of a phlegmatic temperament. After dinner every evening she drank to excess, fermented wine and brandy being the usual beverages. After sleeping the sleep of the drunken she refreshed herself in the morning with a bath, partook of a late breakfast and sallied out on her round of religious work among the poor. She thus led two separate lives, each occupying about one-half of her existence. During the forenoon and afternoon she was an earnest and indefatigable district visitor, as considerate and liberal a philanthropist as I have ever known. During the evening and through the night she was a drunkard. What saved her reputation was the fact that she was never out after dinner, but went straight to bed. Had she ventured into the fresh air and appeared upon the street her gait would have been still more unsteady, her speech thicker and her thoughts more confused, though these symptoms were well known to her domestics.

"Let me give another female case. She was a strong-minded, energetic woman, aged sixty-nine, active in body and highly intellectual in her tastes and studies. She was the widow of a medical man, and was the possessor of ample means. She never had a child, but a relative resided with her as companion. She partook of but one glass of port at dinner. At the conclusion of that meal she retired to her room, and did not appear until the following noon. She always declared that she was most abstemious, but regularly every night she was drunk, drinking a pint and a half of brandy. This was not discovered till, on an alarm causing her to turn out very late one night, her condition was apparent.

"One influence it has on the morals, which stands out preëminent. One of the most distinctive features of habitual and periodic inebriety is an utter disregard for truth on the part of many inebriates. Females lose the sense of truth even more completely than do males. Seen in the very act of laying down the just emptied glass, lady patients have coolly and solemnly denied to me that they had partaken of the contents. The perception of truth seems to be destroyed by alcoholic indulgence; the consciousness of truth seems lost in the devotee of Bacchus. Even when temporarily sober the brain may be so dominated by the alcoholic obliquity to truth that no reliance can be placed on any statement made by the man or woman whose sole being has, as it were, been steeped in alcohol. Not that the falsehood is necessarily intentional. Even in the lying denial on a valid accusation of drunkenness, the mendacity is really but an excuse or falsehood of defense. There is an alcoholic paralysis of the perceptive faculties, whereby the inebriate is unable to perceive or understand the real truth. There is, in short, a mental palsy. In some cases, however, the toxic influence of the inebriant, especially if alcoholic, perverts the moral sense and develops a veritable narcomaniac mendacity. Alcohol may well be called 'The Mother of Lies,' as it is probably the origin of more untruths, even in formerly truthful persons, than any other fountain of falsehood.

"This observation applies to opium, chloral, chloroform and other inebriants, but aggravated as I have seen the falsehood and cunning engendered of these forms of inebriety, the untruthfulness has never been so marked as under the influence of alcohol, alone or combined with other intoxicants."

SOCIAL reform is not to be secured by noise and shouting; by complaints and denunciation; by the formation of parties, or the making of revolutions; but by the awakening of thought and the progress of ideas. OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Are you not wanting to hear from the white-ribboners at the national capitol? You shall do so.

The long-extended term of the fifty-third Congress has at last adjourned. Myriads of volumes of tariff talk have been uttered, and other volumes have gone to increase the size and alleged value of the Congressional Record, because Congress was too tired to hear the reading and gave "permission to print" instead.

The weary weeks consumed by tariff legislation left small space for the consideration of temperance measures. On one of the closing days of the term one member of the House did propose that the sale of liquors in the House restaurant be suspended during the recess of Congress; and another declared he wished it might be prohibited forever! but the motion was quickly disposed of by being "lost."

Bills for the prohibition of the manufacture, importation and sale of alcoholic liquors (except for mechanical and medicinal purposes) in the District of Columbia were introduced in the Senate by Senator Peffer, of Kansas (Populist), and in the House of Representatives by Hon. E. J. Morse, of Massachusetts. Senator Peffer also introduced a bill providing for the payment of pension money to wives of pensioners, known to be of good character, in cases where the husbands are habitual drunkards or fail to support their families. Both the commissioner of pensions and the pension committee indorsed the bill. Also by Senator Peffer (who is a hard worker and a prolific bill maker) bills to prohibit the collection of special taxes from persons other than those duly authorized by state laws to traffic in intoxicants; to prohibit the sale, manufacture and importation of all intoxicating beverages in the United States; to prohibit the sale of intoxicants at military posts, government reservations and national soldiers' homes.

A resolution was favorably reported to the Senate by the committee on foreign relations, providing for prohibiting the sale of firearms and intoxicating beverages to the natives of the New Hebrides Islands.

By Representative J. De Witt Warner, of New York, to prohibit the sale of intoxicants under any other than their real names.

By Senator Harris, of Tennessee (Democrat), for so amending the District liquor law as to check illegal retail liquor selling.

By Senator Kyle, of South Dakota (Populist), to prohibit the appointment of persons of intemperate habits to military or civil positions under the United States government.

And by Representative G. D. Mecklejohn, of Nebraska (Republican), prohibiting the sale and dispensing of intoxicating liquors to Indians.

None of the above were passed by Congress during the last session, but we trust that some of them will yet be resurrected and become laws.

There were passed several amendments to the existing liquor laws of the District of Columbia, chiefly in favor of the liquor dealers. The law formerly forbade the granting of liquor licenses for places within four hundred feet of churches or school-houses. It now, as amended, grants licenses to hotels having fifty or more guest chambers, regardless of proximity to churches or schools; but grants no license to any hotel having less than twenty-five guest chambers. The recently enacted tariff bill extends the bonding period for whisky to eight years, with the right to withhold taxes until the expiration of the bonding period, unless the whisky be sooner withdrawn.

The tax on whisky was raised from ninety cents to one dollar and ten cents. Our protests were useless, yet we placed ourselves on record once more as being uncompromisingly opposed to any partnership with crime.

An amendment to the legislative, judicial and executive Appropriation bill, as passed, provides for an investigation, by the Commissioner of Labor, "into the alcoholic liquor traffic, its relations to revenue and taxation, and its general criminal, moral and scientific aspect in connection with pauperism, social vice and crime and the public health and general welfare." If that investigation be wisely made, and honestly reported, AT LAST, surely it will cause an arousement of public sentiment against the liquor traffic.

We have now in our city a notable gathering, the Biennial Conclave of the Supreme Lodge and subordinate lodges of the Knights of Pythias of the world. It is the only secret order chartered by the United States Congress, and claims a membership of 465,741 men. There have been here also assemblies of the Pythian Sisterhood and the Pythian Sisters, fraternities with names quite similar, yet with entirely distinct organizations, their objects being mutual help in self-culture, socially and morally.

Our always alert Mrs. Woodbridge telegraphed me to secure the signatures of the Knights of Pythias to our World's Petition, if possible. We were alive to the same effort, and immediate action followed. Our faithful and efficient superintendent of legislative and petition work, Mrs. Clinton Smith, called upon the Hon. W. W. Blackwell, Supreme Chancellor of Knights of Pythias, at his hotel. He received her most kindly and unhesitatingly signed the Petition individually, declaring that he wished he could do so for his entire order, but that was impossible; neither could he invite her to present the Petition to the Knights at a business meeting (as he would gladly do otherwise) because for three years he had been laboring to secure the exclusion of liquor dealers from their fraternity, and as that important question must be decided here he thought it unwise to jeopardize that action by urging any other temperance measure at such a crisis. Mrs. Clinton Smith felt that his policy was wise under the circumstances, and proceeded to present her Petition to the Pythian Sisterhood and Pythian sisters in their separate conventions. They extended the utmost courtesy to her, and the officers signed the Petition for their respective constituencies, aggregating an approximate membership of 30,000 women.

On Sunday, September 2, our District W. C T. U. held a temperance mass-meeting in the largest Protestant church auditorium in our city. The Pythian Knights and Ladies were especially invited. Addresses were made by Rev. Dr. Powers, pastor of Garfield Memorial church; by Rev. Dr. Eldridge, pastor Douglas Memorial M. E. church; by Mrs. Clinton Smith and Mrs. A. A. Young, Founder, and past Supreme Councillor of Pythian Sisterhood; also by Mrs. G. Bemis, present Supreme Chancellor Pythian Sisterhood, and Rev. Dr. Saunderson, Supreme Chaplain, Knights of Pythias, of the world. Our city pastors spoke with their usual zeal and eloquence, and our guests expressed full sympathy with our W. C. T. U. work, Mrs. Young informing us that nearly all the officers of her fraternity are white-ribboners.

Dr. Saunderson stated "that all Knights of Pythias wearing any part of the regalia of the order are forbidden by their laws to enter any saloon or house of ill-fame, unless it be on important business, and then they must neither give nor accept any hospitality whatsoever—as one of their watchwords is purity."

We passed a resolution commending Supreme Chancellor Blackwell for his efforts to exclude liquor dealers from the order. The morning Post brings us the good news that "the order of Knights of Pythias has at last definitely decided hereafter to refuse admission to their order to saloon-keepers and bar-tenders, and to suspend or expel all members who may hereafter engage in such business." That is a great move temperance-ward for a large and influential organization. In that and the recent decisive action of the heads of the Catholic church in excluding saloonists from their societies, we find much encouragement.

We gather some interesting items from a report made by Mr. J. L. Ervin, first vice-president Anti-Saloon League of District of Columbia, at our annual meeting of the League. He stated that "during the past fiscal year there were licensed in the District 604 bar-rooms and 496 wholesale houses; total, 1,100. During the present fiscal year (then within a year of its close) there had been licensed 604 bar-rooms, including thirteen 'clubs,' and 137 wholesale places. Total, 741—giving a decrease of 359." We believe the decrease is owing largely to the watchful work of the Anti-Saloon League (of which the W. C. T. U. forms an active part) in enforcing the laws and preventing the granting of licenses at points prohibited by law.

We also notice in our city daily papers constant advertisements of saloons for sale, and we hear that the saloon business does not pay here as formerly. The liquor dealers concede that the work of the "temperance fanatics" is hurting their business. So let it be—more and more so.

Yours for the fray,

MARY E. GRIFFITH,
Pres. District Columbia W. C. T. U.

INTERNATIONAL PEACE CONGRESS.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Never was woman's progress so marked, in my experience, as I find it by placing the scenes I witness here in old Antwerp in 1894, in contrast with the wonderful symposium of the Woman's Congress in 1893, in Chicago. Here, I look from my window upon a woman and a dog drawing together a heavily laden cart. There, I saw noble women taking their places in the front ranks, side by side with the learned men of the age, and with the wisdom of the savants, wrestling with every problem of this era, whether it be political, scientific, sociological or philanthropic.

Here I saw, but a few days since, the lion monument erected on the battle-ground of Waterloo. This monument, readers will remember, is placed at the elevation of two hundred feet, and the earth that makes up that mound was taken up by Flemish women from the blood-stained battle-ground where thousands fell, "rider and horse, friend and foe, in one red burial blent." It took three hundred Flemish women three years to carry up, on their backs like beasts of burden, this soil that is the basis of a statue of a lion that the Dutch have placed in this position to denote where the Prince of Orange fell fighting for earthly ascendency.

My mind turns back to Chicago to the Woman's Temple, the monument of woman's stand for purity, temperance and righteousness. It was to me one of the most beautiful buildings of Chicago—yes, and of the world, for it was the crystallization of the thought and the prayers of a million women who are making the world better. How I wish I could see here such a building erected. My heart sinks within me at the amount of intoxicating drinks that is being imbibed in this country. Nevertheless, as your delegate, I shall go into the International Peace Congress that will open to-morrow and see how many I can influence to sign the World's Petition that was intrusted to me by Miss Willard.

A high Belgian official said to me this morning, "Don't commence any temperance missionary work here. They all drink. You will see that we drink at my residence." I firmly believe the dignitary spoke the truth. The first day our party of delegates arrived here was the only disagreeable part of our trip. We actually found it difficult to find a boarding house where the aroma of beer or wine did not greet us at the portals. The little tables on the sidewalks, with chairs convenient, form a comfortable resting place where both men and women drink together. Just as I was about wailing out a "miserere" the poet of our party drew my attention to a magnificent bronze fountain, erected from Lambeaux's design in the Grand Place in front of the Hotel de Ville. It represents a mythical hero who defeated and cut off the hand of the giant, Antigonus.

The legend is this: A giant used to exact a heavy toll from vessels entering the Scheldt and ruthlessly cut off and threw into the river a hand of every shipmaster who refused to pay. A mythical hero of the type of David and Goliath defeated and cut off the hand of Antigonus. This statue seems to stand for liberty—liberty of soul and political liberty, that will not allow one to crush his brother. Hence, says the legend, the name of the town Antwerp, from hande werpen; werpen means to throw. If it could only now throw away the sale of all intoxicating liquors its growth would be as great spiritually as is its beauty of environment. An inspiration filled my mind that this statue is typical of the warfare of the W. C. T. U. legions. That hero in bronze is a materialization of the one grand purpose that actuates each and every one of the W. C. T. U. army. The arm uplifted is a type of the daily prayers that are being offered by the faithful, and the giant's hand cut off and cast into the sea is a representation of the final doom of the liquor traffic.

From Waterloo to the Peace Congress—from so historic a battle-ground to a convocation of different nations, to consult about permanent arbitration for all difficulties, seemed to be the one the antithesis of the other; but history records that the first struggle for peaceful settlement of difficulties grew out of the horrors of Waterloo. Victor Hugo said, "Waterloo was not a battle, it was a change of front of the universe." He also said, "When the pools of blood formed rivulets flowing from the wounds of brave soldiers who fell, Napoleon remarked, 'Some eggs must be broken to make a good omelette.'"

Would men stand such heartlessness? The story of St. Helena answers that question, and the very next year, it is worthy of note that the first real effort was made to effect international arbitration. The settlement of the line of boundary with England, and connected with St. Croix river history, was adjusted. Since that time there have been at least seventy-seven international arbitrations.

The International Peace Congress that will commence to-morrow morning will be the sixth in the history of the world. The first was held in Paris at the time of the Exposition in 1889; the second was held at London in 1890; the third in Rome in 1891—a most historic peace congress that led to the adjustment of the difficulty between the United States and Italy about the New Orleans matter; the fourth in Berne, Switzerland, in 1892; the fifth congress in Chicago in 1893, and now the sixth here in Antwerp in 1894. Delegates are already here from Austria, Italy, Germany, England, and our own loved America. Mr. Hezekiah Butterworth, who wrote the poem, "The White-Bordered Flag,"—dedicated to the peace flag that I carried to Rome—and Mr. Trueblood, of Boston, also of the American Peace Society, are both here, as well as several others from America.

COLORADO PROHIBITIONISTS.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—The Prohibition convention that met in Coleseum Hall, Denver, last week to nominate a state ticket was the most enthusiastic and the largest convention this party has ever held in the state. Its every meeting was opened with song and prayer. The platform adopted was broad and strong. And many who have said heretofore that we were a party of one idea, now complain that we want the earth, and have taken in too many side issues.

The ticket nominated, with George C. Richardson for governor, might be a pride to any people. Mr. Richardson is a man whose business career is without blemish, "known and read of all men" for nearly thirty years. He was the first president of Colorado University. In earlier life he was an itinerant minister in the Methodist Church, but in consequence of ill health was obliged to leave the regular ministry, and has since been closely connected with all interests for the development of Colorado. A statesman by nature, true and just, we hope to elect him.

Mrs. Telford, vice-president of the W. C. T. U., was nominated for lieutenant-governor. The ticket throughout is capable and clean.

Professor Dickey's address on Thursday evening has never been excelled in clear logic, force and eloquence. Many have said if that address could be given in every town we would surely win. Many were converted to the faith. One man stated that he had "just been converted," and wished to give twenty dollars to the campaign fund "to prove his conversion genuine." Our true and fearless John Hipp was reëlected chairman of the State Central Committee with the faithful and worthy Mr. Singletary as secretary.

Friday afternoon Professor Dickey made an appeal for funds to carry on the campaign, and succeeded in raising fifteen thousand dollars in about thirty minutes, which speaks well for our people in the midst of a great financial strain.

The convention was beautifully harmonious throughout, greatly in contrast with the one that assembled about twelve hours after we adjourned, in the same hall. The air was foul with tobacco smoke and whisky and beer breaths; the uproar and strife and profanity made the place a pandemonium. Many left never to return to the place or party.

Our cause grows and hope brightens with other parties divided as they are, still splitting into many factions, and our chances seem to average better than ever before. Let every white ribbon sister, the world over, continue to pray that our women may stand firm for the right in this their first great opportunity, that our zeal falter not, and faith lessen not, until the saloon is outlawed in Colorado. The battle is on and fierce even now.

For six weeks recently Mrs. Clara C. Hoffman charmed and convinced the people of Colorado by argument, logic and eloquence that right is might, and right must eventually win. Though delayed many times by flood and strikes, she had the privilege of speaking to thousands of people, and it is safe to say that at every meeting votes were made for prohibition. No speaker has come to us that has done more to promote the cause of God and humanity than has this strong, fearless advocate of truth, and great was the disappointment of many when they found that she had left the state. She was employed by the Prohibition party but the W. C. T. U. was strengthened and many doubtful votes were decided for the party that will stand this fall for the protection of the homes of Colorado. Yours for victory,

EVA C. HIGGINS,
Pres. Colorado W. C. T. U.

THE BRIER BUSH.

BY VIRGINIA WOODWARD CLOUD.

Like some bare life set thick with thorn,
  Hedged hard by duty, desolate,
It grew apart, alone, forlorn,
  Unsought by beauty, left by fate.

But something passed along that way:
  A thought? A smile? A touch? A word?
A bit of sunshine through the gray?
  A throbbing, lilting, lighting bird?

God knows. But on the morrow morn
  That brier was a burst of bloom.
Somewhere, mayhap, a soul was born,
  There was such incense of perfume!

Not one who passed with interests rife,
  Had dreamed its wonder unconfessed,
That such a bare and lonely life
  Held all of beauty unexpressed.

"WHOSO OFFENDETH."

BY GISELA A. DITTRICK.

(Concluded.)

There were happy, happy days in the weeks and months to come, but none so precious, so hallowed as that glorious Easter morn when the young husband and wife stood before the flower-crowned altar in the beautiful old church, and gave themselves for aye to the Lord of Hosts.

It was very sweet, it was very solemn, and with a great awe Madge listened to the words, "This is my body which is broken for you; eat ye of it." Oh, how good God had been in letting them come together! and she stole a loving glance at the earnest face beside her. She watched the minister as he handed the sacred emblems to the elders, then—he raised the silver tankard—she caught her breath! She saw the flowing stream—and her heart stood still! Oh, God, it was wine, wine! and she had not thought! What should she do! She understood so well now the awful taste, the terrible desire which that cruel father had bequeathed his noble sons, and she knew her husband must not taste that glowing cup! Oh, what should she do! God help her! Why did they have it here; why did they! If Jesus knew, would He not tell them to use water—water! But the cup was coming! Her face grew deadly pale, a little moan escaped her, then she rose quickly and softly left the church, followed by her alarmed husband.

She had saved him that time! He saw the color come stealing back into the white cheeks, and heard the repeated assurance that she was "better, much better," and he had no suspicion of the truth; it had not entered into his head that there had been danger for him under that sacred roof. And she rejoiced at his ignorance; she would not for the world spoil his joy at his entrance into God's home. Yes, she had saved him this time—she could not do that again. Were they never to be able to sit down together at the Lord's table? There must come a time when—when the cup would be handed him! Was it right—was it what Christ would do—to put such temptation in the way?

Perhaps there were others like her husband who were fighting the demon! Would God's tender hand place to their lips such a cup? No! no! no! her heart told her. God's people were not so wise—perhaps they had never thought—should she go and tell them? She shrank from the very idea. She could not go to those grave, elderly men, and tell them that they did wrong. They would be angry with her, they would despise her noble husband. She could not. But they were Christian men, they were nearly all old gray-haired men, they knew much of life, they might understand, and the time was drawing very near. It was her husband.

And so she went to each one of the astonished elders; to each she put her little query; she told her little story simply and sweetly. They all shook their heads—they could not change such a custom; it was Christ's own legacy to the church; it would cause an endless discussion; it had been sanctified by God and there could be no harm in it.

Two of the elders with the pastor, she found in his study, and when they had listened to her, one brother said, "Daughter, you do wrong to give yourself so much uneasiness. God has said in His sacred Word, 'No one shall be tempted above that he is able to bear.' It will probably be no temptation whatever to your husband." And then she turned upon them and her indignation and distress were poured out unreservedly.

"Not a temptation, you think! Not a temptation! When the very blood in your veins cries out for drink! drink! When the very smell of the deadly stuff is an exquisite torture. Is not God great and omnipotent to bless water instead of wine? Would He not do it if He stood in your place to-day! He says too, 'That no man put a stumbling-block or an occasion to fall in his brother's way.' May God open your eyes." And with a strangely sinking heart she left them.

The next Sabbath, Communion Sabbath, dawned beautiful and bright, but young Mrs. Cummings lay in a darkened room fighting a nervous headache, the result of weeks of worry and anxiety.

As her husband wandered disconsolately about the rooms he was glad to see her mother and sister enter the house on their way to church.

"Madge with one of her old headaches?" asked the mother, anxiously. "Well, I'll just take off my things and stay with her. You and Jean can go right along to church. Don't go in, please; it would only excite her, and she needs to be kept quiet. Go along, men don't know anything about headaches." And she smilingly pushed the reluctant young fellow toward the door and hastened to the dim room.

"Mother, where is Ed?" was the sudden question after the morning kiss had been received.

"Now, my darling, you just lie quiet and see if you can't get rid of this old headache before noon. I've sent Ed off to church with Jean."

"Oh, God!" and she buried her white face in the pillow. "Be merciful! Be merciful!"

She lay so quietly that her mother thought she slept, and so an hour, nearly two passed away. She heard her sister's voice, then her mother's, but not the other.

"Mother!" and there was agony in the tone. "Mother, where is Ed?" came the query the second time.

The mother and sister looked quickly at each other and hesitated.

"Tell me!" And they dared not disobey.

"Don't look so, Madge! Nothing terrible has happened. It's nothing, daughter, only Ed does not seem quite himself. Just as soon as he came from church he rushed off to the stable, saddled Duke, and rode away as fast as he could. You see, nothing alarming has happened, dear, only it seemed just a little peculiar that—"

She never finished the sentence, for with a cry they will never forget Madge sprang from the low couch and dropped on her knees by the side.

"Oh, Father!" they heard her say. "Father, it has come, and now wilt thou show us thy compassion! Be merciful, and give him back to me! I believe; help thou mine unbelief!" And then she told them all the sad, terrible story, while they waited—for they knew not what.

Two hours later they brought him to her, and laid him tenderly and carefully upon the soft couch. His horse had thrown him—he had not seen the ditch—and "'twas only the question of a few hours," the physician said, as he examined the great gash on the high, noble forehead. After awhile his eyes opened—those tender, loving eyes, and they rested contentedly on the face he loved best in all the world. He feebly held out one hand.

"Madge, dearest, it's all for the best; don't grieve. I did not know—until to-day"—she had to bend her head low to catch the faint, broken whisper—"what—a terrible fight—it would be—but God knows. Oh, Madge, the demon that woke within me—when I tasted to-day—that first drop! God knows my weakness. He is going—to take me from it. Madge, I rode and rode and rode to-day, and all—the time—the devil within me—kept saying, 'You know you cannot resist long—you want it—your father drank—all his life—and he was respected. Take it! take it!' But, Madge, I did not! I did not! I could not take another taste, and God knows it,—so He is taking me from it all."

But He did not. He heard, as He always does, the prayer of faith, and out in Colorado to-day there is a beautiful church, the loved and honored pastor of which carries on his broad white forehead a heavy scar, of which his people know the story.

The children are not the only ones who love their pastor's wife, the tender, sympathetic woman, with the beautiful dark eyes and strangely silvered hair.

In that church no wine is ever used, but God has blessed with wondrous blessings the clear, pure, sparkling water which flows from the silver urn, for all may drink from out this cup.

One must keep up the average. The man who has the most clear title to admire himself is he whom none others admire. Else were all equality destroyed and everything topsy-turvy. And it is seen everywhere that the man whom no other admires is he whom Nature has endowed with the best capacity to admire himself.—James Vila Blake.

SELF-DENIAL WEEK.

BY M.

A week of self-denial, that we may help our beloved World's W. C. T. U.! I wonder how many of us see that request and read it through our tears. We have nothing to deny ourselves.

I am not poor. I have a pleasant home and the things I need. Some have not these; yet to me, as to the poorer sisters, self-denial in order to save one cent more seems impossible.

When already my clothing is limited to the plainest and most essential; when food in our family could not be cheaper and yet give us nourishment; when the little visits and pleasure trips we love are given up for lack of money; when even letters are not written to dear friends because of the expense of postage; and white ribbons are washed and washed rather than buy fresh ones; I wonder where there is any chance of sacrifice to save a cent, even for the World's W. C. T. U.

"Oh!" some one says, (and I heard her say it, and longed to deny it for the sake of the good husband who often relinquishes so much for me) "the men do not give up their luxuries."

Indeed, they do. One man at least, whom I know, has uncomplainingly dressed shabbily, and eaten five-cent lunches many a time, to save a few cents toward a debt; a man, too, who never drinks or smokes; all this while he loves luxury, and his tastes demand a much greater expenditure; and he is only one of the noble-hearted many to whom home and wife and child mean all of life, down to the last cent and the last effort.

In writing my own experience, I know I am writing that of thousands of other W. C. T. U. workers. Some of us who will do all we can, cannot give. Even the "dues" are hard to pay, at one cent a week.

And yet, I want to make one suggestion, and that is that Self-Denial Week be remembered; even those of us who cannot give money may influence somebody, better able, to give, and in some way we may give more of ourselves—more of our time, that week, to W. C. T. U. work; and if we can do no more for God and Home and Every Land than give our prayers, at least we can do that with all earnestness and love.

A NEW PLAN.

[Rev. Charles G. Ames, of Massachusetts, has said a word in the Woman's Journal that has some redemption in it for American suffrage. He wants a halt called on "unconditional cheap suffrage." So do thousands of other patriotic men and women. The right of suffrage is a privilege conferred by a government on its citizenship. It should be conferred only for some sort of acquired merit or qualification. Intelligence is more nearly inherent and universal than any other merit. The following suggestion is valuable along this line.—Eds.]

"Mrs. Livermore has spoken of woman suffrage as a new movement. She might have spoken of suffrage itself as new. It is only a short time since men voted, or since there has been any attempt to make a government of and for and by the people. Suffrage is one methed of attaining good government—the highest wisdom for the best welfare of all. None should vote but those who know how. Without wisdom and justice in legislation, no good government, no good society, is possible. In earlier ages it was sought through patriarchalism—the oldest man of the family was king and priest. But a government of one or a few tends to despotism. It is very difficult for any one outside of the circle of power to get inside. Power often gets into bad hands. So with social progress there has been a gradual extension of power from the few to the many. Manhood suffrage is a sign of the advancement of the race. Womanhood suffrage comes as a new unfolding of spirit power. Until men and women become capable of self-government, they will be misgoverned, even under the forms of a republic.

"'Rule them and fool them, for so it must be.'

"Ignorant people are incapable of combining for their own welfare. Therefore no one ought to rule until he knows how. It is absurd to take a watch to a blacksmith to be mended. It is reasonable that persons who have not reached mental maturity—idiots, lunatics, criminals, and aliens—should be forbidden to vote. But sex is not a reason for exclusion. Fix the standard of fitness, and then admit all who can come up to it; that is the principle of good government. Some women are qualified to rule, as some men are qualified; some are not. Call a halt on unconditional cheap suffrage! Let me suggest a plan: From and after January 1, 1901, let all new applicants for registration as voters pass an examination. Let those who can discriminate between the executive, legislative and judicial branches of government, men or women, be admitted, and let all others be excluded. We can no longer afford to include all masculine ignorance and exclude all feminine intelligence. Have a moderate qualification, easily ascertained, for all qualified citizens to enter and no others. Take suffrage from no one who now has it, but enter the new century with a new set of books. 'Strike for that which ought to be: God will bless the blows!'"

LITTLE THINGS.

BY MRS. C. L. LOFTUS.

Little drops of whisky,
Little mugs of beer,
Bring the keenest sorrow
To the children dear.

Little drinks of brandy,
Little sips of gin,
Swell the mighty torrent
Of disease and sin.

E'en the glass of cider,
And the ruby wine,
Mar the strength and beauty
Of the form divine.

Little slips of paper
For the ballot cast,
If for Prohibition,
Peace will bring at last.

Rally, then, ye voters,
Heed no party sway,
Show the world you're freemen,
Voting as you pray.

IN GRANDMAMMA'S KITCHEN.

In grandmamma's kitchen things got in a riot.
The cream in a pot, on the shelf
Where everything else seemed peaceful and quiet,
Got whipped—for I heard it myself.
And grandmamma said (such a queer thing to say)
That it made some things better to whip them that way.

Some bold naughty eggs that refused to be eaten,
On toast with their brothers, maybe,
Were stripped of their clothing and cruelly beaten,
Right where all the dishes could see.
And grandmamma said, though the poor things might ache,
The harder the beating the lighter the cake.

The bright, golden butter was petted and patted,
And coaxed to be shapely and good;
But it finally had to be taken and spatted
Right hard with a paddle of wood.
When grandmamma carried the round balls away
The buttermilk sulked and looked sour all day.

The water declared that the coffee was muddy,
But an egg settled that little fuss;
Then the steak and the gridiron got in a bloody
And terrible broil. Such a muss!
And a flatiron spat at grandmamma in the face,
And I ran away from the quarrelsome place.

NUMBER ONE.

"I tell you," said Robbie, eating his peach,
And giving his sister none,
"I believe in the good old saying that each Should look out for Number One."

"Why, yes," answered Katie, wise little elf.
"But the counting should be begun
With the other one instead of yourself,
And he should be Number One."

THE DAY THAT WASN'T LONESOME.

Joanna and Jim sat on the front doorstep, their round chins resting in their fat little palms, their dimpled elbows on their knees.

They looked with squinted-up eyes at that big traveler, the sun; he was only a few hours high, and they thought mournfully of the long, long time it would take for him to get round to his go-to-bed place, the ridge of Jump Mountain.

"Hello, Tom and Dick! what's happened at your house?" Old Dr. Thornton stopped his bay mare and his dusty rockaway in front of the children. He knew well enough their names were not Tom and Dick, but he was always pretending not to know.

"My name ain't Tom," insisted the little girl; "my name is Joanna, and—"

"Oho!" said the merry old doctor, "little gals have long curls,—they do; you can't fool me, because I've vaccinated too many of 'em; but where's your mother, John—anna?"

"Mother's gone away to clean for Mrs. Haxall," said Joanna, dolefully; "she's got to, 'cause it's 'most time to buy another bag of flour."

"And some more 'lasses," prompted Jim; "and she won't be back till sundown."

"Poor babies!" said the good old doctor to himself, "that is hard on you, but it's a good deal harder on her. Here, you little colts, have you got any dinner?"

"Oh, yes, indeedy!" cried Joanna, looking more cheerful at the thought; "there's two big pieces of bread and 'lasses in the cupboard; but mother said we mustn't eat it till the sun shined in the kitchen window."

"Well, here's a little picnic for you to eat right now," said the doctor; "and mind you have every crumb of it eaten up, and the napkin shaken out clean, before I come back; do you hear?" He drew out a little, covered basket from under his seat and handed it down to the little people on the doorstep.

It was the doctor's own dinner, which his wife had put up for him; a good dinner, I can tell you—chicken-pie, and tongue, and buttered rolls, and hard-boiled eggs. She often made him promise not to give his dinner away; but, fortunately for Joanna and Jim, he hadn't promised this day.

"I'll be near Mr. Thomas Martin's about dinner-time," said this good country doctor, as he touched up the bay mare and left the children speechless with surprise, "and I'll just stop and get a bite there. Poor, lonesome little chicks! life's mighty hard on some folks."

Often and often during the day the doctor sighed to think of the two unprotected children on the lonesome country roadside; sometimes there would be something in the corners of his eyes like teardrops, and the only thing that kept them from falling was the thought of how good Mother Thornton's chicken-pie would taste to them.

When he asked for some dinner at Mr. Martin's, and owned up where his had gone to, Mrs. Martin's motherly eyes could not hide her teardrops; and when the doctor went to step in his buggy, there was a half-bushel basket on the seat beside him, for Joanna and Jim.

"Oh, look here now!" he cried, pretending to grumble, but looking as pleased as anything, "do you take me for a market wagon?"

"You seem mighty fond of givin' away your own dinner, doctor," chuckled Mrs. Martin, "I want you to try how it feels to give away some of other folks'."

The bay mare must have wondered what put her master in such a hurry to get back over the road that day; she could not know how his kind old heart ached at the remembrance of Joanna and Jim, and the lonesome look in their eyes.

Up hill and down, at a good stiff trot, went the bay mare, until the doctor whoa-ed to her in front of the cottage door; there were no children in sight, but merry sounds came from the back yard, and there Dr. Thornton found the little forlornities he had been thinking about all day.

Sad? Lonely? Not a bit of it. For as soon as they had received such a fortune as the doctor's dinner-basket, they began at once to think of sharing it with somebody.

Now their only neighbors were Dan Tinsley's children, poorer than themselves—oh, much poorer!—in that they had no mother, only a cross old woman who kept house for their drunken father.

They were not good children; poor things, how could they be? And Joanna's and Jim's mother was not anxious to have them about much.

"But mother would let us give them some of our goodies," argued Joanna, "'cause mother is always wishing she had something to give 'em."

So the three dirty, ragged Tinsleys were invited to the feast; and when the doctor came for his basket, he thought he had never seen two happier little people than Joanna and Jim. They had not missed mother a bit, nor been lonesome nor downhearted; they had divided out even all round the bread and 'lasses too (when the sun got round to the kitchen window), and their little faces were fairly shining with the joy of hospitality.

"Well, well, well!" said the old doctor; "the next time I see anybody having the blues, Tom and Dick, I'll send 'em to you for a prescription; one ounce of dividing what you've got, with people who have less, dissolved in a whole day of sunshine, well shaken with romping,—that's about it, hey?"

They had not the least idea what this queer old doctor meant, but they fell upon Mother Martin's big basket as if they knew mighty well what that meant, and the tired sun got to the ridge of Jump Mountain before Joanna or Jim had spent a lonesome hour.—Elizabeth P. Allen in Sunday-school Times.

"WHO was Louis XIV. of France?" asked the teacher. "I know," said a little girl, "he was the man who made all our chairs."

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—Have you read the story on Our Children's page this week? Didn't you think the good, old doctor very generous to give his dinner to the poor children, even though he was pretty sure to get a dinner somewhere? Did you notice how this kindness was passed on to others by those who had received its sunshine? That's the way it is always—for good deeds are catching as the measles, and spread very rapidly when there's any chance.

This story reminds me that an opportunity is now given to every temperance boy and girl (and grown-ups, too) to reflect the rays of generosity—I mean the kind which gives for the pleasure of giving, knowing that God will bless the gift and giver in return. Are you ready to hear about it?

Self-Denial Week ("Oh!" you say, "I know what that is,") comes very soon, commencing next Saturday and continuing until Miss Willard's birthday, September 28. Last year Cozy Cornerers, many of them, were among those who sent ten cents to the World's temperance work by doing without something which they were accustomed to have. Some ate bread without butter; others walked and sent the car fare, and so on. Are you all ready to join in this happy effort this year? Do it, and write Cozy Corner what your self-denial was.

Yours for the white ribbon,

OUR PUBLISHING HOUSE.

The National Woman's Christian Temperance Union boasts three "affiliated" or adopted interests, to each of which it owes allegiance. There is the National Temperance Hospital, so grandly proving to the entire world that alcohol no longer holds the chief seat in the pharmaceutical synagogue; the Temple, that realized "dream in brick and mortar," that prophecy of woman's future power and earnest of present achievement, and the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association. Each of these enterprises stands for a separate, a distinct idea. Each fills a necessary segment in the perfect arc of our perfect circle. To dismiss one from the list would be to strike a blow at the whole.

And yet, while we cheerfully concede all this to be true, we still feel that in perfect loyalty to the other interests, we may affirm that the one most necessary to the perpetuity of all, the one upon which the Woman's Christian Temperance Union itself is absolutely dependent, is that which came first in point of time, and first in vital necessity—the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association.

Do we need to corroborate this statement? In what other way could the magnificent record of the National Temperance Hospital be so widely known to the temperance world as through the columns of THE UNION SIGNAL? How, without the same official organ, could the growth and necessity of the Temperance Temple be spread over so vast an area, in a manner so authoritative and convincing? Doubtless, the Temple of Solomon was reared without the aid of a loyal newspaper, but we have left the age and the modus operandi of Solomon behind us in the march of the centuries, and to-day no great work can be accomplished without the power of the press.

What is true of these sister interests is as vitally true of the mother organization. The Woman's Christian Temperance Union and the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association stand related to each other mutually as cause and effect. To discover the one more important to the other would be as difficult a task as that set by the old school men when they endeavored to solve the problem whether knowledge must precede faith, or faith knowledge. There is a sense in which each precedes and each is consequent upon the other, and to separate them in thought would be to divorce what God had joined together in the eternal marriage of logic.

The business manager of the W. T. P. A. has recently sent out a circular letter which strikes so at the root of this relation between the two organizations that it has led to this editorial. Mrs. Grow says:

Since assuming the position of business manager of the W. T. P. A. I have been made to feel very strongly that the two organizations do not fully realize their interrelation and the mutual dependence of each upon the other.

The W. T. P. A. would not exist but for the W. C. T. U. This you will all concede. But is it not equally true that the W. C. T. U. is dependent upon the W. T. P. A., to bring before the world a knowledge of its work; to scatter its principles broadcast; to keep the zeal of its membership alive as well as to make new converts continually through bringing the "arrest of thought" to those who read its printed pages?

Then does it not logically follow that, as the W. T. P. A. is bound by honor equally with principle, to a steadfast loyalty to the W. C. T. U., the latter is equally bound by honor and principle to a corresponding loyalty to the W. T. P. A.?

We have sometimes wondered if a W. C. T. U. catechism would not be a good thing to scatter broadcast among white-ribboners. If its preparation were placed in our hands we should put well into the front row among the questions:

1. Why, when, where and how was the W. T. P. A. organized, and what is its work?

Our answers would doubtless be too long for the popularity of the catechism, but we believe they would repay careful study, and they would run somewhat as follows:

(1.) The W. T. P. A. was organized because the National W. C. T. U., unable to assume its own publications, still felt the vital necessity of a publishing house, devoted wholly to the dissemination of its principles and ideas.

(2.) It was organized in Indianapolis, Ind., on November 1, 1879, with a board of seven trustees, Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, the principal projector of the enterprise being elected president of the board, and Mary Allen West, secretary.

(3.) It was organized as a stock company, the cost of shares being twenty-five dollars each, but with the distinct understanding that the possibility of money making was only a secondary consideration. The original stockholders looked upon the investment so wholly as a part of their philanthropic work that the payment of the first dividend was a genuine surprise.

(4.) Its work has been the putting forth in black and white of whatever principles the W. C. T. U. is bound by the very fact of its existence to promulgate. Not only does THE UNION SIGNAL stand as the National organ, but the Y work and the L. T. L. work have each their exponents from the teeming presses of the W. T. P. A. The forty-three distinct departments of the W. C. T. U. have leaflets in large numbers given to their special elucidation. The book department has sent out thousands of volumes charged with the vital electric principle of temperance and purity. The annual output for 1893 was 94,253,565 pages.

Question No. 2: How does the W. T. P. A. disseminate its literature?

For the answer to this we would quote again from the business manager's letter:

Our loyalty is proven by a constant putting forth of your principles in whatever issues from our press. How can your loyalty be proven save as you "exploit our products" to the very utmost of your ability?

In a recent article, John G. Woolley calls the W. T. P. A. "a splendid, unworked monopoly." If it be such, upon whom does the responsibility rest? It is not endowed. It does not exist as a benevolent organization. It has no power to distribute free any proportion, even the smallest, of its output.

While created for the promulgation of W. C. T. U. principles it was also created as a stock company, and exists under the rules governing all stock companies.

If it be a "monopoly" it must be a special W. C. T. U. monopoly. If it be "unworked" it must be because the W. C. T. U. fails to work it.

If white-ribboners do not buy its goods it cannot send them forth. If white-ribboners do not subscribe for their great National organ, THE UNION SIGNAL, and secure other subscribers, how is it to be circulated? Each local union, it seems to me, ought to "work" the locality in which it is situated, as carefully as a business house works for custom.

We can only have a fair chance as the World's, National, state and local unions receive us as a true "affiliated interest"; so adopted as to become one with the parent organization.

Question No. 3: What, then, is the duty of the W. C. T. U. as regards the W. T. P. A.?

(1.) That each individual white-ribboner take and read first THE UNION SIGNAL and then as many of its other publications as may be within the limit of possibility. Mark, we say, take. We have come to believe that one of the most disastrous things for the paper and for the local union as well, is for the union to subscribe, as a union, for from one to three or six copies of the paper to distribute among its membership. The papers are either not distributed or else reach the members with news so stale that it is impossible to become interested in it, and the papers are, therefore, not read. For a genuine interest in any work there is nothing like taking your own copy of the paper which stands as the exponent of that work.

(2.) That each individual white-ribboner do her utmost to bring our publications to the knowledge of others in her community.

(3.) That the National organization hold itself responsible for the purchase of a certain amount of literature each year, and the free distribution of the same in communities not within reach of local organizations.

(4.) That each state union follow the example of the National and set apart a literature fund each year to be held as religiously sacred as the amount set apart for dues.

(5.) That the women who purchase W. T. P. A. literature and subscribe for its papers realize the importance of as strict business methods in their dealings with their own as with other business houses, and if the outstanding bills charged to white-ribboners the country over were but met, the present working power of the W. T. P. A. would be largely augmented.

(6.) That white-ribboners gain a broader conception of what constitutes loyalty; so that, instead of dropping their subscription with the first appearance of something they do not quite approve, or with the first pinch of "hard times," they really grasp the thought that they are as necessary to the publications as are the publications to them.

We might protract our catechism indefinitely. We think, however, we have said enough to show that the W. T. P. A. is the reservoir—the W. C. T. U. the conduit pipes. The W. T. P. A. is the power house—but each local union, each individual white-ribboner, is the electric wire without which the power expands itself in vain.

What is the raison d' être of the W. T. P. A.? The existence of the W. C. T. U. What is the promise of our future existence and continued power? The hope that the W. C. T. U. will realize, as never before, its vital relation to the W. T. P. A. and our equally vital relation to it. And the final question of the catechism would be, "Have you secured one new subscriber to THE UNION SIGNAL for report at the coming-of-age convention? May each loyal white-ribboner answer—YES!

A PURITY CRUSADE.

Mrs. Sallade, of New York city, has begun a crusade against houses of ill repute in the name and for the sake of her little daughter of eleven years, who cannot live at home because the neighborhood where her mother's place of business and home are situated has become so demoralized by the presence of degraded men and women. Mrs. Sallade is a New England woman by birth, and has the confidence of those who know her best. Her character is so good that she dares to visit the houses that have destroyed her peace, comfort and well-nigh her business. The New York papers say, that with the exception of Rev. Dr. Parkhurst, she has shown the bravest spirit of any reputable person who has recently set out to help reform that degenerate metropolis. Her courageous example has caused many good men and women to rally around her and we are likely to see results that will encourage all those vigorous-minded people who do not propose to sit down in the midst of the wreck and ruin of a community and fold their hands while they look on as spectators even as Nero did at the burning of Rome. Here are some brave words of Mrs. Sallade which it would be well for all right-minded men and women to read and ponder: "My friends warned me that if I undertook to do this thing I should be ruined, should incur the implacable enmity of the police and would be forced to leave the neighborhood. I said to myself that if people thought a woman fifty-five years of age could be ruined in the discharge of her duty to her children and herself, it was time for me to show them that one at least could not; and I told my friends that I did not care a fig for the enmity of the police or any other corrupt institution, and that I should not move away from this house. Now I say to the people of New York, through the courtesy of the newspapers, that I should like to see the policeman or any other person who can make things warm enough for me to cause me to change my abiding place. Is it right that self-respecting persons should be insulted, that the value of their honestly acquired property should be lowered because the police choose to blind their eyes to the shameless vice of the moral lepers on this block? Are the hundreds of thousands of honest men and women of this vast metropolis to be dominated by the greed of reckless law breakers and the inefficiency—or dishonesty—of the police? Must the fact that some policemen are not satisfied with their legitimate salaries prevent New York from having an honest government? Shall the honest people always be dominated by the rogues? Publish those four questions in the papers to-morrow and let the great army of readers turn them over once or twice in its multifold mind. Get the honest people to think of this problem a little. If only a few brains can be set at work much good may be accomplished." Why should not the W. C. T. U. in every city begin the work of putting away scandalous theatrical pictures and "move on the enemy's works" to the terror of lawless and immoral play-houses, roof-gardens and haunts of shame?

THE NEW POLITICAL ECONOMY.

We believe that every good cause has gained by the recent controversy that centered in Professor Ely, of Wisconsin University. It is well known that he represents a modern and now formative school of what may be called Christian as distinguished from materialistic political economy. The latter says that men must expect their wages to rise and fall with the exploitation of the product on which they work according to the will of the employer; the former says, not so; a "living wage" shall be the basis of the calculation made by the employer as to what other expenses he will incur—what dividends he will declare—and the general manner in which he will conduct his business. The old school says, the law of supply and demand is as changeless as the law of gravitation; it is the sharp threshing instrument which cuts bone and marrow, heart and soul, with as little reluctance as it does the other "raw materials" on which it works, and its name is competition. The new political economy says that it is possible to devise such a system of employment as shall make true the converse of the Scripture declaration, "If a man will not work neither shall he eat," by saying, "If a man will work he shall eat." The old system had for its basis the survival of the fittest; the new begins to illustrate the law of the survival of the most. The old system recognized fatherhood; the new makes room for motherhood as a principle to be taken account of by all true theories of protection, the conserving as well as the producing force. Professor Ely stands for the new ideas, which with great modesty, skill and cogency of argument he has been putting forward for some years past. It has been whispered that he lost his position in Johns Hopkins University because of his New Testament ideas of political economy. The marvel to us is that he ever went to Wisconsin University which "froze out" that great man, sound to the core on every vital question, President Bascom, philosophic writer and faithful Prohibitionist. Every friend of humanity is glad, and every materialist is grieved that Professor Ely comes off with flying colors. THE UNION SIGNAL sends its congratulations to one of its most valued contributors and friends, and says to him, "Hold the fort, for we are coming."

DYING GRACE.

We recently had the advantage of hearing Bishop Foss and penciled the following points for our readers:

If I were asked what quality it is that most strongly distinguishes man from the lower orders of creation, I should say his capacity for faith. Man believes more than he knows. Faith gives him a new eye that can see farther than the eye of fancy or even that of imagination, which has been aptly called "the angel of the mind." Suppose we had been blind for many years and were suddenly endowed with sight, what a wonder that would be, and yet, this is but a feeble illustration of that which comes to the human spirit through faith; for by means of it we are capable of realizing that this great scheme of nature was thought out by one mind whom we call the "Creator," and when that is not enough the heart asks at once. "Does He care for me?" We are capable of believing that He cares so much that He takes upon Him the conditions of our mortal life to prove to us that "God is love," and in life's last hour, faith reveals to us this same Creator and the abolisher of death. But there is something greater even than this, and that is, sufficiency for walking along the difficult pathway of the world; the eye of faith lifted to the hills, whence cometh our help. We learn that we may be more than conquerors not only over death but even over life itself. Many a perturbed spirit says, I want dying grace above all things, that is what I want. But the poor heart deceives itself. What would any of us do with dying grace if we had it? There is no possession that would be more superfluous or inconvenient. It is enough that we are promised "That as thy day so shall thy strength be." It is related of a noble Christian minister in the olden days of persecution, that when condemned to the stake and shut away in his cell, the night before his execution he walked back and forth saying in piteous accents, "I cannot burn"; and when the jailer brought a dim taper and left him alone, the poor man tried to put his finger in the flame, as a test of his power to endure, but drew it back instantly and cried out, "I cannot burn." And so all night he agonized in prayer and dread; and when the morning came and he was brought forth to endure his awful trial, he uttered no word of anxiety, but with a beaming face called out through the smoke and flame for that Conqueror, and proved to his own soul and to the world that dying grace is for the dying hour, and when it comes a loyal disciple can burn without any sign or groan.

THE UNION SIGNAL congratulates the Paulist Fathers in New York city who will wage war on saloon-keepers, and who seem to be certain that in several parts of the city the pastors who are against the saloon-keepers will practically enforce Mgr. Satolli's decree. The Paulist Fathers will not allow a Catholic saloon-keeper to be buried from their church with the honors that they give to the other members of the congregation. All the members of the order are ardent temperance men. Some years since when their new church was in course of erection, the late Father Isaac Hecker, who was then at the head of the community, made an appeal for funds; the church was heavily in debt and ready money was greatly needed. Among the contributions was a check for a large sum from a saloon-keeper, but when Father Hecker was told of the business in which the donor was engaged, he returned the check with a note in which he said that the Paulist Fathers would never receive money from such a source.

THE news from Colorado is encouraging. Excellent judges write us that "we are gaining faster than any other party afield. Votes are being made daily. An expression was recently taken by one of our leaders in an audience at Fort Collins—'one of our doubtful points.' About five hundred persons were present, and over half the audience rose to indicate that their ballots would be cast for Prohibition. At Holyoke, a few evenings before (and this is a perfect hot-bed of opposition) not less than three hundred and fifty were present, and one hundred and twenty-five rose. The party press of the state is beginning to plead and argue with the women on the foolishness of voting with a party that cannot win. Thus far our chances are certainly as good as any. Parties are splitting more and more on the platform and candidates. Men and women are saying to them, 'If you don't insert a prohibitory plank we will leave you.' Still there are defects that grieve us beyond language, but we take a hopeful view of the situation. THE UNION SIGNAL editorials, 'No Compromise' and 'The Crisis in Colorado,' will be published in as many local papers as we can secure." Another writes, "If the motto of the wives and mothers can but be 'Our ballots for our homes,' there is no question as to the outcome, and for this we hope and pray."

MISS WILLARD and Lady Henry Somerset held a reception at the Squirrel Inn, in the Catskill Mountains, on September 6, attended by several hundred of the guests in the hotels and the cottages adjacent, among whom were Mrs. Gen. Clinton B. Fisk, Mrs. Haines, Mrs. Wingate, Mr. and Mrs. Scott (these names represent the founders of this beautiful mountain resort), Miss Lathbury, Miss Van Marter and others. The Misses Paul and Foulke, the capable Philadelphia Quaker ladies who own the charming inn, dispensed refreshments; young people had adorned the parlors with an abundant show of ferns, and the afternoon was most enjoyable. Meanwhile Miss Anna Gordon held another reception at the "Eagle's Nest" that special friends might see the cozy cottage which was not considered to be strong enough on its foundations to accommodate the larger crowd. Messrs. Henry Somers Somerset and Arthur Pollen dispensed cooling and innocuous beverages on the piazza of Somerset cottage a few steps distant. Miss Willard is writing her annual address, and in a few days visits her relatives in Churchville, New York, on her way to Chicago, for the receptions that are being arranged in Evanston and Willard Hall, going thence to the Iowa W. C. T. U. convention.

THE defeat of women's suffrage in the constitutional convention of New York arouses no surprise; as we have said before, the only wonder is that there were so many votes in favor. Manhattan Island has been too long the refuse heap of the old world for any germ of Golden Rule conduct to be expected from its representatives. The law of "put yourself in his place" is as unknown to them as the celestial language. Never was a great commonwealth so pitilessly handicapped in every effort to struggle up to the level of the better civilization. We admire the pluck and courage of that grandest woman of them all—Susan B. Anthony, and her associates; but we believe reform must come along the line of least resistance, and poor, plundered old Illinois and neurotic and inebriated New York will stumble hand in hand into the kingdom at the fag end of the procession of progress. The blood of both is poisoned by these two carbuncles—Gotham and the "Garden City." If the agglomerations of distempered humanity (more to be pitied than blamed) which have been dumped upon them both could be disinfected by modern education and applied Christianity the woman's vote would have an overwhelming majority in each; but that day is not yet, and it will linger long. Meanwhile we lift our eyes to the hills whence cometh our help—Wyoming and Colorado—and stretch out hands of hope toward Kansas planted full of the germs of a better life by the heroic pioneers of other days.

On Labor Day, September 1, a procession of men and women, headed by a band of music, discoursing patriotic airs, climbed the hills surrounding the Catskill Eagle's Nest, and as they passed were warmly greeted by our leaders, who are, as everybody knows, heart and soul in sympathy with coöperation, arbitration and temperance as represented by Mr. Powderly's twenty years of intelligent work for the uplift of the honest toiler.

The national housekeeping that allows such holocausts as the north woods have witnessed in the last few days illustrates once more that it is not good for man to be alone. Who believes that if women had the care of the nation's forestry, their thoughtful foresight, skill in details and devotion to duty, would not have involved precautions that would have rendered impossible the awful scenes that make the whole head sick and the whole heart faint, of which the daily press has given us the black silhouette during these fearful forest fires? Whatever women cannot do, they have that set of brain which makes them matchless as housekeepers; the nation is but one great home, and in the light of these events I suggest that the women be invited to take charge of the woodpile'

Mrs. B. S. Leathers, of New Orleans, has applied for a captain's license on a Mississippi steamboat. She and her husband are in perfect accord concerning this new enterprise, and Mrs. Leathers—happy woman—makes the following statement: "My husband and I are good comrades, and his interests are mine. Sometimes an emergency arises when he is called off on business, and in order to cover the law we must have a captain on board. It is always trying to have to take a new hand on board for this purpose, especially when one does not know every nook of the ship and yet has to act as captain. In such cases the new-comer is a mere figure-head, and I really have all the commanding, or coaching, I suppose I ought to say. I have been thirteen years on the river with my husband, and understand the situation well." Mrs. Leathers is a Louisiana girl, a woman of fine education and culture, who had the honor of representing Louisiana as commissioner to the World's Fair, and the state is proud of her prospective promotion. So says the New Orleans Picayune, a paper that has long been an intelligent and practical friend of women.

Sir Benjamin Ward Richardson says that the way to make the most of life is to try to be healthy in body and mind. He puts the health of the body first, not because he considers it of greater importance, but because it leads the way, naturally, to the consideration of the subtler, or diviner part, the mind. He once knew an engineer who had charge of a large stationary engine, which had been at work for about ninety years and had had eight masters, seven of whom had died or become disabled. "Very strange," said the engineer, "that an engine should last so much longer than a man." But the engine was equable in its work; it never ran loose; it was as bright as a new pin, true in its vocation, clean in every point; was served with the simplest food of its kind, had its furnace tubes kept clear and drank nothing but water. So it lived on, while its masters died—a striking lesson. Presuming human beings are born of good and wholesome constitution, they are, except for accidental destructive agencies, in a fair way to live five times twenty-one years, the natural term of the anatomical life, namely, one hundred and five years, a term few reach, but which is attainable, as a matter of natural law, to the majority of men and women if they lived properly. No person is well and happy who is pained at the sight of useful success in others, or would rather dwell on the failures than rejoice in the progressive career of other men. Communion with man and nature lifts the mind above the jealous maunderings of the wayward, contributing new hope and new impulse to those who feel that they are making the most of life.

ON DUTY.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

NEW YORK STATE NEWS.

The annual convention of Chautauqua county W. C. T. U. was held at Silver Creek, about sixty-four delegates being present. After a cordial welcome and response came the address of the president, Mrs. Martha S. Mead, of Jamestown, which was listened to with pleasure and profit.

The first evening was under the auspices of the Y's of Fredonia. The program consisted of a paper on woman's suffrage, by Miss Julia Shepherd, of Forestville, an original story by Mrs. M. E. Adams, of Mayville, music by Miss Galloway, of Jamestown, and a quartette from Fredonia.

The suffrage question came in for a goodly share of attention, and excellent papers, short addresses and reports took up the time of both days. Mrs. Ella A. Boole, first vice-president of the state, gave the address of the second evening to a splendid audience, holding their earnest attention from beginning to close.

The music of the convention was in charge of Mr. Harry Hill, of Silver Creek.

Next came Clinton county, which met in convention at Peru. Perfect weather and a large attendance helped to make this one of the best conventions ever held, An hour given to the children was enjoyed and appreciated by all, old and young. A blackboard exercise by Mrs. Anniss, of Wellsboro, and an address by Mrs. Beers, president of Essex county, formed a part of the program.

Mrs. Mary T. Burt, our state president, was the speaker of the evening, and gave a fine address to a large and interested audience. She also spoke the following morning on the subject of social purity, and her words were wise and helpful. Rev. Mr. Thompson, of Montreal, was present, and spoke of the W. C. T. U. work in that place. Mrs. Frances D. Hall, president of the county, gave a Bible reading, and a tender memorial service was conducted by Mrs. Hammond, of Ellenburgh.

A tri-county school of methods was held at Prohibition Park on July 13, under the management of Mrs. Ella A. Boole, who is superintendent of that department for Richmond county. New York, Kings and Richmond counties were represented in this assembly, and visitors were present from other counties, while New Jersey sent some of her best representatives, notably, Mrs. J. T. Ellis, state corresponding secretary, who was the speaker of the evening. Mrs. Demarest, state recording secretary, and Mrs. Austin, president of Passaic county, Brooklyn, furnished the music, Mrs. Vanderhoef and Miss Hawthorne having charge of the congregational singing, and Mrs. M. E. Gwyndon giving several inspiring solos, with autoharp accompaniment.

Mrs. Sarah R. Morris, president of Richmond county, in her address of welcome struck the keynote when she emphasized the fact that temperance people should avoid trading with grocers or drygoods men who sell liquors,—and this sentiment was heartily indorsed by Mrs. Lord, of New York, and Mrs. Daniels, of Brooklyn, in their responses. The first session closed with an excellent Bible reading by Mrs. Josephine Braman, of Kings county.

In the afternoon Miss Julia Colman gave one of her inimitable talks on literature as a means of education. She referred to the alcohol in root beer, many people believing in their ignorance that it is a temperance drink.

Mrs. Annable, state superintendent of rescue work for girls, a department which was taken up by the state last year, held her audience entranced while she pleaded the cause of the poor wanderers. Miss A. Matthews, of New York, followed with an equally interesting talk of the work on Ellis Island, where the emigrants land. She said emigration is light this year—only 17,000 landed during the month of June, while last year the number was between 5,000 and 6,000 a day, twenty-one nationalities being represented. Through the generosity of one woman the W. C. T. U. worker is supplied with tracts in sixteen different languages, and these she distributes. Secretary Windom stopped the sale of intoxicants at Castle Garden, the then emigrant station, but under the present administration it has been resumed, with many evil results. She especially recommended a temperance house at or near the Battery, to which families and single men could go and be safe from the snare of the spoiler.

Mrs. Nettie C. Fernald, wife of the well-known author of "The Economics of Prohibition" and "The Great American Famine," and originator of the "Bureau for the Distribution of Literature," gave an instructive paper on mothers' meetings, which was ordered printed in leaflet form. Mrs. Haskell, wife of the manager of Prohibition Park, spoke earnest words concerning the lukewarmness of temperance workers. Mrs. Phebe J. Waite, M. D., of New York, spoke on suffrage, and Miss E. B. Bradley, of Richmond county, on narcotics. The park management gave the use of the auditorium for day and evening, and advertised the meeting without any cost to the W. C. T. U., for which the women were truly grateful.

The annual convention of Allegany county was held at Fillmore. Nearly every local union was represented. Rev. Henrietta G. Moore was present throughout the meeting, giving valuable help in many ways during the day sessions, and a most excellent address in the evening. Cuba Camp, in this county, has just closed one of the most successful seasons since it began twelve years ago. Fully one thousand people tented on the grounds, and crowds came from outside. On W. C. T. U. day Rev. Anna Shaw delivered the address and Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Beverage furnished music. John G. Woolley was one of the speakers at the assembly.

Albany county held its seventh annual convention at Slingerland's, at which time many important subjects came up for discussion, among them the question of "alcohol in root beer," many being of the opinion that it is not a temperance drink. Two notable visitors were present, Mrs. Stephen Matthews, of London, England, and Mrs. Eason, a returned missionary.

Mrs. Dr. Marten occupied a short time in answering anti-suffrage objections, and Mrs. Ellen L. Tenney, our state treasurer, gave a report of the World's and National conventions. This was followed by a paper on "The Brotherhood of Man," by Miss Edna Leverson. Mrs. Matthews gave a talk on "Bible Wines," and after the president's address, another on "The Inspiration of Woman," both of which were excellent. The principal address of the evening was given by Rev. A. K. Duff, on "Our Modern Day Cranks."

A memorial service, followed by reports—a parliamentary drill—miscellaneous business, and a Bible reading occupied the next morning, while in the afternoon Mrs. Prindle, of the Florence Crittenton mission, gave a most interesting account of the work done to rescue fallen women in New York city. Mrs. Prindle spoke again in the evening to a large audience on the subject of social purity. The election of officers was a reëlection of all the old officers.

Kings county held a one day quarterly convention in Grace Presbyterian church, Brooklyn. The morning was occupied by devotional exercises and a Bible reading, and following the lunch hour came a "question box" which proved to be one of the most interesting features of the day. Here again the question of patronizing dry goods and grocery stores where liquor is sold, was discussed, and resulted in the adoption of a resolution "not to deal with those merchants who sell intoxicating drinks."

Among the subjects discussed was the exhibition of "living pictures," and in the interest of social purity such exhibitions were earnestly and unanimously condemned. A resolution was also passed urging the wearing of the white ribbon on all occasions—a resolution which should be passed in every county in our state and then lived up to. We do not see white ribbons enough as we go about, and our women should learn to be more careful—or less careless, whichever expression seems most suitable—in this important matter. Let us show our colors always.

NOTES BY THE WAY.

Temperance day for Sunday-schools was observed in Auburn most appropriately. A meeting was held in the Central Presbyterian church under the direction of Mrs. Jennie M. Pearson, in which over five hundred children took part, and nearly every pastor in the city was present. What an object lesson this was!

Orange county W. C. T. U. mourns the loss of a valued friend in the death of Dr. Sol. Van Etten, of Port Jervis, whose gifted wife is president of the union there. Mrs. Lucy H. Washington, president of Orange county, sustained a great loss recently in the death of her daughter, Rev. Mrs. Swett, of Vineland, N. J.

The unions of Glens Falls have been working for woman's suffrage and now are considering a coffee house, while the Y's are thinking of a drinking fountain. The mission union hold gospel temperance meetings every Sunday afternoon.

The call is issued for our state convention which will be held at Jamestown, Chautauqua county, the birthplace of the Crusade, on October 2, 3 and 4. The speakers will be John G. Woolley and Mary Lowe Dickinson, while Miss Frances Ensign, of Ohio, will address the Y's. A splendid gathering is expected.

OHIO.

W. C. T. U. DAY AT LAKESIDE.

The annual state W. C. T. U. day on the program of the Lakeside Assembly at the most delightful summer resort in Ohio was observed July 31, our state president presiding. A large and attentive audience assembled, many of them wearing the white ribbon badge.

The morning was devoted to purity, which Mrs. Dora Webb, Mrs. R. J. Trego and Mrs. H. E. Hammond presented ably. Rev. Henrietta G. Moore gave the address of the afternoon, awakening thought and discussion, which can but be productive of good. The music was a charming feature of an excellent program.

SCHOOL OF METHODS.

A school of methods, under the auspices of the state union, was held in the W. C. T. U. home at Lakeside, July 19 to August 6. Each state superintendent was assigned a place on the program, and nearly all were present and presented their departments ably on their respective days. Mrs. Wisner, state superintendent of juvenile work, conducted a Loyal Temperance Legion in the home chapel every morning from eight to nine o'clock. No report of this school has been received, though one has been solicited from several of our workers in attendance.

Y'S IN CONFERENCE.

The annual state conference of the Y. W. C. T. U. met at Asbury M. E. church, Delaware, July 19 and 20. Sixty-six delegates were present, and much enthusiasm and interest manifested. The Delaware Y's gave the visitors a most cordial welcome. The first morning was given largely to reports. Among those of greatest interest were the reports from Jackson, Marietta, Fostoria, Troy and Hillsboro. Jackson gives her superintendents, in turn, charge of the monthly programs, thus securing variety and maintaining interest; average attendance is sixty out of one hundred members; have presented scientific temperance instruction at two annual teachers' institutes, giving the teachers a reception. They offered a ten-dollar gold medal to the high school and grammar grade for the best essay on "The Man Wonderful in the House Beautiful" and "The House in Which we Live." Fourteen essays were written, after diligent study and research, and ten dollars was cleared by the contest for their treasury. At the head of their franchise department they have placed a Y and an honorary, who have circulated suffrage petitions, and shown much interest in the work. White Shield and White Cross pledges have been circulated, physical culture presented to the teachers' institute, a reading club maintained, a lecture course successfully carried out, and the flower mission department has been made the almoner of the city's charitable work. Marietta has conducted a sewing-school among neglected children. One hundred and six garments were made and distributed to the children, who were also given temperance lessons and led to sign the pledge. Meetings have been held at the infirmary, and parlor meetings successfully conducted in the homes. Their president, Mrs. Turner, prepared for their union an exceptionally fine paper on "How to Interest Young Men in Temperance."

Fostoria Y's organized with ten members, and have within ten months increased their number to one hundred and thirty-four. Literature, press, flower mission, parlor meetings, physical culture and parliamentary law have all been efficiently pushed.

Troy has been specially successful in flower mission work and parlor meetings. Delaware has doubled its membership. It gained much enthusiasm from the conference. Toledo successfully conducts a mission Sunday-school in the slums of the city. Cleveland Y's are preparing to help entertain the National Convention.

Mrs. R. J. Trego, National evangelist, opened the afternoon meeting with an impressive Bible reading on "Temptations." The welcome was given by Miss Oriel Miller, response by Miss Anna White, of Akron. Representatives of the Endeavor societies, Epworth League, Y. M. C. A., Y. W. C. A. expressed hearty sympathy with our efforts. The pastor of the church and others of the city brought encouraging words. Beautiful solos followed, and a fine recitation. Miss Addie M. Buchtel, of Jackson, gave a helpful paper on social purity, which was a stimulus to all.

On Thursday evening five hundred Y's and their friends gathered at the beautiful home of Prof. Davies for a reception, a most delightful social event. Fine music was rendered, a brief talk on Y work was given by the state Y secretary, while the alert membership committee used their persuasive powers to good advantage in securing new members. The house was decorated with the state Y flower, the nasturtium and vines. The second day two practical and helpful addresses on social purity and scientific temperance instruction were given by the state president, Mrs. Henrietta L. Monroe. Excellent papers on "Our Social Work," "Mission Work of the W. C. T. U.," and "Fower Mission Work," were read. The claims of the Y National organ, Young Women, were ably presented by Miss Sara E. Coates, of Portsmouth, and twenty-seven subscriptions secured. The annual report of the state Y secretary, Miss Frances H. Ensign, was read and discussed. Thirteen new unions have been organized this year, and good work has been done by most of the unions. Plans for the ensuing year were discussed. The help of the National organizers was highly recommended. A model Y meeting was conducted by Miss Buchtel, and taught many practical lessons. A fine organ recital was given by Professor Adams in honor of the Y's, and a delightful street car ride about the city in cars trimmed with white ribbon was an enjoyable feature. The conference was an inspiration to the delegates, and left a fine impression in the city.

RECEPTION AT DR. BASHFORD'S.

Delaware woman's temperance union is pushing the departments of suffrage, scientific temperance instruction, a free reading-room, contests and parlor meetings. A pleasant reception was recently tendered the ministers and teachers of the city at the home of Dr. and Mrs. J. W. Bashford. Knowing the warm welcome awaiting them from host and hostess, the ministers, teachers and friends accepted the invitation of the W. C. T. U., and a large company gathered at an early hour. Dr. Butlar, of Mexico, gave a short, interesting talk on the temperance attitude in Mexico. Other short speeches were interspersed with solos. Cocoa and wafers were served, and a truly profitable social evening came to a close.

Columbiana county held a convention in Rodgers, which was well attended. Fourteen ladies came in a coach decorated with white ribbon from East Liverpool. The meetings were held in the college hall of Mt. Hope College, and all the delegates were entertained there. Professor Golbreath gave the address of welcome, and Mrs. S. M. Perkins the evening's address, "Our Present Duties." Fifty names were taken for the equal suffrage enrollment after the evening address. It was an inspiring convention.

A SUMMER RETROSPECT.

Seeing that you reported being overcrowded with "News from the Field," I have not hurried with any letter. But as I gathered up the material that I had to take to our summer camp in the Oregon "burnt woods," I wish to utilize it before the holidays expire. The cognomen "burnt woods" may have a lugubrious sound to those who have never dwelt in their heart. Certainly these tall uprights look weird in the moonlight, like mutes at a former day old-world funeral. But on the weather side, the charred surface gives place to silver gray, just as the storms and vicissitudes of life give to the naturally morose character, by God's grace, its "angel side," and at evening time they stand on the hillsides golden and glorified wherever the setting sun lights on them.

I hear that Multnomah county has just held another quarterly convention, but particulars have not reached me yet. The former one was very full and interesting. A symposium on "Woman's Suffrage," opened by Mrs. Foster, created great enthusiasm.

W. C. T. U. women all want the ballot. Encouraging reports come from individual unions and from the superintendents.

The Central union, Portland, which was supposed to have drifted off because they no longer met at the old place, appears to have done very efficient work, especially in mothers' meetings, held in different circles; in work among sailors through the instrumentality of an ex-sailor (who has been the means of many a sailor's conversion) and by sailor entertainments; meetings at the Y. M. C. A. hall; at the county jail; among discharged prisoners, besides the usual fostering at the refuge home.

Mt. Scott, of which Mrs. Additon is president, has been holding gospel services every second Sunday, enlisting help at times from ministers within reach. This seems to me such an important item—to keep up the Sabbath service of God in small places where there are no church privileges. Our ladies would do well to emanate from the city centers (where the rivalry of so many churches is the bane to true Christianity), and undertake at least Sunday-school services in the district school-houses round, that are closed on Sundays. Parlor meetings, one may say as a "means of grace"—with the added graciousness of refreshments—have been successfully held in this county as at Elgin, east of the mountains. At Wasco (same section) the annual meeting took this form at the president's house. It proved to be Mrs. Biggs' farewell hospitality as she soon after moved to a fresh home.

A "housekeepers' conference" created a new interest at Mt. Scott.

LANE COUNTY convention under Mrs. C. I. Condon, had the benefit of Mrs. Riggs' presence. History showed how useful the union in Creswell (a little farming center on the railroad) has been in fighting the saloon off from their midst. Every fresh effort to introduce one there is persistently nipped in the bud.

LINN COUNTY held its convention at Shedd, with Mrs. L. E. Blain, county president, presiding. The evening lectures by the Rev. E. B. Sutton, of Seattle, were a great inspiration to the community.

The JACKSON COUNTY convention took place at Medford under Mrs. D. G. Hyde with Mrs. Additon's help, as evening lecturer on her state department, the labor question. Notwithstanding its growth to such enormous proportions, Mrs. Additon is not afraid of tackling it, reiterating as she does that every knotty point is to be solved by the Golden Rule.

Mrs. Additon has since made quite an extended lecture trip through Oregon, speaking for the unions on railroad line en route. Two weeks were given to Siskiyou county. She likewise organized a Y at Woodstock.

At SHERMAN COUNTY (Miss Maggie Eaton, president,) Mrs. Riggs' presence was helpful as usual. The marching in of the Moro L. T. L. was an interesting feature and showed that the union understood the importance of work among the children. Moro is the only county seat with no saloon.

At the MARION COUNTY annual meeting, which is the last I have to mention, both Mrs. Riggs and Mrs. Robb were present to help the president, Mrs. Spangler, with her duties.

Weston has pledged itself for $100 to the Temple. My correspondent in that county, (Umatilla) tells me that both Weston and Athena have given the "Milkmaid's Convention;" that Athena, Milton and Helis have held Demorest medal contests, as have Mt. Scott and La Grande. With the exception of one, each union in the county has an L. T. L. and all were much stirred up both by Mrs. Harford's and Mrs. Unruh's visits. Weston has done good work on the World's Petition.

Mrs. Unruh has made grand strides in chalk-talking, and delighted her audiences in Elgin, Summerville, La Grande, in her own county and with us at Corvallis. Her lectures to the grown-ups are always much liked, and calculated to be very useful, both in the mass-meetings and to our women on the purity question.

Mrs. Harford writes me that she spent seven weeks in southern and eastern Oregon, crossing the mountains after the roads were almost impassable. She finds the sentiment for equal franchise is gaining rapidly, and is at this present working on this line with the hope of securing a bill for municipal suffrage at our next legislature. Mrs. Harford's name was on the Prohibition ticket this June as candidate for state school superintendent. If I remember right, she polled more votes than the other Prohibition candidates. I noted that there were several women elected as county school superintendents—a step in the right direction.

Mrs. Harford reports well of the south unions, with the exception of Central Point and Jacksonville, which even she failed to revive. Her visit gave Roseburg seventeen new members, which helps them along. She hopes another time to organize at the new town of Yoncalla, where, in the meantime, they are warming up on Demorest work. Nearer home she was delighted to find the young union at Turner aggressive enough under the leadership of Mrs. Whiteman, formerly of North Dakota, to circulate a remonstrance to the saloon petition. Mrs. Rounds, at Lafayette, is attempting work of the same aggressive nature.

Mrs. Harford speaks well of her own county, Yamhill, and her own union, Newberg, and they return the compliment! Her "Milkmaid's Convention" netted twenty-six dollars. The Newberg ladies have likewise held a "Fagot Social."

In our little Corvallis we tried to make a stir for temperance, by a petition two yards long, with the very mild request to the city council that it should see to the keeping of its own laws! It created a great ferment and split in the camp, being signed by all the most influential citizens, except one or two who were running for office. Nothing was done, however, and at the city election, soon after, a great effort was made by us to get in "law abiding citizens."

We have tried to re-instill the desire for a kindergarten as part of the primary department, and got a petition signed by all the mothers of young children in the city.

ETCHINGS.

Crowded out by other matter, yet at this late day I would mention that Lansing union in the sixth district had a part in memorial day services, giving each veteran a bouquet and having a place on the program. Mrs. Shepherd has just organized in this district, at St. John's, a new union of sixty members; this followed a union service in which all the churches participated.

Gratiot county convention was held at Alma, in the eighth district—a two days' session with full delegations. The mothers' hour was especially interesting and helpful; the speaker of the evening was Mrs. Helen M. Barker, whose address was most logical as well as interesting. At the close of the convention she organized a union of seventeen members—a most excellent conclusion.

Kalamazoo county convention in the fourth district was held at Kalamazoo. The sister who reported this signed it "yours in love with the work," that to my mind ever means abiding work. The superintendent of jail work reported having held meetings every Sunday afternoon, attended by nine hundred and eighty prisoners, with eight conversions. Sixty-eight have signed the pledge-cards. Papers were read upon "Home Protection," "Our Inheritance," "Mistakes," "Our Boys," "Woman's Victory," "Consistency."

Van Buren county convention met at Lawrence. The chief feature was the presence of the teachers and discussion of scientific temperance instruction, franchise and L. T. L. work.

Berrien county held her convention at Benton Harbor. Mrs. Hadlock, of Berrien Springs, gave an earnest talk, urging members to handle this saloon evil without gloves. This union has meetings monthly, young people's meetings quarterly and prayer meetings, with Bible readings in the jail. Benton Harbor and St. Joseph have given to the Orphans' Home at St. Joseph, the first fifty dollars, the latter one hundred dollars. Mrs. Brown, president of the fourth district, in her address urged every Christian to do his duty, because God expects it.

The outcome of "my challenge" in regard to state minutes has been orders for seven from different states. I will now say the price is fifteen cents, and will be mailed to you from Mrs. J. R. Parish, 411 9th St., Bay City, Mich.

Flint North Side W. C. T. U., in the sixth district, is a helpful union. Our mothers' meetings have been a specialty. One visitor rode fifteen miles to be present. The last subject was "Helpful Mothers." The next will be "Dress." Our county convention will be held at Fenton in September. This union still keeps up its union temperance meetings Tuesday evenings.

Mrs. Bowerman, of Ingham county, reports a new union at Pine Lake.

The third district is giving much attention to medal contests on the suffrage line; six young ladies from California went to Nevada, Ind. One of the class brought back the medal. Mrs. Ellis, superintendent, has two contests planned, one for the Cooper medal at East Gilead, and one for the gold medal at California, all proceeds going into district treasury. Girard union in this district will entertain county convention in October.

The seventh district has had several lawn socials, profitable intellectually and financially. Romeo union has furnished the village with a drinking fountain; this union also has charge of W. C. T. U. Day at Simpson Park camp-meeting.

Isabella county convention was held at Calkinsville, in the eighth district. The president, Mrs. Fancher, was presented with a beautiful silk quilt by the Shepherd union, the banner union of the county. Hon. Mr. Fancher, from Mt. Pleasant, gave the address of the evening.

NINTH DISTRICT.—Mrs. Hopkins says: "No word of any W. C. T. U. taking a summer vacation reaches us. Ice cream socials are the order of the day. Onekama union gave proceeds to Evelyn Industrial Institute. They hold a scholarship nearly paid up in this worthy institution at Manistee. Big Prairie L. T. L. is growing in interest for old and young."

TENTH DISTRICT.—West Bay City reports the election of Mrs. Moots on the school board against strong opposition. This union also holds Sunday afternoon prayer meetings at their headquarters, has also held two public meetings for women, is agitating the appointment of a police matron in Bay City. District convention will be held at Vassar, October 9–11.

ELEVENTH DISTRICT.—Mrs. Howard says at Bay View institute they had two meetings each day for two weeks; the regular attendance was from one to three hundred. Fourteen different states were represented. Mrs. Stone of East Jordan, took charge of the literature table, selling fifteen dollars worth.

TWELFTH DISTRICT'S active little president is laid aside. Her husband, in a kindly letter, asks the Y's and the women of the state to do the best they can until Mrs. Law gets strong enough to give them some time and attention. Our alert superintendents of narcotics and franchise say they have had political speeches at county fairs on franchise and on narcotics. Last year narcotic conversationals were found effective. This year school boards are requested to require of the teachers a pledge of total abstinence from narcotics and all intoxicants during their term of service.

VERMONT NEWS.

Everything in nature was at her loveliest, when our white ribbon sisters met for the annual meeting at Spring Grove.

Wednesday, August 8, the first public meeting was held. There were morning devotions, after which a school of methods was conducted by Mrs. G. E. Davidson, of Newfane.

In the afternoon a stirring temperance address was given by Rev. T. G. Thompson, of Burlington. He said: "People believe in prohibition in everything else but in the liquor traffic. The officers of the law are responsible to us. We pay them, we pledge them, they take oaths, they are our servants, not our masters, and if they do not do their duty we must discharge them. God is never on the side of lazy Christians. Wherever God plants a church the evil one sets a saloon."

In the evening Mrs. Stephen Mathews, of London, England, British organizer, gave an interesting account of Miss Willard's reception in London, also her farewell.

Thursday morning chapel exercises were led by Mrs. J. H. Drew, of Hardwick. This day of all others had long been looked forward to, with expectant eagerness by the people for miles around. The morning was dark and rainy, but despite the heavy clouds and falling rain, as Miss Willard, accompanied by Miss Anna Gordon, stepped on the platform, a large concourse of people welcomed them with waving handkerchiefs. As Mrs. I. H. Read, our state president, and Mrs. Davidson, our secretary, pressed forward to greet them, the plaintive strains of "Home, sweet home" filled the air. The auditorium in front of the speaker's stand soon filled with people eager to hear our loved leader.

Hundreds of voices joined in singing "America"; then the reading of the 146th Psalm, by Mrs. E. B. Lund; prayer by Rev. J. J. Noe, followed by singing "Go Labor On."

Mrs. Read, in her own pleasant way, introduced the speaker. As Miss Willard came forward, the audience rose to their feet, and with waving handkerchiefs, testified their great pleasure. Then how still! Not a sound but the pattering of the rain on the canvas. She stepped from the platform saying she wished to be close to the people, and that she felt we were all her own kin, and one family circle. In her quaint way she made a happy allusion to the rain. She spoke of Vermont being her mother's birthplace in such tenderness that it brought tears to many eyes. Her voice fell like a benediction on her interested hearers, and at the close all joined in singing the temperance doxology.

In the afternoon Miss Gordon addressed the people twice. Her sweet face and winning manner won all hearts, and all were cheered and inspired by her words.

After resting a few hours Miss Willard again spoke to us. She held in her hand a bouquet of bachelor buttons and other old-fashioned flowers, the gift of a lady who had come a long distance to see Miss Willard.

As she ceased speaking the strains of "Nearer, my God, to Thee, nearer to Thee," floated through the air.

Those of us who had the pleasure of looking in her face, of pressing her hand for a moment, were representatives of thousands of women all over our state who would have been glad of the privilege. As she stood before us in the afternoon—the rain had ceased falling and the sun was shining brightly—with the summer wind sighing through the trees and the summer sun resting softly on her head, with its crown of golden brown hair, a picture was left on our minds never to be forgotten.

And I hope the beautiful words we heard from her lips will freshen our inspiration for better and grander service in the future. It surely was a great day for the women that love the cause in Vermont.

Saturday being Children's Day, the L. T. L's were well represented. Kindergarten work, presented by Miss Baldwin, of Lincoln, Neb., and Miss Cady, of Minnesota, gave the children great pleasure. Mrs. H. Bruce, of Poultney, gave an interesting address. The Sabbath was a day of unusual power and profit. Rev. G. A. Kunz, of Bristol, and Rev. H. F. Reynolds, spoke to large and interested congregations.

Rev. W. M. Broadbeck, who spoke on missions, said, "Begin at home, then our hearts will broaden for other work."

Carl Stocker, of Amsterdam, N. Y., spoke of the "Deaconess Movement."

Mr. H. Ford, of Lansingburgh, N. Y., gave an illustrated lecture on "Our Indian Field." Mrs. A. W. Parmalee, of Enosburgh Falls, gave an amusing address, "Borryin' for the Lord." She gave a complete picture of obstacles thrown in the way of those seeking others to join a missionary society. Mrs. M. E. Whittemore, of New York city, spoke of rescue work. She is connected with the institution known as the "Door of Hope." We thought she did well last year, but she far surpassed herself this year.

Miss Anna Cummings, missionary from Africa, gave an interesting account of her travels and work in that country. Religious and temperance work in South America was well brought out by Rev. G. T. Arms.

A quiz on THE UNION SIGNAL, conducted by Mrs. L. A. Keezer, of Rochester, was an important feature in one of the meetings. The temperance hospital in Chicago was presented by Miss Guernsey. She gave a description of the building. Our state has room No. 28. To make the room cheery and pleasant, pictures and other ornaments are asked for, also towels for use and comfort. It requires three hundred and fifty dollars to support a patient there one year. Patients can be sent from Vermont.

Mr. and Mrs. Kinney, Sabbath-school organizers in our state, aided greatly in making the meeting a success. Mrs. Kinney's beautiful voice, together with the sweet strains of the autoharp, under her skillful fingers, gave her hearers great pleasure. The chalk talks given by Mrs. E. A. Kenyon, of Townsend, were very instructive to the children. And the prohibition cry, rendered with her peculiar accent, we hope will echo for years in their minds.

The last day was called one of the best days. The Y's had charge of the morning and afternoon exercises. Mrs. E. Hoyt Landon, of Bristol, offered the opening prayer. Miss Anna Cummings, colonial Y secretary, South Africa, spoke of the temperance work in that country. In the afternoon representatives of the Y. P. S. C. E. and B. Y. P. U., King's Daughters, and Epworth League spoke of the relation of their societies to temperance. The president of the Burlington Y sang a solo, and the secretary recited the "Rum Maniac." Miss Hortense Drake and Miss Kinney sang a solo. The last evening consisted of farewells and closing words.

The women of our state missed the wise counsel and cheering words of our honorary president, Mrs. Esther T. Housh, of Boston.

Thus closed one of the most successful W. C. T. U. meetings ever held in our state, and we are sure a finer program was never brought before the public. Through the untiring efforts of Mrs. I. H. Read and Mrs. L. D. Dyer it was a complete success.

VARIOUS NOTES.

The people of Bristol had the pleasure of listening to Dr. Minnie G. Leavitt, of Canada, one afternoon and evening. She comes to us highly spoken of, and is a bright, energetic young woman. She spoke several times at Spring Grove.

In Chelsea, August 29, Mrs. Townsend, not a member of the temperance union, opened her house for a musical for the benefit of the W. C. T. U. and Y. W. C. T. U. Over one hundred and fifty people were present. The singing by the Webster sisters of Lynn, Mass., was very fine. Mr. and Mrs. Grant, of Hamilton, Ont., sang and played a violin solo. The whistling solo by Miss Blanche Townsend, gave pleasure to all. Miss Edith Hamner recited. With reading and more singing a delightful evening was spent. The Y's in Chelsea are fortunate in the possession of Miss Flora Corwin as their president.

At the last meeting of the Bristol Y's it was voted to take money from the treasury to procure one of the temperance books published at the Temple. In this way and from time to time, adding more books, start a circulating library, later on using the money from honorary members for that purpose.

Thus, little by little the good work goes on. Are not these organizations a mighty power for good?

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

A NEW union is reported from Fredericktown, Mo., organized September 4 by Mrs. Mary M. Clardy. A reading room will soon be opened.

THE Ohio Messenger contains an attractive picture and sketch of our comrade, Mrs. Harriet E. Hammond, a leader in the movement in that state.

THE West Englewood, Ill., W. C. T. U. has for its field of labor a district of eight blocks in Chicago near the stock yards, and in this are eighteen saloons!

MR. THOMAS MOUNT, husband of Mississippi's W. C. T. U. president, Lavinia S. Mount, has consented to be the nominee of the Prohibition party for Congress from the third district of his state.

ONE hundred subscribers to THE UNION SIGNAL and one hundred and nine paid members is the last year's record of the Englewood, Ill., W. C. T. U. Query: Can any union excel this loyal showing?

MRS. HELEN SHAY, state superintendent of railroad work, in Ohio desires to urge all local superintendents of her department to send reports to her at once, so that she may prepare her state report for the annual convention, October 10–12. Mrs. Shay's address is Youngstown, O.

PROFESSOR and Mrs. H. A. Scomp, of Georgia, have our hearty congratulations. They have come a little late, owing to our not having been aware of the date of their silver wedding. We have recently read a "showing up" by the fearless pen of Mrs. Sibley, of the injustice that banished Professor Scomp from the Emory College, with which he had long been connected, on account of his prohibition principles. Such methods never help any cause, and will prove disastrous to any man or institution that pursues them. In the long run the people know who are their friends, and their sense of justice quietly makes up a verdict against the oppressor and for the oppressed.

CO-OPERATION IN PRAYER FOR THE SABBATH.

A request has just been received from the Woman's Home Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal church asking "co-operation in such efforts as may be practicable to secure the better observance of the Sabbath, believing it is the foundation of our liberties and the very corner-stone of our free institutions." They specially request that we unite in observing September 25 as a day of self-denial and prayer for this object, saying:

"Resolved, That we ask the coöperation of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and the women of the Presbyterian, Baptist and other sister missionary associations to observe the 25th day of September, being the fourth Tuesday in the month, as a day of earnest prayer and self-denial, that God's law may be vindicated, and the church better prepared to advance the interests of His kingdom within our borders."

We gladly consent, only regretting that the day fixed is so close at hand few can arrange for meetings on that day. We ask, however, that every subscriber to this paper will at once see her pastor and ask him to give public notice of the joint request by the women's missionary and temperance societies for such observance of September 25, and ask each white-ribboner to pray in her closet for the Holy Spirit in the hearts of all believers, teaching the will of God about the Sabbath and inciting to conscientious lives and earnest efforts in behalf of the day, and that our coming National Convention may forward this work, so vital to our country's preservation. And let us aid our prayers by a more general use of leaflets to educate and enlist the people who have yet been unreached by our work.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL DEPARTMENT.

On good authority (on the authority of the editor herself), I am privileged to say that a portion of space in each edition of The Young Crusader will be devoted to Sunday-school interests, and that instead of being an L. T. L. organ exclusively, as many of our workers have regarded it, the Crusader will be issued for juvenile and Sunday-school service. This fact adds a claim upon our patronage and should insure a wider circulation of the breezy little sheet. The change was made in the September issue and at the outset let this commendable effort be warmly seconded by the Sunday-school workers that the experiment may be speedily demonstrated a success. Kindly letters to the editor, assuring her of our substantial sympathy, will, no doubt, be appreciated.

Blanks for reports of our department have been widely circulated. As far as possible return them to me by October 10. To the limit of our possibilities let us obtain reports from all Sunday-schools in our province.

Yours in loving interest,
JULIA A. BIDWELL.

NARCOTIC DEPARTMENT.

With the commencement of school I hope every union will push the organization of Anti-Cigarette Smoking Leagues. If you have no superintendent of this department appoint a committee to do the work. Let every school in the United States have a League before the National Convention. Send three cents to me for constitution, five cents for a badge and go to work. Write me a postal card, giving location of school and number of members. All workers must report at once to the state superintendent if the reports are to be incorporated in my National report.

WHERE TO SEND SELF-DENIAL MONEY.

Each individual white-ribboner or local union should send all self-denial money directly to the treasurer of her country. For instance, white-ribboners in the United States will remit to Mrs. Helen M. Barker, treasurer National W. C. T. U., The Temple, Chicago. White-ribboners in Great Britain will forward to Miss Gorham, Judde Place, Tonbridge, London. The National treasurer will retain one-half of all money received and send the other half to treasurer World's W. C. T. U., Mrs. Ella F. M. Williams, 55 Drummond St., Montreal, Canada.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

Dr. Rafael Nunez, president of the Republic of Columbia, died last week.

Another serious defeat for the Chinese is reported from the Oriental war.

Chicago's mayor has issued an order closing gambling dens, and all saloons at midnight.

Commander Ballington Booth held enthusiastic Salvation Army meetings in Chicago last Sunday.

Dr. Richard T. Ely has been completely exonerated of the charges that he taught socialism and anarchy.

Bishop Maes, of Cincinnati, has just issued a sentence of sixty days' suspension against a young men's institute of Covington, which dispensed beer at its annual picnic, contrary to the bishop's warning.

The Men's National Christian Prohibition Union met in Philadelphia last week. The secretary, D. P. Lindsley, of New York, writes: "Our meeting was a glorious success spiritually, though the attendance was small." Dr. Chas. Roads, of Philadelphia, was reëlected president.

WE must warn all who read against the new fashionable narcotic, called antipyrin, which is now much used as a reviver, but the use of which involves the rapid formation of a habit which has all the horrors of the chloral or opium habit. Physicians ought to watch the small beginnings that lead to the most terrible catastrophes of which one can conceive.

THE subscriber secured by Miss Willard as her token of good faith in the effort we are making to "double up" on our subscriptions by inducing each white-ribboner to get another name for the list, was Mrs. Matthew Vernor Simpson, wife of the only surviving son of the great Bishop Simpson, whose heart and hand were ready for every good word and work. The family have been staying at Twilight Park this summer, and it will interest all the friends of the bishop to know that his son is willing in season and out of season to invest the beautiful gift of his baritone voice in the interest of good causes, so that in the purpose of his life he is following in the steps of his illustrious father.

THE foes of all law and order and the friends of the liquor traffic in Maine have adopted a new device to defy authority and tempt men to drink. They make a pretended display of liquors which the law forbids them to sell and which they really do not have for sale. Bottles and kegs marked wine, beer and the like are kept in full sight and filled with colored water. The impetuous denouncer of the prohibitory law sees these indications of defiance and writes all over the country that the law is a failure. With beer kegs filled with colored water and the genuine whisky bottles concealed in whisk brooms and in flat, black painted tin boxes, marked "The Holy Bible," the real enforcement of the law is well proven. The Maine law has stood for forty-three years and cannot be overthrown by mere croakers.

IT seems absurd for anybody to be called upon to state the attitude of the W. C. T. U. toward those who lynch any human being, white or black, from North or South, no matter what the offence may be. Our department of peace and arbitration tells the story of the civilized and Christian position that we have always held concerning evil-doers. We believe it to be that which Christ himself declared and practiced, and we hope that at the conventions of this autumn the statement will be clearly made, since those unfriendly to us or ignorant of our history have called in question our loyalty to the oppressed. We know that our Southern white-ribboners are as earnest on this subject as ourselves, and will be among the first to refute the unjust statements that have been industriously circulated against us on both sides of the water.

WE have read with sincere pleasure of the action taken by the national Republican clubs convened in Denver, and of the resolutions passed by the Republicans of California, Idaho, and we believe of Montana also, in favor of the enfranchisement of women. Whoever stands up for this cause is our friend, and we shall not be slow to say so, for we believe he is the friend of the outlaw of the liquor traffic and the protected home whether he means to be or not. Let the good work go on. How we pity the poor old Democrats who do not understand the day of their visitation and who still lurk among the medieval shadows, coining pretty compliments for women, but never dreaming of manifesting toward them the chivalry of justice. We know this is not true of all; and we urge our Democratic brethren who are sufficiently broad and enlightened to invite their sisters to sit beside them in the throne-room of government, to come out from among their benighted brethren and be separate, and to join the Prohition party which to-day illustrates the world's best hope for the home and for the state.

PLANS are maturing in Chicago for the celebration of Father Mathew's birthday, October 10. A grand street parade will take place during the day, participated in by all temperance societies, and in the evening a mass-meeting will be held in the Auditorium, at which Bishop Watterson and Miss Willard will speak. It is fitting that the one hundred and fourth anniversary of this great "Apostle of Temperance" should be so magnificently observed.

IN a letter dated August 9th from Mrs. Laura B. Bridgman, of South Africa, we have learned this sad news: "Just this moment I had a letter from Verulam saying that Miss Alice Palmer is lying with a severe attack of pneumonia. She had been speaking in the W. C. T. U. meeting Thursday evening and Friday; on Saturday an 'At home' was held for her by her hostess; on Sunday morning she was ill, having spent a very uncomfortable night with pain and fever; a good doctor was called at once and a professional nurse on Monday; everything possible is being done and she is in the midst of the kindest friends. We hope and pray that she may be soon raised up by the Great Physician." As seven weeks have elapsed since the date of this letter, and no further word has come, we are hoping that, as usual, "no news is good news," and while commending Miss Palmer lovingly to the remembrance of our white ribbon host, we are encouraged to believe that ere this she is restored to health.

THE Civic Federation of Chicago has produced another Dr. Parkhurst. Rev. William G. Clarke, backed by some of the strongest ministers and laymen and women in the city, has, during the past week, disclosed to the public a condition of municipal affairs hardly less startling than the Lexow committee has revealed in New York. Dr. Clarke is chairman of the committee on gambling, and as a result of his raid on the gambling dens, the mayor has ordered them all closed. While the Federation is glad to have the apparent coöperation of the city officials, it is well aware that the necessity for its services has not ceased. Dr. Clarke is convinced that there is a grand collusion between the gamblers and city officers and that the cause for the audacity of Chicago's ten thousand gamblers in keeping open dens is found in the fact that they pay for official protection. By special request of the Civic Federation nearly all the ministers of the city preached upon the gambling evil in their pulpits Sunday morning, and on Sunday afternoon there was an intensely enthusiastic and determined mass-meeting of citizens in Central Music Hall and overflow meetings in all adjacent churches.

AN occasion of more than local interest will transpire in Chicago, Friday, September 28,—our Leader's fifty-fifth birthday anniversary. The arrangements, which have been entirely in the competent hands of Mrs. Carse, are fully completed and in every detail the celebration will be worthy its inspiration. The first order of the day is the unveiling of the Chautauqua fountain in the corridor of Willard Hall at two p. m., when a rare program will be rendered in which several of the original organizers of the National W. C. T. U. will take part. Mrs. V. H. Danforth, W. C. T. U. president of Chautauqua county, N. Y., will make the presentation for that county, the president of the board of Temple trustees will receive it and Miss Willard will do the unveiling. Immediately following, the Willard (children's) fountain will be dedicated and placed in position on Monroe street, near the entrance of Willard Hall. The evening reception at the First Congregational church embraces an inviting program of music and welcome addresses. In the latter are represented nearly a score of the leading National and local philanthropic and educational organizations. The day bids fair to be a memorable one in local history and it will be one of rejoicing among white-ribboners in every land for the continued life and usefulness of our beloved "Chieftain."

IF I HAD KNOWN.

BY NELLIE GOODE.

If I had known that you would suffer so
Because of that one rash, impulsive word;
That it would cause the bitter tears to flow
When you and your proud heart were left alone,
That hasty speech your ears had never heard—
Worlds could not make me utter it; and then
I had escaped my own remorseful pain,
If I had known!

If I had known—oh, unavailing thought
That comes to taunt me when it is too late—
Beneath that seeming coldness lay a heart
As quick to feel and suffer as my own —
Alas! that I should make its load more great!
How could you know I loved you—loved you so
That my own heart could ne'er have dealt the blow
If I had known!

If I had known, as now, the words we say—
The words of comfort and those fraught with pain,
Fly swiftly onward, busy on their way,
And only pause before the great white throne
Where all our joys and sorrows meet again—
I would have died, ere I had sent that tear
Down through the ages to confront me there,
If I had known!

MRS. MOWBRAY'S WAY.

BY SARAH M. HARTOUGH.

Outside—snow, sleet and darkness. Inside—warmth, light and brightness. Mrs. Mowbray gave a little shiver as she closed the north window and went across the room towards the south window.

But another thought came to her. "I will leave the south blinds open and draw down the shade. It looks so cheerless outside to have the windows all shut up. I wonder," she went on, "if any are suffering to-night, even in this little town. Perhaps I ought to have listened to Mrs. Campbell's remarks about organized charities, and perhaps I ought to have joined that society. But I haven't time to do anything more. She thinks I'm hard-hearted, I suppose, but somehow I haven't got courage enough to join any society. I do what I can for the poor, and all I can—"

She was interrupted by a knock at the door. A timorous knock it was, as though the suppliant were fearful of being denied. It was late—nine o'clock of a December night—and Mrs. Mowbray was alone. Lonely women readily interpret a knock on the door. A bold, vigorous bang would perhaps have resulted differently; but that timid, hesitating touch she knew meant distress of some sort; so she opened the door, letting out upon the darkness a blinding gleam of light, and letting in a dash of snow and a breath of north wind.

"Is it you, Tim?" she asked, as peering out, she discovered the tall, lank form of a half-grown boy. "Come in," and in he came—rough, ragged, and shaking with the cold.

"What's the matter, Tim?" asked Mrs. Mowbray, as she drew a chair up to the glowing fire and bade the boy sit down. "Tell me your trouble, for I know you are in some sort of straits to-night."

"Yes'm," twirling his old felt hat in his fingers; "we're in a heap o' trouble. Mother's sick, and father's in the strike, you know, ma'am, an'—an'—well, we ain't got no fire an' no light an' no vittles, ma'am, nor ain't hed none all day. I could stan' it myself, ma'am, but mother's bad off, and so I come to you, ma'am, thinkin' mebbe you'd not refuse us somethin', ma'am, and the room looked so pretty through the window, ma'am."

No work, no light, no fire, no food. This was more than human nature could long endure. Mrs. Mowbray said not a word. Quickly disappearing she presently returned with some hot coffee and a sandwich, inwardly thanking herself that she had kept the kitchen fire going so that the coffee was steaming hot. She put the coffee and sandwich in Tim's grimy hands and asked if he had been working. "Yes'm, I worked all day yesterday puttin' in coal for a lady up on Vincent street, an' when I got through the job she told me to come to-morrow as she didn't have the money. This mornin' I went ag'in, ma'am, but the lady was gone out, ma'am, so I didn't get no money. I think she ought to remember to leave it, don't you?" Tears were in the blue eyes of the boy as he asked the question, looking directly into Mrs. Mowbray's face.

"I can't go home with you to-night, Tim," said Mrs. Mowbray, evading the question, "but I will send a basket full of something to your mother," and she disappeared again.

"I guess," mused Mrs. Mowbray, as she filled the basket from her not too bountiful store, "that perhaps Mrs. Campbell was right after all. We need some kind of relief society to look after the poor. But why in the name of sense haven't they found out this case? That woman has been sick some time. 'Tain't my way o' doing things to have only societies looking after folks. But I don't know—"

"Here, Tim," returning to the room, "take this to your mother; and Tim, can't you carry a few coals and a lamp too? If it wasn't storming so I'd go with you. I guess—well, wait a minute, Tim."

Mrs. Mowbray again disappeared and when next she entered the room she was cloaked and bonneted and mittened and furred like an Icelander.

"Be you goin'?" and the boy's eyes were wide open in wonder; but there was a glad sparkle in their depths for all.

"Yes. Carry this hod of coals and this basket and I will carry the lamp. You go ahead."

On they trudged through the dark streets, the cruel sleet cutting their faces at every step. Mrs. Mowbray bent her head in patient endurance. Somehow she was thinking very little about the storm or herself.

It was a small, two-roomed house before which they halted in the darkness. Tim, knocking the snow from his feet, said, "Mother, it's me," and opened the door into still deeper darkness.

"Who's with you, Tim?" said a feeble voice, "and where did you go?"

For answer the boy struck a match, lit the lamp and thus revealed Mrs. Mowbray.

"For the love of mercy, ma'am," ejaculated the sick woman, "however did you reach here in such a storm? You're too good."

"Oh, no, I'm not," answered Mrs. Mowbray. "Tim told me you were sick and all the rest of it, and the storm sounds bad, but I've been in worse, with drifts and all that, you know," and she shook the snow from her garments.

A light, a fire, some food soon transformed the poor, dark hut into a home of comfort, and the hopeless sick woman into a cheerful human soul. Mrs. Mowbray stayed until this change occurred, then accompanied by Tim, returned home.

How bright and beautiful the room looked. Could it be that the walls had that soft tint when she left? And did the fire ever glow so brightly before? And had she ever been so full of joy? All this passed through her mind as she took off her sleet-covered garments and hung them by the still warm kitchen stove.

Mr. Mowbray coming in from his store noticed his wife's face so happy, so radiant, that he thought of the day long years before when she stood at his side—his sweet young bride. But he only remarked about the storm, hung up his coat, and prepared for bed. The next morning at breakfast, Mrs. Mowbray mentioned about the family in the back lane being very badly off, and suggested that he send some few comforts for the sick woman.

"That's Dan Sullivan's family, isn't it?" he asked. "Dan quit working at the mills when the union went on the strike. I haven't much sympathy for him. Sullivan himself is off looking for work."

"But his sick wife?" pleaded Mrs. Mowbray.

"He ought to have thought about her," returned Mr. Mowbray, as he buttoned his coat and went out. But his wife knew his heart.

It was still quite early when Mrs. Campbell again called on Mrs. Mowbray. "I am here once more, you see," she said laughing. "I am on my way to the meeting of the L. A. M. B. society, and felt I must stop and ask you to join. Ugh! But this is a dreadful morning. Snow and sleet everywhere. I would much rather be at home. But our president said we must meet. There were several cases demanding immediate attention."

"Yes; I know of one," said Mrs. Mowbray.

"Where?"

"It's Dan Sullivan's family down in the back lane."

"Oh, yes, I heard about them a few days ago. She's sick. There's a big boy there who ought to be at work. But that's in Mrs. Black's district, and Mrs. Black's baby is sick. But I guess she'll be able to attend to it in a few days. But that boy ought to work. I don't believe in helping such."

A knock at the door. Mrs. Mowbray opened it, and admitted Tim.

"Come in, Tim. This is the boy, Mrs. Campbell. Tim is willing to work when he can get it, I'm sure. He said he worked for a lady upon your street, but she forgot to pay him. Tim, have you seen the lady this morning?"

Tim, looking with wide open eyes at Mrs. Campbell, said: "That's her, ma'am."

If one could only put looks upon paper that tableau might be attempted. As it is, we can only ask the reader to draw upon his imagination. Mrs. Campbell was the first to recover from the shock.

"I told you to come yesterday," she said sternly to Tim, who answered respectfully:

"I was there, ma'am. You was not in."

"A person can be excused for forgetting, I suppose," said Mrs. Campbell, sharply. "I believe it was half a dollar," and opening her purse she tossed a silver piece to Tim, who said, "Yes'm," and caught the shining treasure in his hard, grimy hand.

Mrs. Campbell suddenly remembered her engagement, and Tim, after answering a few questions about his mother's condition, also took his departure.

"Well, I never!" was Mrs. Mowbray's comment when she found herself again alone. "That did beat everything I ever saw. Really, I felt sorry for her. But that is just some people's way. I will see to it that poor Mrs. Sullivan doesn't die before they get around to her case."

THE SALOON IN POLITICS.
III.

BY JAMES WHYTE.

Secretary of the United Kingdom Alliance.

If the irrepressible conflict between the temperance party and the liquor interests is to go on, what weapons must be employed? This is certain; it is everywhere felt that the reformers, without the aid of law, are greatly overmatched. Philanthropy is, at best, but intermittent in its action. It is apt, when the task to which it has set itself proves to be unexpectedly heavy and prolonged, to "faint and grow weary," and, not unfrequently, to "utterly fail." Self-interest is the most powerful and persistent of all the motives which determine the conduct of average men. And in the case of the liquor-seller there is much more than the ordinary operation of self-interest to be dealt with. Further, the traffic has the strongest possible interest in preventing all such legislation and all such administration of law as would really restrict the sale and consumption of intoxicants and prevent the fullest and freest development of the liquor business. Its prodigious wealth enables it, and its self-interest impels it, to use all sorts of means and methods, respectable and other, to make the press, the platform, literature, the pulpit, the medical profession and society at large, channels through which the drink superstitions may be maintained. All the power and influence, political and other, which the trade possesses, must be applied to the work of paralyzing every law that lessens its profits. Backed by law, and sustained by the respectability which legitimation gives, the trade is inevitably an enormous power for evil. Such a traffic manifestly must be dealt with; and a government that leaves it alone has clearly abdicated some of its most important functions.

Now, of course, in determining what to do with such a power for evil the state of public opinion on the question must be taken into account. Public opinion is the matter with which, in these days, legislators work, and the question for us is, what is the amount and character of public opinion which exists on this subject?

Here are a few outstanding and significant facts. A great physician, lately passed away, designated alcohol "the enemy of the race." Enlightened medical opinion during the last quarter of a century has been increasingly hostile to the use of alcoholic liquors as a beverage. The Bishop of Chester, who, to his honor be it said, has taken up the drink difficulty with great earnestness, and is doing what one man can to find a solution of it, has declared "that experience has abundantly shown that private interest cannot bear the weight of the vast national responsibility involved" in the common sale of intoxicating liquor. This opinion is rapidly making way both in Europe and America. It is the foundation of the famous Gothenburg licensing system. In this country it is entertained by large and rapidly increasing numbers of people who desire to deliver the nation from the ravages of strong drink, but are not yet prepared for total prohibition. In the United States it forms the basis of an effort which is being made to supplement the power of prohibition by local option, by the power to adopt a modification of the Gothenburg system. In Norway, too, the doctrine has been accepted and extensively acted upon, but there it is felt that not only ought no private person to derive profit from the sale of spirits, but that no community ought to do so. Besides, there is a strong and rapidly-growing conviction amongst the leading peoples of the world that the common sale of alcohol by any man or woman, or any combination of men and women, ought not to be permitted at all. In this country this belief has manifestly made enormous progress during the last quarter of a century. Then, in certain states in America, no fewer than 1,743,349 citizens voted in favor of so amending the constitution of their respective states as to provide for the prohibition of the manufacture, importation and sale of intoxicating liquors in these states, while but 2,057,385 voted against the proposed amendment.

Now, in determining the meaning of this vote, account ought to be taken of the influences at work for the protection of the liquor trade in the United States—of the power which, by means of falsehood, bribery, boycotting and corruption in every form, the traffic exerts upon the foreign and residuum vote; as well as of the undoubted fact that, of the large number of intelligent and respectable citizens who voted against prohibition of this stringent character, a great majority really cast their ballot for high-license plus local option, and most of the rest of them for high-license alone. Further, in this connection, it is well to remember that high-license is at present being "run" by the liquor party in the United States as a decoy for half-informed temperance voters, with the object of "heading off" prohibition. The choice there to-day, as the liquor men well know, is between high-license, local option and state prohibition. They support high-license. The argument used for the misleading of good, pious people generally is not that prohibition is wrong in itself, that it constitutes an infringement of liberty, or that to rob a poor man of his beer is a wickedness; but only that prohibition does not prohibit.

The wealthy liquor "bosses," so-called, who are also, in a large proportion of cases, the political "bosses," know how to get the newspapers to repeat these specious arguments and allegations from day to day. They know, too, how to get "sensible and moderate-minded" clergymen and other good people of that sort to respect them also. My point is that there is an enormous amount of opinion in the United States which favors stringent liquor legislation, in addition to that which is represented in the voting for entire prohibition.

But the case of Canada is more significant still. It is not many months since the liquor party in this country thought that all they required to do in order to overwhelm the Prohibitionists with shame and confusion of face was to name "Ontario." "What about Ontario? Why did it go back to license, pray?" were the questions which they gleefully put, and for which they did not think it necessary to wait for an answer. The truth, as is now clearly proved, was that the people of Ontario were not sick of prohibition, but of the want of it; and that what they had determined to get quit of was not prohibition, but legislative juggling and administrative trickery.

What we have for the present to do with is the great fact that in Ontario and in several other of the provinces of Canada, plebiscites, taken by the government, have resulted in a most emphatic and unmistakable popular demonstration in favor of prohibition. In Ontario the vote for prohibition stood at the proportion of 19 to 11 against. In Nova Scotia, in the proportion of 4 in favor to 1 against. In Manitoba there was a majority for prohibition of 12,500; and in Prince Edward Island there was a majority of 7,000; 130,000 of a majority for prohibition in the four provinces. The federal government of the Dominion holds office by virtue of having received a majority of only 17,000 votes; yet there are people, mainly among the "educated classes," who hold that Prohibitionists are an altogether insignificant minority everywhere.

Here is a fact "significant of much." In England in 1886 a great issue was submitted to the nation. The Unionists "swept the country" at the general election, and through having done so they confidently and in good faith proclaimed that public opinion had pronounced decisively, indeed overwhelmingly, against home rule. Their majority in the United Kingdom of votes actually polled was 76,300, while the majority for prohibition in the four Canadian provinces named was, as has been said, 130,000. But that is far from being all. The population of the Dominion is only equal to about one-eighth of the population of the United Kingdom. Yet able editors, who, in numberless leading articles, and eminent politicians who on many platforms have insisted upon the magnitude of the majority against home rule as a great and determining declaration of public opinion on that measure, make exceedingly light of such an overwhelming testimony as to the extent of popular feeling in Canada in favor of prohibition.

The recent voting on prohibition in New Zealand teaches precisely the same lesson. And here let there be no mistake. I do not adduce these facts as evidence that the communities referred to are at present prepared to enact and satisfactorily administer laws prohibiting the existence of the liquor traffic. I wish to show that already an enormous mass of public opinion in favor of prohibition is to be found amongst the English-speaking peoples throughout the world; and, further, that there exists amongst these populations an even greater amount of conviction that severe restrictions short of total prohibition of the traffic are urgently needed.

Lord Salisbury speaks of the desire for temperance legislation as a "temporary craze." The craze, if it is a craze, is not an ephemeral one. It has manifestly come to stay. It has taken hold especially of those populations which are in the very van of modern civilization. It has kept hold of them. Jonah's gourd grew in a night and perished in a night. Temporary crazes are similarly of sudden growth and short continuance.

Instead of being a "temporary craze," the movement seems to be an essential accompaniment of the evolution of a healthy and stable industrial society. There is, therefore, no rational ground for the expectation that the conflict between the forces of the temperance party and those of the liquor traffic will in any degree slacken on the side of the temperance reformers.

AMERICANISM IN FINANCE.

III.

BY LUCINDA B. CHANDLER.

In disturbing the function of commodity money, productive industry is imperiled in two ways—by the disturbance of the circulating medium, and by the disturbance of a productive industry. When the commodity of silver was made non-marketable for government use as coin, silver mining stopped and thousands of laborers were suddenly deprived of means of subsistence. The American Congress has the distinction of having committed for this country the hugest economic blunder of this century.

Ninety per cent of the business of the country is transacted by other means of exchange than money. There is not gold and silver enough produced yearly to keep the supply equal to the increasing demands of enterprise.

In round numbers the amount of gold and silver coin in the world is $8,000,000,000, and not more than $2,000,000,000 of that in circulation. The present foreign commerce of this country is $1,100,000,000 per annum, and the interior commerce is $18,000,000,000. Gold in United States treasury does not exceed $100,000,000; surplus of silver, $400,000,000, and nearly all that remains there to redeem silver certificates.

The present wealth of the country is placed in round numbers at $72,000,000,000. Fully eighty per cent of this sum pays interest. The average of interest paying capital is about $50,000,000,000. The average yearly interest is $3,000,000,000—a sum which more than absorbs the entire yearly increase of wealth in the United States. The borrowed capital of the country claims more in remuneration than the country can produce!

The total cost of government, United States, state, county and municipal, including interest on debts, but not including the payment of the principal of the public debt, is reckoned at the lowest estimate to be $897,000,000. Adding to this the excess of interest on private obligations over the increase of wealth, we have $16,970,000,000 as the sum which the assets of the citizens of these United States fall behind their indebtedness every ten years.

The outcome of our present financial corporation monopoly system is, as ascertained by Mr. Holmes of special census committee on mortgage statistics, that 9 per cent of the families of this country own 71 per cent of the wealth, and that 91 per cent of the families own no more than about 29 per cent of the wealth; 4,047 families possess nearly as much wealth as 11,593,887 families.

It needs neither statistics nor argument to prove that this excess of wealth in the possession of 4,047 families is not the accumulation of an excess of productive industry by the members of these families. Still less is it necessary to prove that the lack of possessions of the 11,593,887 families is because of a lack of productive industry on their part.

The question for American civilization to settle as a first step toward the establishment and perpetuation of a people's government, and a civilization based on the principles of Americanism, is, whether an immense system of credit and a bonded indebtedness shall form the basis of our finance, putting the advantage of the credit and wealth of the United States in the hands of a class—a trade, or, whether the wealth and credit of the United States—not only its gold and silver but its immense resources and the capacity of production in the people—shall maintain a cheap, convenient people's money and a cash system.

"Interest is taken on the assumption that wealth has within it the natural inherent property of increase." This is not true,—wealth comes to naught by natural processes except labor is constantly keeping in repair, building increasing. Let labor drop its hands a year and humanity would be starving. Americanism in finance would give the producer a stable, elastic, sufficient medium of exchange to promote enterprise, give freedom from debt, abolish the usurer, and make equal opportunity to subsist by labor possible in all the land to all the inhabitants thereof.

Borrowing on interest and paying land rents are the cause of all our financial difficulties.

BISHOP VINCENT VERSUS EQUAL SUFFRAGE.

IV.

BY ALICE STONE BLACKWELL.

Dr. Buckley, in a foot-note to his article, interpolates an elaborate plea by Bishop Vincent against equal suffrage. Bishop Vincent's well-known conservatism on the woman question, and his opposition to equal rights for women, not only in the state but elsewhere, go far to neutralize the value of his opinion on this subject; but it is proper to weigh his arguments for whatever they may be worth. He says:

"The majority of our best women, especially our most intelligent, domestic and godly mothers, neither ask for it nor desire it." The same has been true of every advance step thus far taken in the movement to secure enlarged opportunities for women. When a storekeeper in Saco, Me., first employed a saleswoman, the men of the town boycotted his store, and the women earnestly represented to him the sin of which he was guilty in placing a young woman in a position of such publicity. When Elizabeth Blackwell began to study medicine, the ladies at her boarding house refused to speak to her, and women passing her in the street used to testify their disapprobation by manner and even by remarks. When the effort was first made to secure to married women the control of their own property, women asked with scorn, "Do you think I would give myself where I would not give my property?" A prominent western educator met a band of refined and excellent women, foreign missionaries on their way to the mission field, soon after the opening of Vassar College. They spoke of it with much disapprobation. The leader said emphatically: "The mere fact that it is called a 'woman's college' is enough to condemn it. Of one thing I am certain—that no refined, Christian mother will ever send her daughter to Vassar College." When the Oxford examinations in England were thrown open to women, the dean of Chichester preached a sermon against it, in which he said: "By the sex at large, certainly, the new curriculum is not asked for. I have ascertained, by extended inquiry among gentlewomen, that the majority of them either entirely distrust, or else look with downright disfavor upon so wild an innovation and interference with the best traditions of their sex." In eastern countries, where women are kept shut up in zenanas and are forbidden to walk the streets unveiled, the women themselves are among the strongest upholders of these traditional restrictions, which they have been taught to think add to their dignity. The Chinese lady is as proud of her small feet as any American "remonstrant" is of her political disabilities. Pundita Ramabai says that in India the idea of education for girls is so unpopular with the mass of Hindu women that when an intelligent Hindu proposes to educate his little daughter, it is not uncommon for the women of his family to threaten to drown themselves.

It is a simple historical fact that each improvement in the laws relating to women has been gained, not by a demand from the majority of women, but by the arguments, entreaties and "continual coming" of a persistent few. The progressive few have always had to contend not only with the disapproval of most men, but with the indifference of most women, and the opposition of some.

Bishop Vincent says that "the instinct of motherhood" is against equal suffrage. It is a grave fact that the Hindoo women have had it drilled into them for ages that for a woman to be educated would be to be unsexed, to forfeit the love of her husband, to lose her womanly influence, etc. Naturally, most of them believe it. American women have had it preached to them for generations by press, pulpit and forum that the same results would follow if they voted; and, naturally, many of them believe what they have been taught. It is no more "womanly instinct" in one case than in the other. If it were "the instinct of motherhood," we should not find it conspicuously lacking in those mothers who possess, in addition to tenderness and purity, breadth of mind and exceptional intelligence — mothers like Lucretia Mott, Lucy Stone and Mrs. Zerelda G. Wallace, from whom Gen. Lew Wallace says that he drew the portrait of the mother in "Ben Hur."

There is even less warrant for Bishop Vincent's assertion that "the basal conviction of our best manhood is against it." It would not be easy to find better specimens of American manhood than Bishop Simpson, Bishop Bowman, Bishop Hurst, Bishop Gilbert Haven, George William Curtis, Wendell Phillips, Whittier, Longfellow, Emerson, Charles Sumner, Abraham Lincoln. In any state legislature, when a vote is taken on woman suffrage, it is noteworthy how all the "lewd fellows of the baser sort" form a solid phalanx in the negative, together with a number of well-meaning but fossilized conservatives, while the affirmative vote is made up of men of a distinctly higher class, morally and intellectually. "The basal conviction" of our worst manhood is everywhere against equal suffrage. The representatives of the liquor interest, in particular, are always loud in their fears that it will injure the happiness of the home.

In 1891 Florence Huntly collected the opinions of fifty members of Congress on this question, for a symposium in a New York paper. Col. W. P. C. Breckinridge declared himself unalterably opposed to woman suffrage, because "it would affect the present relations between husband and wife."

Many years ago, before imprisonment for debt was abolished in England, the rumor of a projected French invasion threw the country into commotion. The excitement extended to all classes. An imprisoned debtor was discussing the news through the bars of his window with a street beggar and a soldier, who was considerably more than half intoxicated. "If the French effect a landing on British soil what will become of our liberties?" cried the imprisoned debtor. "Yes, and of our property?" echoed the tattered beggar. "Oh, —— our liberty and our property!" vociferated the drunken soldier, "what will become of our religion?" Whenever the equal suffrage question comes up it is hard to tell which is the more edifying, the anxiety of the liquor interest for the happiness of the home or the tender solicitude of men of the Breckinridge stripe for the sanctity of the marriage relation. If there is any one position a good man can take in which he may be sure of the unanimous and enthusiastic support of all rascaldom, it is in opposing woman suffrage.

Bishop Vincent says: "The movement is at root a protest against the representative relations and functions by virtue of which each sex depends upon and is exalted by the other." On the contrary, it is an endeavor to bring about the fuller recognition of that fundamental principle and to carry it to its logical conclusion. Bishop Vincent says equal rights "must make man less a man, and woman less a woman." But we do not find that men are less manly or women less womanly where women have been voting for years.

Bishop Vincent protests against the idea that women need the ballot as a protection and says, "When one sex is compelled thus to protect itself against the other, the foundations of society are already crumbling." Goldwin Smith once wrote an article denouncing the notion that men and women could have any separate interests, yet he declared in the same article that if women voted they would make laws "in their own interest and against that of men." Women love their husbands and sons fully as much as men love their wives and daughters; yet would Bishop Vincent be willing to have all the laws made for him by a legislature consisting of women alone, and responsible for its acts to a constituency composed of women alone? He would certainly feel that he and other men needed votes to protect them, not against any intentional unkindness or tyranny on the part of women, but against the one-sidedness which must inevitably result when one sex undertakes to legislate for both. He would say, and truly, that it is impossible for a woman fully to put herself in a man's place and look at things from his point of view. It is equally impossible for a man fully to put himself in a woman's place and look at things from her standpoint.

SOME OF OUR WOMEN.

IV.

One Little Woman from Japan.

BY FRANCES E. WILLARD.

Mrs. Sakurai, our charming Japanese sister, deserves well of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. She is the daughter of an ex-noble of Japan, and was well educated in one of the Presbyterian schools of that country. She married an officer, a native Japanese, and through her influence he became converted and felt called to preach. Leaving his excellent position in the navy, he entered the ministry and became a preacher of the despised "foreign religion." After passing through numberless trials and temptations, he is now the pastor in the leading Presbyterian church in Tokio. Mrs. Sakurai felt a strong impulse to establish a school in which the young women of Japan could obtain an English education based upon the principles of Christianity, and her work was so successful that it is not too much to say that she completely revolutionized the system of education for women in her native country.

In 1886 Mrs. Sakurai was called to the principalship of the Presbyterian Girls' School at Osaka which, through her efforts, has become widely known and patronized. This Christian lady was selected as a delegate from the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Japan to the World's W. C. T. U. Convention in Chicago at the time of the World's Fair. She was for some time a guest at "Rest Cottage" in Evanston, and afterwards studied in Mr. Moody's Bible Institute at Chicago. It is her desire to establish an undenominational Woman's Bible Institute in Japan, which will be under the care of a board of trustees, consisting of men and women, and will be one of the affiliated interests of the World's W. C. T. U. The writer is treasurer of the fund for America and Europe, and desires that all donations and pledges may be sent to the office secretary of the World's W. C. T. U., Miss Alice E. Briggs, The Temple, Chicago.

If the institution that Mrs. Sakurai has projected can be well founded, it is believed that at the end of five years it will be supported by native Christians. If there are two hundred persons or societies that will contribute ten dollars every year for five years, the work could be accomplished. Any smaller amounts will be gladly received.

This is a very critical time for Christianity in Japan. The Buddhist priests are striving to recover their cause. It should be remembered that the whole population of Japan is forty millions, of whom twenty-five millions are Buddhists and only thirty-seven thousand are Christians.

Mrs. Sakurai touchingly says: "We Christians who have been converted through the teachings of missionaries whom you have sent to us, are making a desperate effort for the Christian cause. For this we need more help from you until we can destroy the strong hold which the Buddhists have on the people."

If any one wishes to write directly to Mrs. Sakurai, she can be addressed at Plainville, Conn., care of Mrs. E. S. Moody. I entertain great confidence in the plans and purposes of this accomplished Christian lady, and wish hereby to give to them and to her my hearty indorsement, asking the sympathetic and practical coöperation of all philanthropic persons.

NOTES OF THE NOON MEETING IN WILLARD HALL.

BY JANE EGGLESTON ZIMMERMAN.

The cool days of September bring increased numbers to the meetings which are pervaded with deep interest. Requests for prayer from men repentant and seeking a better life are numerous. One gentleman rose a few days ago, saying that he had come in for the first time, because his mother, a devoted white-ribboner in an Eastern state, had requested him to visit the Willard Hall noon meeting. He said he had been greatly blessed by what he had heard, and, as a newspaper man, familiar with Chicago for thirteen years, he believed we were one of the greatest forces for good in this wicked city, which he said was growing more flagrantly wicked every day.

Another man, deeply moved, waited to see me after the meeting, saying he saw the invitation at the door, and concluded he would come in and seek the Lord again, from whom he had wandered away. Prayer was offered for him, after the meeting, and he went away with a new hope in his heart.

A young man, son of a saloon-keeper, himself a bartender, came to us from the hospital, at the instance of his mother, a German Catholic, who was desirous of having him get into some other business than bar-keeping. He is very much in earnest, has made a profession of religion, and is seeking other employment.

A mother writes: "Dear sisters:—I want you to take to the Temple the name of E. R. I am praying for him all alone. There doesn't seem any one else to believe in him but I cannot give him up. As sure as there is a God He will hear and answer my prayer."

A young man about whom I have written in these notes before, having been out of employment for months, at last yielded to the ever-ready offer made by a liquor firm for whom he had traveled before, and accepted a position at one hundred and fifty dollars a month as a traveling salesman. He came to me not long ago, quite drunk, having his ticket bought for New York; but although he knew well that I would not approve of his conduct or intentions, he felt unwilling to leave without bidding me good-bye, and asking me to pray for him. Thus does the perishing soul grope after better things even while being drawn down to destruction. I kept him a long time, persuading, praying with him, and entreating him to stay over if only for twenty-four hours. He finally broke away and left me. In a few days I received a letter from which the following extracts are taken:

"DEAR MOTHER ZIMMERMAN:—God passed sentence on me last night in this town where I have sinned the most. Lost! Lost! Lost! forever! . . . I am damned in hell; I am a lost soul, but God says I shall be allowed to live to warn others. Oh, how awful this morning finds me! . . . God allowed me to see you and repeat your last prayer with me."

This young man is a strange mixture of good and evil, of lovable and despicable qualities. He has a fine education, speaking five or six languages. He has many noble traits and a great longing for a religious life. I feel sure he will yet be saved for some good work at the Lord's hand.

The general financial depression is being keenly felt in our temperance work. Money to carry on our long established lines of work is difficult to obtain. We are at present walking by faith more than by sight. This Willard Hall meeting, being really a National and World's work in which many all over the country are interested, might well be supported by contributions from friends outside of Chicago who are interested in its maintenance. Nowhere could money be put to a better use. The meetings are fervent, deeply spiritual, full of the Holy Spirit, and despairing souls are turning in for help and guidance every day.

Mrs. E. C. Wright, police matron of Knoxville, Tenn., whose son acts as chorister in Willard Hall, and who was so wonderfully converted there, offers to be one of twenty-five to give five dollars a month toward the maintenance of this meeting.

We present the case to our friends asking them to aid in clinching this offer. The money might be solicited from persons not generally contributing to mission work by making known the cause and its results in different communities. Such advertising of this meeting would be a blessing in many instances to young men coming from these localities to Chicago.

Friends sending contributions would receive a number of our cards of invitation, which might be handed to young men leaving home, as a reminder of this meeting should they come to Chicago. Our opportunities for good would thus be multiplied many times.

Dear friends, this is a life-saving station on a dangerous coast, whose life lines are thrown out day by day after souls whom the floods of iniquity would swallow up.

Inquiries concerning this new plan of support may be addressed to the superintendent of the Willard Hall noon meeting. Contributions for this cause should be sent to Mrs. R. L. Greenlee, treasurer, Room 1116, The Temple, Chicago.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

A Word for Australasia.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—It has always seemed to me a most cheering indication of providential guidance that our official organ has had so few statements and counter statements involving explanations of those errors into which it is so easy to fall when the correspondence of a paper extends over the round world. But some "offences must come," and I feel upon me the "woe" of one who has been the procuring cause, though without any ill intention of an injustice to our Australasian sisters, by the publication of a letter which, while it was not indicated as private, was really not intended to be seen except by me. I ought to add that I did not intend give my sanction to the exploitation of anything in the line of mere gossip about the local affairs of the society. The fact is we receive so many letters that sometimes in the haste of catching the mail, we—at least, I—am apt to send them off too hurriedly, and I hereby request that all who write me will put "Personal" on their letters if they are not willing to have the items of news, etc., come before the larger family circle of the W. C. T. U.

A resolution was adopted by the executive committee of the W. C. T. U. of Australasia in relation to the statements in our paper of February 1, under the heading, "Adult Suffrage in South Australia." The substance of this resolution was given in our issue of May 10. I wish to call special attention to the fact that this explanation comes from the executive committee and not from individuals.

The Australasian triennial convention was a great occasion. Probably since the Women's Crusade in Ohio no gathering of larger significance has been held. Many of the delegates traveled two thousand miles to be present, through a sparse population, at great expense and not by any rapid means of conveyance. This great society, founded by our second round-the-world missionary, Miss Jessie Ackermann, arranged a procession in which all the temperance societies of the nation were represented; Miss Ackermann and her associates riding in a carriage and four, and receiving every mark of confidence and affection. Miss Ackermann was made honorary president of the National society, and Mrs. E. W. Nicholls, of Prospect, Adelaide, South Australia, was chosen as president. Mrs. Edgar B. Harris, Brisbane, Queensland, was appointed secretary, and Mrs. Webb, of Bathurst, New South Wales, treasurer. The new president, Mrs. Nicholls, is a native of Australia, a woman of the highest character, remarkable energy and good sense, and a devoted patriot as well as Christian. Letters recently received assure me that the selections of secretary and treasurer are most satisfactory to the leaders of the movement. They also state that Mrs.

Bowes is no longer president in New South Wales, but has been succeeded by Miss Nolan, and that Mrs. Soltan has left Tasmania, and a devoted successor to her has been raised up in Mrs. Blair. All the letters that have been received expressed the warmest devotion to Miss Ackermann, and as that heroic pioneer is soon to return to us, I wish to quote some paragraphs:
